Take, for instance, the United States Steel Corporation, with total assets at the beginning of 1935 of $2,084,000,000 and $126,000,000 of cash and marketable securities. This great corporation has 239,000 stockholders, no one of whom owns more than 2 percent of the common stock or more than 1 percent of the preferred stock. Would it not be more beneficial to this army of stockholders and the country at large if the earnings of that corporation were annually distributed up to a reasonable amount? Likewise with the American Telephone & Telegraph Corporation, with its quarter of a million of stockholders, and other huge corporations in the automobile industry, for instance. To say that the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. has in recent years maintained its $9 dividend when its annual earnings were less is no answer to distributions in previous years.

It is one of the scandals of our history that in those "whoopie" stock-market days of 1928 and 1929 such large corporations with undistributed surpluses of hundreds of millions in some cases—more than any bank in the world held—used that money to foment the orgy of speculation in Wall Street and contributed in no small measure to the "crash" of 1929, from which we have not yet wholly emerged.

When the call-money rate was 9 percent, yes; as high as 15 percent, these corporations poured their hundreds of millions of surplus, which should have been distributed to their stockholders, into Wall Street. They reaped their profit, but at what a cost to the Nation and the individual investor. If they had been influenced to distribute a fair share of their earnings by such a tax as that proposed, they would not have been in a position to join in that revel.

The opponents of the proposal to tax the surplus earnings of corporations argue at first glance that if such a tax were in effect before 1929 many corporations could not have survived the depression, that it was only because of their accumulated surpluses that they did survive, and that to a large extent these surpluses have been depleted during these years of the depression. This is not a fact. The oft-cited example of the Ford Motor Co., a typically closely owned corporation—in fact, wholly owned by Mr. Henry Ford and his son, Mr. Edsel Ford—is no criterion. It is well known that the use of an accumulated surplus by that huge corporation was made necessary by reason of the change of its model and competition for the first time in the low-priced car field. That company, and no other large company, depleted its surplus to employ men in production when there was not demand for its product. That argument against the proposed bill is the most humorous advanced. Inventories have been low during all the depression. The opposite of overproduction has existed. Even today the production of the Ford and other automobile companies does not meet the demand. No man is ever employed by such corporations one day after the demand for the product does not equal his productive capacity. Enough of that specious argument.

The enormous success of the automobile industry in the last 2 years is not due to the corporations keeping men at work when they were not needed. It is due practically entirely to the increase of three billions of income to the farmers due to the policies of this administration, the $1,000,000,000 paid to the farmers directly by our Government and the reciprocal-trade agreements entered into with other countries, which have increased our export trade, especially in automobiles.

It is expected that the proposed tax on surplus income of corporations will increase wages. It is hoped that this will be one of the beneficial results of the measure. One can well imagine that a corporation, rather than paying a tax of 33½ percent, or higher, on its undistributed earnings, or rather than distribute these earnings to its stockholders, might decide to increase wages—give bonuses to employees—to avoid taxation. We sincerely hope this will result.

Another argument against the proposal is that it will deter plant expansion and increased production. Any danger as to this can readily be taken care of in the bill as finally adopted. Corporations build additional plants for profit, not to give men work or to use up their surplus.

Another argument is that if you pass such a law you deprive the corporations of a "cushion" to protect them against the shocks of depression and the "rainy day."

Of course, the critics of the plan lose sight of the fact that there is no proposal to take all the surplus income of any corporation. When corporations need new money for plant extension or working capital, their first source after their surplus is their stockholders who are vitally interested in the company. If a fair share of the earnings of the corporation have been distributed to its stockholders, it will be for their interest to respond to any unprecedented need for additional capital—and after that recourse is exhausted, there are the banks, the underwriting houses and the investing public.

The most generally discussed argument against such a form of tax is, that in any event the corporation should be permitted to retain a reasonable "reserve" of its surplus income, or that the tax should be graduated on percentage of its surplus. This contention is put forth in editorials in that great newspaper, the New York Times, which also says: "This is not to say that any tax on undistributed corporation profits is itself necessarily unsound."

There has never been any suggestion by anyone advocating the measure that the Government take, in the form of taxes, or otherwise, all the surplus income of any corporation and leave it with no surplus for contingencies, depressions, or "rainy days." The individual pays as high as 75 percent of his income. That leaves him a surplus of 25 percent, less his needs.

If a corporation persists in refusing to aid the Government in procuring indispensable revenues, by withholding its earnings from its stockholders, and the Government then steps in and takes that idle money on the basis of a tax of one-third or one-half, the balance of two-thirds or one-half still remains as a surplus for that proverbial "rainy day." What is wrong with that?

I said "idle money"—of course it's "idle money." Their unreasonably accumulated surpluses are just that—outside of speculations in the "call money market" which contributed to over-expansion of credit. In fact there are some who believe that the most potent force back of this expansion which brought such disaster was the accumulation of these enormous corporation surpluses. They have rarely been used for any useful purpose. The cash lies in banks carrying no interest. The rest is usually invested in Government securities—short-term paper as a rule—carrying a very low rate of interest. As to the latter it will be said that such investments help to finance the Government. The answer to that is that if the Government received in taxes its fair share of income from these corporations, it would ordinarily not have to borrow.

As compared to the stockholder or the individual taxpayer, the corporations have never shouldered their fair share of the burden of the cost of government.

It is estimated that about 250,000 corporations will have a net taxable income in the year 1936 of $8,300,000,000. Of this, it is estimated, only about $3,500,000,000 will be distributed to stockholders, leaving nearly $5,000,000,000 retained in the "war chests" of the corporations. Even a 20 percent tax on this undistributed surplus would yield nearly a billion dollars and still leave four billions, or 50 percent, of all earnings for a "cushion" or that "rainy day."

I said "war chest", and I said it advisedly. The size of a surplus is chiefly important in its relation to the size of other "war chests" of competitors in the same industry. These "war chests" are used in a price war or a depression to crush the little fellow without the huge surplus at his command. Take the automobile-tire industry for instance. At one time there were over 600 tire manufacturers. Today there are 30. The huge surpluses of the three leaders have been an important factor in eliminating the 570 little fellows.

It is the opinion of many businessmen that instead of huge surpluses being necessary to bridge corporations across a depression, these surpluses enable the big fellows in the industry, especially during a depression, to gobble up the small competitors with consequent damage to labor and the consumer.

Nobody knows this better than Wall Street, which now has the "jitters", over the President's tax program.

That's not surprising. Before the details of the tax bill were known in the market, they went off half cocked with their usual timidity and superstition.

If a black cat was seen to run across Wall Street between the hours of 10 in the morning and 3 in the afternoon, the market would break.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may be privileged to sit during the sessions of the House all of this week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

MANAGERS ON THE PART OF THE HOUSE IN THE RITTER CASE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers on the part of the House in the Ritter matter may be excused from attendance at the sessions of the House until disposition of that case.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

SHIP CONSTRUCTION ON THE PACIFIC COAST IN RELATION TO NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement made by me before the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, and also certain evidence with reference to the rehabilitation of ship construction on the Pacific coast in the interest of national defense.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I did not hear the request.

Mr. WELCH. My request refers to a statement made by me before the Committee on Naval Affairs in which I produced certain evidence as to the necessity for ship construction on the Pacific coast in the interest of national defense.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How long is the evidence that the gentleman desires to insert in the RECORD?

Mr. WELCH. It is perhaps longer than the average statement put in the RECORD; but, if the gentleman will recall, during the years that I have been here I have not filled up the RECORD with a lot of immaterial statements. By reason of its importance, not only to the Pacific coast, but to the Nation, I feel that the Members of Congress should be given the privilege of reading it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman is aware of the fact there are certain restrictions with reference to the extensions which may be put in the RECORD. I have no disposition to object to the request of the gentleman, of course, as far as his personal request is concerned, but, as I have indicated, the gentleman has not indicated the length of the evidence and how many pages it will cover.

Mr. WELCH. It is not nearly as lengthy as the evidence that was adduced in Friday's RECORD with reference to the hearings before the Subcommittee on Appropriations when the District of Columbia appropriation bill was under consideration.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Was this evidence taken down by a reporter and published as a part of the hearings on the matter to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. WELCH. It will appear eventually when the committee hearings are printed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I am very much afraid it is pretty bad practice to begin incorporating in the RECORD extensive hearings had before committees.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman it is not unprecedented.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to this request, but I think it is fair to give notice that hereafter we should regard with considerable caution requests to extend in the RECORD evidence taken before House committees. I shall not object in this instance because the gentleman has been very modest in his requests heretofore.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement made by me, Member of Congress from the State of California, before Committee on Naval Affairs, February 28, 1936:

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to make a brief statement? After that I shall be glad to answer any questions which may be asked to the best of my ability.

The CHAIRMAN. I will suggest that we permit Mr. WELCH to make his complete statement without interruption, and then we will examine him. He has made considerable of a study of this problem.

Mr. WELCH. The bill, H. R. 10978, now before your honorable committee for consideration, provides for the construction of 54 auxiliary naval vessels for the Nation's security at a cost of $175,000,000. The amendment under consideration at this time authorized a differential of 6 percent in favor of ship construction on the Pacific coast.

May I state, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, that the President of the United States subscribes to this policy. The Department of Commerce has also subscribed to the policy of a differential of 6 percent for ship construction on the Pacific coast as is contained in H. R. 8555, a bill entitled "An act to develop a strong American merchant marine, to promote the commerce of the United States, and to aid national defense." I ask that the record show at this point the section and subdivision pertaining to a 6-percent differential for ship construction on the Pacific coast (p. 96, H. R. 8555). This bill, as you know, passed the House last year.

Section 502 (f), referred to, is as follows:

"In case a construction subsidy is applied for under this part by an applicant who has as his principal place of business a place on the Pacific coast of the United States (but not including one who, having been in business on or before Aug. 1, 1935, has changed his principal place of business to a place on the Pacific coast of the United States after such date), to aid in the construction or reconditioning of a vessel to be operated in foreign, coastwise, or intercoastal trade in a service, route, or line from ports on the Pacific coast of the United States, and the amount of the bid of the shipbuilder on the Pacific coast who is the lowest responsible bidder on such coast for such construction or reconditioning does not exceed the amount of the bid of the shipbuilder on the Atlantic coast of the United States who is the lowest responsible bidder therefor by more than 6 percent of the amount of the bid of such Atlantic coast shipbuilder, the Authority shall approve such Pacific coast bid, and in such case no payment shall be made to aid in such construction or reconditioning unless the applicant accepts the bid of such Pacific coast shipbuilder and agrees to designate and continue as the home port of the vessel to be constructed or reconditioned a port on the Pacific coast."

What is known as the Copeland bill, S. 3500, contains the identical provision on page 29. Senator COPELAND is the chairman of the Committee on Commerce in the Senate. May I add that only yesterday there were introduced in the Senate what are known as the Guffey and Gibson bills, said to be compromise measures meeting with the approval of the administration. I do not know that to be a fact, but this morning's papers so indicated. Both of those bills contain the same provision. For the benefit of the committee I will read the section, which is practically the same as that in the bill which passed the House and which is in the Copeland bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that Senator GUFFEY, of Pennsylvania?

Mr. WELCH. Yes; Senator GUFFEY, of Pennsylvania.

Section 24, subdivision (d), page 25, of the bill reads as follows:

"If the applicant for the building and purchase of a vessel with a construction subsidy has his principal place of business on the Pacific coast of the United States, and the amount of the bid of the shipbuilder on the Pacific coast who is the lowest responsible bidder on such coast for such construction does not exceed the amount of the bid of the shipbuilder on the Atlantic coast of the United States who is the lowest responsible bidder therefor by more than 6 percent of the amount of the bid of such Atlantic coast shipbuilder, the commission may approve such Pacific coast bid, and in such case the commission shall not enter into contracts for the construction and sale of the vessel unless the applicant accepts the bid of such Pacific coast shipbuilder and agrees to designate and continue as the home port of the vessel to be constructed a port on the Pacific coast."

So you will see that the principle of a 6-percent differential and policy has been continued in the interest of the construction of merchant vessels and for the upbuilding and construction of our merchant marine.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, there are three definite links in our chain of national naval defense. First, our Navy; second, our merchant marine; and, third, our shipbuilding facilities. All three are interdependent upon each other for our national security. The last link, however, with reference to shipbuilding facilities, is really a missing link as it applies to shipbuilding on the Pacific coast.

There has been no shipbuilding to speak of on the Pacific coast since the war. Our shipyards have gone to wrack and ruin. Were it not for the limited shipbuilding in the two Pacific coast navy yards, shipbuilding on the West coast would have become a lost art.

There are seven navy yards and seven private shipyards building and repairing naval vessels on the Atlantic coast. The seven navy yards are Brooklyn, Norfolk, Philadelphia, Washington, Boston, Portsmouth, N. H., and Charleston. The private shipyards are Bethlehem Steel; New York Shipyard Co.; Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co.; Bath Iron Works, Bath, Maine; Federal Shipyard, Kearney, N. J.; and United Dry Docks & Building Co.; and Staten Island Shipbuilding Co.

Admiral Land has referred to shipbuilding facilities on the Pacific coast and a survey made by him during a recent visit there. Admiral Land knows that our naval fleet is on the Pacific and has been there for several years. And the admiral knows why it is there. But we are not going to raise that question. There are nearly 2,000 miles of American seacoast between the Canadian line and the Mexican line. May I call to the attention of the committee and to the admiral that in case our Navy became engaged in a major conflict on the Pacific, that there are not four shipyards or drydocks between the Mexican line and the Canadian line where a crippled naval ship or a merchant ship could be brought for major repairs. If they exist, I challenge Admiral Land to tell your committee where they are located. Gentlemen of the committee, that is not national defense.

Mr. VINSON, the distinguished chairman of your committee, fathered a bill to bring our Navy up to treaty strength. That bill authorized the expenditure of approximately one-half billion dollars, and it passed at the last session. The bill under consideration, as I said before, authorizes $175,000,000 for auxiliary naval construction, and the millions that will be provided under the ship-subsidy bill to develop a strong American merchant marine in the interest of national defense will add more millions to this enormous amount.

Under the present order of things every dollar of this money will be spent in shipyards on the Atlantic coast within a radius of 500 miles of the National Capitol. That is not national defense. Many of the shipyards referred to have signed contracts that will take years to fill. What a shipbuilding feast for those favored eastern shipyards. From this banquet table not a crumb to the Pacific coast even in the interest of national defense.

Many factors contribute to the increased cost of ship construction on the Pacific coast over the Atlantic coast. Ninety-five percent of the materials entering into a ship built on the west coast are produced east of the Missouri River.

Mark you, 95 percent of the materials entering into a ship built on the west coast are produced east of the Missouri River and, you might say for all practical purposes, within a radius of 500 miles of this room.

Wage scales are now and always have been higher in private shipyards on the Pacific coast than on the Atlantic coast. That applies to all labor, skilled and unskilled, in every industry on the Pacific coast.

I know those things to be true, gentlemen, because I live in a large industrial city, the city of San Francisco.

On the Atlantic coast complete coordination exists between the mines, the mills, and the shipyards. In some cases all are operated under one head. You know that to be a fact. The Bethlehem Steel Co. owns the sources of raw material; they own the mills that make the finished products from the raw materials, and they own the shipyards.

In other words, there is complete coordination in the shipbuilding industry on the east coast against absolute demoralization of this industry on the west coast. Of course, we cannot compete. There is an old saying that the best proof of the pudding is in the eating. The people of Washington, Oregon, and California are as energetic and as enterprising as any people on the face of God's earth; and if shipbuilding were possible under present conditions, it would be a thriving industry on the Pacific coast. There is not a man on this committee, nor connected with the United States Navy, were he a multimillionaire, who would invest a penny in a shipyard on the Pacific coast under present conditions.

The ship subsidy bill, H. R. 8555, a bill entitled: "An act to develop a strong merchant marine to promote the commerce of the United States and to aid national defense" passed the House June 27, 1935, and contained a 6-percent differential in favor of Pacific coast construction of merchant vessels.

The question of a differential with reference to Pacific coast ship construction was raised before the Committee on Merchant Marine during the hearings, which lasted 5 weeks, the result of which was that Mr. H. Gerish Smith, president of the National Council of American Shipbuilders, after consultation with the members of his organization, suggested the amount of 6 percent, which was later unanimously voted by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The idea of a 6-percent differential, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, was not pulled out of the sky, nor was it arrived at arbitrarily. That differential was agreed to by the shipbuilders on the Atlantic coast.

During the debate on the floor, which lasted 3 days, not one voice was raised against this provision in the bill. Fifteen members of the Committee on Naval Affairs voted for the bill. Whatever opposition was made to the bill was due to subsidies in the form of mail-carrying contracts and not to the resumption of ship construction on the Pacific coast in the interest of national defense.

Mr. DARDEN. Did that bill carry a provision for a 6-percent differential, or was it a 6-percent differential in favor of ships built for the Pacific trade?

Mr. WELCH. No; in favor of ship construction on the Pacific coast, with certain limitations.

Mr. DARDEN. Wasn't that limitation that it was for ships for the Pacific trade?

Mr. WELCH. Yes; exactly so. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. That is provided in the bill, and it was granted, so far as the House was concerned, and it will be in the Senate when the bill is acted upon by that body. It was a 6-percent differential in favor of ships to be constructed on the Pacific coast for Pacific coast trade making Pacific coast ports their home ports.

It would be difficult to apply the same yardstick to naval construction, because those ships have no home ports. Therefore it would have to be left to the discretion of the Navy Department and your committee, if you please, to fix the percentage of naval vessels to be built on the Pacific coast.

Senate bill 3500, introduced by Senator COPELAND, chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce, contains the same 6-percent provision as the House bill. Every privately owned shipyard on the Atlantic coast is owned and controlled by shipbuilders who are members of the National Council of American Shipbuilders, and who know the actual difference between ship construction costs on the Atlantic coast and the Pacific coast.

Mr. Chairman, if you were sick you would send for a doctor; if you needed legal advice, you would consult a lawyer; and if you wanted advice on shipbuilding costs, you would naturally seek such advice from shipbuilders themselves. These shipbuilders, who have hundreds of millions of dollars invested in shipbuilding facilities on the Atlantic coast, have recommended, in fairness and in the interest of national defense, that a differential of 6 percent be allowed to the shipyards on the west coast.

The CHAIRMAN. In that connection, Mr. WELCH, will you supply the committee with the testimony before the Merchant Marine Committee along that point, where the shipbuilders' president did that?

Mr. WELCH. I shall be glad to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. And just incorporate that in the record.

EXCERPT FROM TESTIMONY OF MR. H. GERRISH SMITH, PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL COUNCIL OF AMERICAN SHIPBUILDERS, BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, ON H. R. 7521, MARCH 27, 1935 (P. 351)

Mr. WELCH. The Government of the United States has made available approximately $150,000,000 for shipbuilding and the shipbuilding interests of this country, not $1 of which has been spent in the construction of a ship on the Pacific coast. Our shipyards have gone to wrack and ruin. Shipyards, the gentleman will agree, are a part of our national defense, but they do not exist on the west coast. Can you suggest anything to this committee that will revive shipbuilding on the Pacific coast?

Mr. SMITH. I should like to say this, however, in the first instance, that I am entirely sympathetic with that point of view, that there should be some private shipbuilding facilities maintained and continued on the west coast, from the standpoint of the national defense. I think it is very important.

Mr. WELCH. The witness will agree that shipyards are a necessary part of our national defense?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; they are just as important a factor in the national defense as our Government navy yards, in my opinion.

When the merchant-marine bill, which was passed by the last session of the House of Representatives, was originally being considered by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the thought was to allow a differential amounting to the equivalent of 6 percent of the cost of a vessel by granting a differential in the interest rate on Government loans for merchant ships constructed on the Pacific coast. It was intended to accomplish this by charging 2½ percent for such Government loans on vessels constructed on the Pacific coast for use in foreign trade and 4½ percent on loans for ships constructed on the Pacific coast for vessels to be used in the coastwise or intercoastal trade, as against 3½ and 5½ percent, respectively, for such vessels constructed on the Atlantic coast.

In accordance with a promise subsequently made in his testimony, Mr. Smith sent me a communication on April 16, 1935, in which he said, "The figures of 2½ percent and 4½ percent do not seem to me to be out of line so far as we can ascertain the additional freight cost and higher labor rates." With this communication he forwarded the following table which clearly illustrates how this three-fourths-percent differential in the interest charge on Government loans would be the equivalent of a 6-percent differential in favor of vessels built on the Pacific coast. Subsequently, however, the committee amended the bill to provide a direct 6-percent differential.

The saving in interest for a foreign trade vessel which results from reducing the interest rate from 3½ percent to 2½ percent is $78,750, or 5.9 percent of the initial cost. The saving in interest for a coastwise trade vessel which results from reducing the interest rate from 5½ to 4½ percent is $78,750, or 5.9 percent of the initial cost.

Mr. DARDEN. To those shipbuilders who own facilities on the west coast it would not be material what the differential is, so long as they are getting the business, would it? I mean to the east-coast builders who put forward this scheme or, rather, who approved this plan before the Merchant Marine Committee. It would not be particularly material to them what the differential happened to be, just so long as the business was secured. I am not in any way reflecting upon your comments on the naval facilities on the west coast. But with respect to the differential, that is not a matter of concern to the private shipbuilders if they can get the business. It might be 25 percent, so far as they are concerned. The business has to be done at the expense of the United States Government; and the differential might well be so great as to enable us to build and equip a navy yard, for instance, in the San Francisco area, where it is needed. That is what concerns me. I think we might well pay a profit to private shipbuilding companies, a sum sufficient to put a naval base there and pay for it within a period of a few years, and in an area that needs it badly.

Mr. WELCH. If the condition is to be met that was referred to by me and by others who preceded me, and which was referred to by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS] the other day in interrogating Admiral Land, who very cleverly evaded his questions, it can only be met in two ways, either by a differential or by more Government naval shipyards on the Pacific coast.

Mr. DARDEN. Yes; but should it be met by a differential? It is met by a differential in favor of private yards over which we have no control unless we commandeer them in time of war. If the money is to be expended, would it not be better to expend it in naval establishments which are always available for service of the fleet and over which we always have control?

Mr. WELCH. I will not quarrel with the gentleman over that question of policy. I have always been inclined to favor public ownership of public utilities; but I do not go as far as some people along those lines. Whether it would be good policy at this time to have all ship construction done in navy yards is something to which I would not want to be committed. I rather think it would be a mistake at present.

Mr. DARDEN. I never favored any such policy. That is not what I had in mind.

Mr. DELANEY. How did you arrive at that particular amount of 6 percent?

Mr. WELCH. I regret the gentleman from New York was not here when I made my statement.

Mr. DELANEY. If it is in the record, don't repeat it.

Mr. WELCH. It was arrived at by the National Council of American Shipbuilders through their president. They brought it to us. Their president suggested the 6-percent differential to Judge BLAND, chairman of the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and he also gave it to Senator COPELAND in the Senate. And it was not arrived at overnight, either; it took the council a long time to determine that question of policy. And I have since understood that some of them were very reluctant to permit a differential of a penny to the Pacific coast.

The CHAIRMAN. Let Mr. WELCH complete his statement.

Mr. WELCH. I have done so.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any questions you desire to ask Mr. WELCH, Mr. DARROW?

Mr. DARROW. Mr. WELCH, I want to compliment you upon the splendid presentation of the situation.

Is the development of a merchant marine largely in connection with the building up and strengthening of the Navy? In time of emergency will this provision, to which you have referred in the merchant-marine bill, develop building by the private yards on the Pacific coast?

Mr. WELCH. The limitations in the bill, which we accepted, make it possible only for ship construction on the Pacific coast of ships that make Pacific coast ports their home ports. Our offshore or foreign trade from the Pacific coast is limited to the Orient. And by reason of Japanese competition that is very limited. There are not very many American vessels in the foreign trade.

The CHAIRMAN. It is very limited.

Mr. WELCH. Yes; it is very limited. Our ship construction, therefore, would come largely from vessels engaged in the inter-coastal and coastwise trade. And you can readily see that that would hardly be sufficient to warrant the rehabilitation of ship-construction plants on the Pacific coast. Men with capital are very careful about investing in a shipyard at a cost of millions of dollars unless they are assured of continuous business.

I am afraid, gentlemen, if we are limited to the construction of merchant vessels such as I have described, that we will not get results so far as rehabilitation of shipbuilding on the Pacific coast in the interest of national defense is concerned.

Mr. DARROW. I am in thorough accord with trying to stimulate our merchant fleet. I think it is very essential for peacetime requirements as well as for emergency requirements. But it does seem to me that in order to compete with other nations we must have for a merchant marine some form of subsidy—that is, in order to have it compete with the operating costs as well as with the building costs of other nations. I am wondering whether your bill to which you referred fully covers that. To my mind that is very essential in order to build our merchant marine.

Mr. WELCH. The bill is in the form of an amendment before your committee, subject to any amendments which your committee may see fit to make to strengthen it.

You understand that we should and must subsidize our merchant marine by reason of the fact that we cannot meet foreign competition. While the east coast cannot compete with Europe, the west coast cannot compete with the east coast. It is farther from the city of New York to the city of San Francisco than it is from the city of New York to Europe. All of the facilities for ship construction are within a radius of 400 or 500 miles from where we are sitting. But out there we are removed entirely from the base of supplies. If by chance it happened that the Navy had written into a specification that those auxiliary ships be made of redwood—and redwood is only grown in the State of California—and the shipbuilder owned the forest and he owned the mills, what chance would an eastern shipbuilding company have in competing with the west coast for the construction of those vessels?

But here we have the condition reversed. We have nearly all of the materials produced within 400 or 500 miles of this room. And we cannot compete with you. On the east coast there is complete coordination from the mine to the mill and from the mill to the shipyard as against absolute demoralization on the west coast.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any further question, Mr. DARROW?

Mr. DARROW. I have no further questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Has Mr. DREWRY any questions?

Mr. DREWRY. As I understand it, this is a transportation situation, is it not?

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Lea will ask the gentleman who will follow me to cover that. At least, Mr. Lea will ask the committee to hear a gentleman who will follow me who is conversant with that situation. He has built ships on both the Atlantic coast and on the Pacific coast. He will explain to your committee the difference in transportation costs between points, referred to by Admiral Land, and the Pacific coast.

Mr. DREWRY. But isn't that the main trouble?

Mr. WELCH. It is one of the factors. It is only one factor.

Mr. DREWRY. Suppose you could buy steel close to the place where you want to build your ships in California; let us say you had steel-manufacturing plants there; then to a great extent your trouble would be alleviated, would it not?

Mr. WELCH. To an extent, but not entirely.

Mr. DREWRY. To a large extent?

Mr. WELCH. It would be one of the controlling factors.

Mr. DREWRY. Then do you think it would be right for the Government to subsidize steel plants in California?

Mr. WELCH. I do not know about steel plants; but they should make a differential of 6 percent in favor of ship construction on the Pacific coast in order to rehabilitate those shipyards for national security. I have said they have gone to wrack and ruin and do not exist.

Mr. DREWRY. I am trying to show that if it is right to do it in one case it is all right to do it in another case. If it is all right to differentiate in the case of shipbuilding plants why wouldn't it be all right to differentiate in the case of steel plants?

Mr. WELCH. Except as it might enter into the picture.

Mr. DREWRY. Except what?

Mr. WELCH. As it might enter into the picture. I am not going to debate that question with the gentleman from Virginia. If the committee will keep before it at all times the necessity of national defense and national security, we will not be splitting hairs over the cost of transportation from Pittsburgh f. o. b. to San Francisco or from Pittsburgh f. o. b. to Newport News or Norfolk. Keep before you the fact that today or tomorrow if the fleet were engaged in a major battle on the Pacific coast, there are not four, and there are perhaps not more than three facilities where one of our crippled ships could go in for repairs. It is national defense to which we should look. We should not quibble over where steel and iron are produced or over the cost of transportation between the east coast and the west coast.

Mr. DREWRY. I am entirely in sympathy with you.

Mr. WELCH. I am glad to know that. The gentleman is always fair.

Mr. DREWRY. I am trying to develop a situation which will enable you to get your shipbuilding plants; but I do not want to place myself in the position of adopting a principle which seems to me to be full of trouble in the future. If you can do it in one case, you can do it in another case. That is what I fear.

Mr. WELCH. We did it for years. The Government carried on that policy for a number of years before the war.

Mr. DREWRY. But they finally got rid of it.

Mr. WELCH. Only during the wartime when it was a case of ships, ships, and more ships, and then we built them of concrete on San Francisco Bay at the request of the Government. It was a question of wherever you could build a ship and at whatever price. However, since the war the differential has not been resumed. We are trying to have it done now.

Mr. DREWRY. This is a rider attached to a bill which, to my mind, is extremely important. Would it not be satisfactory to you to put it in a separate bill so we could take it up on its merits, and not have it attached to this bill which is so important?

Mr. WELCH. Now, let's be fair with each other. The gentleman has been here a long time, and so have I. The gentleman has been here in Congress longer than I have. Congressman CARTER and Congressman McGRATH, since they have been here, and I have been trying for years through a separate bill to get a differential provision in favor of Pacific coast ship construction. But we did not get to first base with it. And it was only when a comprehensive bill was before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and after every member of the west coast delegation, from Oregon, Washington, and California, appeared before that committee and by their presence and splendid statements which could not be contradicted, that we succeeded in getting the differential provision written into the bill referred to by me a few moments ago. And I am afraid, Mr. DREWRY with all due respect to your suggestion, that if it is not contained in this bill, like Congressman McGRATH's bill, Senator JOHNSON's bill, and my bill, which have all been turned down by the Navy Department, it will never come before Congress for consideration. This is the time and place. If you think the west coast is entitled to that consideration from a national defense standpoint, the opportunity is here and now.

Mr. DREWRY. I will say to the gentleman, that is giving me more trouble than anything else.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. DARROW, do you want to ask some questions?

Mr. DARROW. When the question of the concrete ships came up a little while ago I wanted to ask whether they were ever used.

Mr. WELCH. They were used. There was practical use made of them. They were also slow and cumbersome, but they served a purpose.

Mr. BURNHAM. Supplementing Mr. WELCH's remarks, two of those concrete ships were built in San Diego, my own home town, and two of the best concrete ships ever built were built there. Perhaps that was due to the fact that the engineers came from Philadelphia.

Mr. DARROW. That accounts for it.

Mr. BURNHAM. One of them, I believe, is in use today as a tanker.

The CHAIRMAN. I remember when they were built, and I saw them built, and I was very much interested in them.

Mr. DELANEY. Does the merchant-marine bill give the Pacific coast the 6-percent differential?

Mr. WELCH. Yes, sir; it does.

Mr. DELANEY. Does that go a great way to help out the private yards out there?

Mr. WELCH. It has not been enacted into law, may I say to the Congressman. It passed the House, and the distinguished Representative from New York voted for it. And it included the differential of 6 percent.

Mr. DARROW. Do you mean to say Mr. DELANEY voted for a merchant-marine bill containing the 6-percent differential?

Mr. WELCH. Yes, sir. I have the list of the 15 here. Your good self voted for it, and Mr. DREWRY voted for it.

Mr. MILLARD. Are you sure it was this Mr. DELANEY?

Mr. WELCH. Yes; it was this Mr. DELANEY.

Mr. DELANEY. The other day, Mr. WELCH, in a very heated way, said "you did vote for the bill."

Mr. WELCH. Not in a heated way.

Mr. DELANEY. Well, you can't withdraw it now. It is in the record.

For the last 4 years, Mr. WELCH, the fleet has been on the west coast, has it not, with the exception, I think, of one trip through the Canal to the east coast?

Mr. WELCH. Yes; with the exception of one trip through the Canal.

Mr. DELANEY. And all of the repairs on those ships while they were there had been made on the West coast in the Mare Island Yard or up in Bremerton, or some place along there?

Mr. WELCH. There are no other places.

Mr. DELANEY. There are no other places?

Mr. WELCH. No; there are no other places.

Mr. DELANEY. Of course, when the fleet is out there that means that the eastern yards suffer very considerably from lack of work; in other words, the repair work being done out there takes it away from the eastern yards. Has anything been done in the way of extending the works out there and improving them in order to make them more up to date so that eventually they will be places where Navy ships may be built?

Mr. WELCH. They are building Navy ships there now. They always have at the Mare Island Yard at the northern end of San Francisco Bay and at the Bremerton Navy Yard in the Puget Sound district. It has been a limited number, however.

May I say to the gentlemen that the States of Oregon, Washington, and California are not responsible for the presence of the fleet on the Pacific coast.

Mr. DELANEY. I did not intend to indicate that.

Mr. WELCH. They would be down here if the circumstances required it.

Mr. DELANEY. That is an administration matter, of course; and I know the reason why that was done, or, at least, I assume I know it.

Eastern companies have plants on the Pacific coast, have they not?

Mr. WELCH. Bethlehem Steel Co. has what is known as the old Union Iron Works plant, which was purchased by them from the Scott interests. That is where the Oregon and other splendid vessels were built in years past.

Mr. BOLAND. Is that the Hunters Point Yard?

Mr. WELCH. That is a part of their system; Hunters Point drydocks, which are several miles from the plant proper, also belong to the Bethlehem Steel Corporation.

Mr. DELANEY. Have the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Co. been getting quite a number of contracts from the Navy?

Mr. WELCH. Yes, sir. Recently the Bethlehem Steel Corporation was awarded the contract for four destroyers. An agreement was entered into between the Bethlehem Steel Corporation and the Navy Department in order to assist ship construction on the Pacific coast that two of those destroyers were to be built in the San Francisco plant. To say that they will be built there is really incorrect. They will be assembled there and that is all. They will not even be fabricated there. Every part of the machinery, the engines, the boilers, the condensers, and everything to complete those ships, will be built over here at the Bethlehem Fore River plant and shipped to San Francisco to be put into the hulls when they are assembled on the Pacific coast.

As a matter of fact, I had this up with the manager of the Bethlehem Steel plant in San Francisco. I know the gentleman and I know the plant, because as a young man I learned a trade there in that shipyard. I asked if it was their intention to build the ships from the keels up and open the foundry and machine shops and boiler shops and pattern shops, and he said, "No; not at all." He said they simply were going to assemble them there.

I will say, moreover, I was told by the same authority in times past that the Bethlehem Steel Co. had no intention of building ships in their west coast plant because they cannot compete with the eastern yards. They virtually closed up that plant years ago.

Mr. DELANEY. Because of the expense of transporting the material from the East?

Mr. WELCH. Yes; and because of labor and other things essential to the construction of ships.

Mr. DELANEY. Labor is not as high on the Pacific coast as it is in the Eastern States?

Mr. WELCH. When shipbuilding was going on on the Pacific coast before the war, and during the war, the wage scales were higher on the Pacific coast than on the Atlantic coast. But by reason of that fact there has been no ship construction. There has not been a ship constructed on the Pacific coast that you could call a ship in 14 years—the shipbuilding industry, so far as mechanics and artisans are concerned, has been completely demoralized. Shipbuilding artisans and mechanics have come east. Some of them may be in the navy yard in your district; some of them are in Virginia and elsewhere. The few who remained there were willing to accept anything that was offered to them by those engaged in repairing of ships, particularly the Bethlehem Steel plant. While the Bethlehem Steel plant is in San Francisco, there is nothing favorable I can say in its behalf. It is notorious for its low-wage scale.

Mr. DELANEY. In other words, one of the principle reasons for your asking this amendment is, if possible, to keep up the morale of the men out in that part of the country by giving them work to do so that in case of an emergency they can be relied upon to go to work for the Government in case of need?

Mr. WELCH. That would be one of the factors. And now I wish to refer to those two ships to be assembled at San Francisco. Let me make that qualification. As my colleague from California knows, they have already brought artisans from the Quincy, Mass., shipyard to the Pacific coast to supervise the assembling of those two ships. We did not have the men there to do it.

Mr. DELANEY. Recently when we passed this very comprehensive bill providing for bringing the Navy up to treaty strength, did the Pacific coast yards make a real effort to bid on the ships which are now building in Virginia, Maine, New York, and in that vicinity?

Mr. WELCH. There have been several efforts made on the part of the Pacific coast builders, but they did not succeed.

Mr. DELANEY. Was there a great difference in the bids of the two sections?

Mr. WELCH. In one case a Pacific coast builder, a very good man, Mr. Arms, bid and was the successful bidder. But the bond writers would not underwrite his bond. They said his bid was too low and he could not compete, that the west coast could not compete with the east. And they refused to give him a bond for that reason.

Mr. DELANEY. That is a very usual thing with us right here in Washington. A couple of years ago several fly-by-night shipbuilding concerns put in bids on certain ships but the Navy Department very wisely rejected those bids as no bonding company would go on their bond. They had no backing. The bids were low, and it was proved afterward that these shipbuilding companies were fly-by-night concerns.

Mr. WELCH. It proved that the west coast cannot compete with the east coast, and it is recognized by the bonding people.

Mr. DELANEY. They could compete by offering a very low bid as against the eastern shipbuilders; but it was not because they were not able to do it, because I figure that if they were not able to do it they would not make the bid; but it is only because the bonding people out in your part of the country did not feel this company could do it at the price they bid. There might be some trouble there. But here is a company willing, and probably able, to go on with this work, but they could not secure the necessary backing on the Pacific coast by the Pacific coast insurance companies or bonding companies. In other words, it showed a lack of confidence by the Pacific coast insurance companies or bonding companies in the ability of the builder on the Pacific coast.

Mr. WELCH. If the gentleman were the head of a big bonding company with the responsibility that goes with it, you would be very careful about underwriting a bond for a shipbuilding company where millions of dollars were involved, would you not? And the company, with the same care that you would exercise, refused to underwrite the bond for the Pacific coast firm.

Mr. DELANEY. Why would eastern companies be able to secure the necessary bonding, even though their bids were much lower than the bids of other companies?

Mr. WELCH. Because they know they have the facilities here in the East. There is complete coordination here, as I have explained. Take, for instance, the bid of the Bethlehem Steel, who own the mines and who also own other sources of raw materials. They own the mills and they own the shipyards. The whole thing is coordinated.

Mr. DELANEY. These companies were not connected with the Bethlehem Co. at all; they were companies formed rather hurriedly and were able to get a bond. The only reason the Navy Department rejected it was because they did not think the people were competent to do the work at that price. In other words, I feel this way about it: The Pacific-coast people do not take the position of backing their people out there as well as they do in the East, and they do not give them the encouragement they need.

Mr. WELCH. The Pacific-coast people are as courageous and as enterprising as any other people on the face of the earth. That was demonstrated by the construction of two of the biggest bridges in the world, one being the Golden Gate Bridge, with a span of 4,200 feet, which is under construction at this time and is about two-thirds completed. It was carried on during the period of the depression without a penny of appropriations or a penny of relief from the United States Government. And at times we paid as high as 6 percent for our money in order to keep that project going. One bridge cost nearly $100,000,000 and the other one $35,000,000. Both are in northern California, supported, of course, by the entire State of California and the entire Pacific coast.

Mr. DELANEY. It is not my intention to question the courage of the people on the Pacific coast, of course.

Mr. BURNHAM. The great majority of them come from the East, I might add.

Mr. DELANEY. I am only trying to help the gentleman along in his argument so that we may have the facts before us to get this information on the record.

Mr. WELCH. I have made my argument, if the Congressman please.

Mr. DELANEY. I want to have the record show the reasons why the Pacific coast delegation is endeavoring to have this differential of 6 percent included in the bill. And we must have that on the record in order to enable us to vote intelligently on this very important question.

Mr. WELCH. It is not only the Pacific coast delegation but also every local and State chamber of commerce, as well as innumerable labor and civic organizations in Washington, Oregon, and California which have endorsed this policy.

I have a telegram here that I should like to have made a part of the record. It is signed by the president of the California State Chamber of Commerce. So it is not a question of a delegation; it is a question of the entire Pacific coast through their civic, their commercial, and their labor organizations.

Mr. DELANEY. May I say that I prefer to take your word and the word of the delegation from the Pacific coast in regard to these questions rather than the word of the chambers of commerce? I am not questioning the activities of your delegation in this regard. I prefer to take your word about it than to take the word of others.

Mr. WELCH. I appreciate the confidence the gentleman has in our delegation. And I hope he will vote accordingly when the matter comes up for final consideration.

May I make this a part of the record? This is the telegram to which I referred. It is dated San Francisco, February 22, 1936, and is addressed to Hon. CLARENCE F. LEA and RICHARD J. WELCH, House of Representatives Building, Washington:

"The California State Chamber of Commerce deems it of the highest importance that the Congress of the United States should be respectfully but none the less vigorously impressed with the paramount need of reasonable shipbuilding industry on the Pacific coast as a reserve aid to the United States fleet in the Pacific. Shipbuilding on the Pacific coast, aside from two navy yards, has practically ceased, the last Government vessels being built by private yards 14 years ago. The chamber feels with all deference that a major naval engagement in the Pacific would have most disastrous results if injured craft were compelled to go 5,000 miles to eastern shipyards for repairs. The 6-percent differential proposed by Representative VINSON has been arrived at after considerable investigation of the subject and is believed to be reasonable and just. The chamber urgently advocates adoption of VINSON's 6-percent differential.

"JOSEPH R. KNOWLAND, President, California State Chamber of Commerce."

The bonding companies referred to by Mr. DELANEY, I am reminded to say, are not Pacific-coast bonding companies; they are New York bonding companies.

Mr. MILLARD. Do you suspect collusion there?

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. WELCH, there is no desire on the part of the people on the west coast to have any advantage over the Atlantic coast, as I understand it; but there is a difference in the cost of construction of ships, and in order to encourage and maintain the yards, which are so essential when it comes to the matter of national defense, it is necessary that they be granted some kind of a differential to equalize matters and put them on an equal footing with the Atlantic seaboard. They are not asking for any advantage, as I understand it.

Mr. WELCH. No, sir. You know that as well as I do.

Mr. BURNHAM. I believe the statement was made by Admiral Land that the center of the steel industry was rapidly moving west; that it is no longer in the East but it is gradually moving toward the Pacific seaboard. I think the admiral must have been mistaken in that. As I understood him, that is what he intended to say or did say.

Mr. WELCH. That is impossible, if I may interrupt you. An industry as static as is the iron and steel industry never goes beyond its source of supply. The iron and steel industry will never be on the Pacific coast; the raw materials are not there. Nature provides those things. Nature gave to this belt within five or six hundred miles of this National Capitol the raw materials, the iron, the steel, the coal, and the splendid harbors where you can build ships, and nature gave to California the redwood. If the ships were built of redwood, we could compete.

Mr. DARDEN. With reference to the statement made by Admiral Land, I don't think he stated the steel industry was moving to the west coast. I understood him to say that the steel industry was moving west. And that is unquestionably true. There is a great steel development around the city of Chicago. It was not there 10 years ago. All you have to do is check steel production and the plants producing it in order to get the facts. Admiral Land is technically and absolutely correct in what he said. He did not say it was moving to the west coast; he said it was moving west.

Mr. WELCH. That is all I have to say at this time.

Mr. DARDEN. I just wanted to say what I did in fairness to Admiral Land.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any questions the members would like to ask?

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Welch, taking up the point about the moving of the steel industry, isn't it a fact that if that was the tendency, to move west, eventually it would be equidistant from the Pacific and the Atlantic? That is unquestionably true. But that will not help you at the present time. It will be a long time before it gets to an equal point in the matter of transportation.

I think what the committee is interested in, Mr. WELCH, is: What is the purpose of this differential? Is it to compensate for the difference in items of cost in manufacturing or in building a ship, such as transportation and labor conditions, or is it to enable the shipyards to rehabilitate themselves, to get the necessary repairs that would be necessary if they were building ships, and get trained technicians from the East to move to the West and to get the shipyards into condition? In other words, is it a temporary necessity or is it one which will be permanent?

Mr. WELCH. That will depend upon future developments. If, through the 6-percent differential, the Pacific coast shipbuilding industry were thoroughly rehabilitated, and we had splendid facilities such as we had before the war and during the war, up to the time the shipbuilding ceased on the Pacific coast, it is possible—I will not say entirely probable—that the west coast shipbuilding plants could get along without a differential. That is something to be seen, however. It takes time to work that out.

Mr. MAAS. Those are the questions that are vitally involved here, as to what will bring about a decrease in the necessity for this subsidy, if it is to decrease it. We have to consider on this committee whether this is to be adopted as a permanent policy of the Government or whether this is simply a temporary aid to rehabilitate the industries which will be self-liquidating so far as the subsidy is concerned. I am quite in accord with you that something absolutely must be done on the Pacific coast, but I am keeping in mind national defense. I know we do not have adequate facilities on the Pacific coast, and we have an obligation, a constitutional obligation, to provide adequate facilities. What this committee wants to know is, Mr. WELCH, how best to accomplish that. If we are to launch a permanent policy of subsidy—it may be justified—we have to know that. If it is to be a temporary provision, there may be some justification under the immediate emergency.

Mr. BURNHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. Yes; I do.

Mr. BURNHAM. Of course, if conditions change and it is no longer necessary to offer a subsidy to the Pacific coast, this act could be amended.

Mr. MAAS. We would not need to amend it, because the bidding itself would take care of it. But what I am interested in, Mr. BURNHAM, is what factors are foreseen now that will bring about a decrease in the necessity or the elimination of the differential.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. Yes; I will.

Mr. SCOTT. The shipyards out there were on the way to rehabilitation during the war, but when the war ended the necessity for that construction ceased, and naturally shipbuilding died down. Because of the coordination that Mr. WELCH pointed out it was sensible to withdraw that activity from the west coast. And eastern shipbuilders were interested in it and were interested in the west-coast yards. It was sensible to withdraw from the west coast and go back where they could do it more economically. And they took men, I think about 5,000 men, skilled technicians from the west-coast yards, and they came back to work in the east-coast yards. We have lost that type of labor. Part of the equipment was also withdrawn, and what is left is obsolete. If the encouragement by a subsidy of this kind were given the west coast and the equipment were put there, that big cost would not have to be taken again, and men skilled in the work would be developed out there or would be brought out there. And in spite of the fact of coordination of the material and the work referred to, I think that once having rehabilitated it and once having gotten the labor back out there or having developed the labor out there, the same amount of subsidy would not be necessary in the future. But nobody could say you would never need a subsidy or how many years it would be necessary.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. WELCH, do you agree with that, that the main factors to be compensated for now are temporary rather than permanent?

Mr. WELCH. I would say so. Of course, I cannot predict the future.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. WELCH, the point Mr. SCOTT has brought out I was just going to ask you about. When the shipbuilding yards get organized, that 6 percent may not be necessary, 4 percent may not be necessary, and we may eventually get it down to 2 percent or even down to 1 percent. In connection with the initial organization, the cost of establishing yards and the cost of training mechanics, that would very largely be where the 6 percent would come in at the present time, or the 5 percent, or the 4 percent, or the 2 percent, in addition to the freight cost and the material transportation cost. Don't you think that we could come down and reduce that differential as we go along?

Mr. WELCH. That would be reflected in the bids from year to year. We do not get a flat 6 percent added to the bid of the west-coast yard if this amendment is adopted. It gives that as the maximum under which to bid. That is not added to the cost. It is possible, as you have well said, that after the shipyards have been rehabilitated and have become organized that they can compete in their bids. The 6 percent would not be added; it just gives 6 percent within which to bid with a maximum of 6-percent preferential rate over the eastern bid. It does not assure them a 6-percent bonus at all.

Mr. McGRATH. One of the members of the committee asked you if we were able to take care of repairs on the west coast; if peacetime repairs can be taken care of at the present time. Our Navy is almost entirely on the west coast. Do you think it is true that in the two navy yards, Mare Island and Bremerton, they can take care of the repairs?

Mr. WELCH. I would rather that question be answered by more competent authority. I would rather that question be answered by the distinguished gentlemen, the admirals who represent the Navy at this hearing.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. WELCH, we are spending many millions of dollars in building up a Navy to treaty strength, and that Navy is on the west coast. The Navy had a purpose in bringing the Navy up to treaty strength, and it has a very definite purpose in keeping the fleet on the west coast. Now, should the fleet ever get into difficulties and we have possibly 20 or 30 ships crippled within a reasonably short time, what would become of those crippled ships?

Mr. MAAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGRATH. Yes; I will.

Mr. MAAS. Do you consider this is the most economical way for us to accomplish the purpose of acquiring adequate facilities on the west coast?

Mr. McGRATH. In my opinion, there are two methods. One is this differential in building up private yards that may be able to take care of repairs in emergencies and one is to expand our navy yards so that we can have those yards in emergencies and so that we can have trained mechanics in the same emergency.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. Yes; I will.

Mr. SCOTT. I think it would be the most economical way, and I am sure it would be the most practical way.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. WELCH you have had practical experience in shipbuilding yourself. Do you think it is as important to have a ship mechanic in a yard in the event of an emergency repair as it is to have sailors on a battleship, or even to go so far as having officers trained at Annapolis?

Mr. WELCH. We must have competent artisans available, men who are trained in the art of shipbuilding. If an auxiliary naval ship or a naval ship came in crippled, nothing could compare with the catastrophe and loss of naval ships by reason of the lack of facilities and the lack of artisans to give it the repairs that are required.

Mr. McGRATH. Back of your argument, Mr. WELCH, and back of this 6-percent differential national defense is the whole purpose, is it not?

Mr. WELCH. That is absolutely so. And if you want to build up and give us absolute assurance of national defense by providing facilities on the west coast to meet the emergency, so well described by my colleague from California, you will go further than the 6 percent and you will allocate a certain percentage of those 54 vessels to be built on the west coast, and make it mandatory.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further questions?

Mr. SCOTT. The question was asked a little while ago if all of the repair and all of the service work on the fleet is done on the west coast now. It is my understanding that any number of ships have been sent back to the east coast for annual overhaul. It is not all done on the west coast. They are not in position to do it there.

Mr. WELCH. I am not in position to answer that question.

Mr. McGRATH. In the second place, what repair work is done out there is done in the navy yards rather than in the private yards.

The CHAIRMAN. The law required it. Or, rather, it is the custom, anyway.

Mr. SCOTT. The repair work done on the fleet on the west coast would not stimulate the private shipbuilding industry at all.

Mr. DELANEY. These repairs are made in navy yards out there; but as to the ships coming back East, that was not primarily for the purpose of having repairs but for the purpose of going to sea, anyway.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any questions from any other members of the committee?

If there are none, I want to thank you, Mr. WELCH.

Mr. WELCH. I thank you, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, for this opportunity of appearing before you.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is consent day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the calendar.

IRRIGATION CHANNEL BETWEEN CLEAR LAKE AND LOST RIVER, CALIF.

The Clerk called the first bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 6773, to deepen the irrigation channel between Clear Lake and Lost River, in the State of California, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Bureau of Reclamation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, is authorized and directed to deepen the irrigation channel between Clear Lake and Lost River, in the State of California, so as to permit water to be drained from such lake into such river for delivery to the Langell Valley irrigation district, at the Malone Diversion Dam, Klamath County, Oreg.

Sec. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed (1) to make a full and complete investigation with a view to determining whether any dams, waterworks, or other projects have been constructed in the Clear Lake Watershed, in the State of California, in violation of the water rights of the United States in such State, and (2) to report thereon to the Congress as soon as practicable.

Sec. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from the reclamation fund (1) the sum of $12,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of section 1 of this act, and (2) the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of section 2 of this act, the amounts expended from such appropriations to be reimbursable under the reclamation law.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 1, line 3, strike out all of line 3 down to and including the words "Sec. 2. The" in line 10, and insert "That the."

Page 2, line 6, after the abbreviation "Sec." strike out "3" and insert "2"; and in line 7, after the word "fund", strike out everything down to and including "and (2)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

COLONIAL NATIONAL MONUMENT IN VIRGINIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5722, to provide for the addition or additions of certain lands to the Colonial National Monument in the State of Virginia.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to acquire by purchase and/or accept by donation, in behalf of the United States, such lands, easements, and buildings comprising the former Governor Berkeley's mansion and homestead in James City County and Carter's Grove mansion and homestead in the same county, and the Rosewell mansion and homestead in Gloucester County as are desirable for the proper rounding out of the boundaries and for the administrative control of the Colonial National Monument, and such lands as are necessary for parkways, not to exceed 500 feet wide, to connect said mansions to the said Colonial National Monument, the title and evidence of title to lands acquired to be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the said acquisition of lands and/or improvements shall be made only from such funds as may be appropriated pursuant to the authorization of the act of March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1490).

Sec. 2. That the area now within the Colonial National Monument, together with such additions as may hereafter be made thereto pursuant to section 1 hereof, shall be known as the "Colonial National Historical Park", under which name the aforesaid national park shall be entitled to receive and to use all moneys heretofore or hereafter appropriated for the Colonial National Monument.

Sec. 3. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

THE HOMESTEAD NATIONAL MONUMENT OF AMERICA, GAGE COUNTY, NEBR.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1307, to establish the Homestead National Monument of America in Gage County, Nebr.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to acquire, on behalf of the United States, by gift, purchase, or condemnation, the south half of the northwest quarter, the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter, and the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter section 26, township 4 north, range 5 east, of the sixth principal meridian, Gage County, Nebr., the same being the first homestead entered upon under the General Homestead Act of May 20, 1862, by Daniel Freeman, and that when so acquired the said area be designated "The Homestead National Monument of America."

Sec. 2. That there is authorized to be appropriated a sum not to exceed $24,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of acquiring said tract.

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to lay out said land in a suitable and enduring manner so that the same may be maintained as an appropriate monument to retain for posterity a proper memorial emblematical of the hardships and the pioneer life through which the early settlers passed in the settlement, cultivation, and civilization of the great West. It shall be his duty to erect suitable buildings to be used as a museum in which shall be preserved literature applying to such settlement and agricultural implements used in bringing the western plains to its present high state of civilization, and to use the said tract of land for such other objects and purposes as in his judgment may perpetuate the history of the country mainly developed by the homestead law.

SEC. 4. For the purpose for carrying out the suggestions and recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior, the necessary annual appropriations therefor are hereby authorized.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1425, to amend section 80 of chapter 9 of an act to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I think the subject matter of this bill is covered by legislation that has been heretofore passed, and the bill perhaps should be tabled.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I wonder if we cannot dispose of it in some way at the present time. The bill has been passed over without prejudice heretofore.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the consideration of the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

POST OFFICE AND COURTHOUSE BUILDING AT RUTLAND, VT.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 37, authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to settle and adjust the claims of subcontractors and materialmen for material and labor furnished in the construction of a post-office and courthouse building at Rutland, Vt.

The SPEAKER. This bill requires three objections.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. CLARK of Idaho objected.

There being no further objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust on a pro-rata basis in an amount not exceeding the unpaid balance, the claims of subcontractors and materialmen who furnished material and labor in the construction of a post-office and courthouse building at Rutland, Vt., which work was completed by the National Surety Co., as surety on the performance bond before said surety company was placed in the hands of a rehabilitator appointed by the Insurance Department of the State of New York, and after the United States had terminated the right of the Brooklyn & Queens Screen Manufacturing Co., Inc., to proceed under contract no. T1SA-1755, dated June 25, 1931.

The Comptroller General of the United States shall pay the money without regard to any priorities the Government may claim against the National Surety Co. in other cases, and when the money shall so have been paid it shall be set aside for subcontractors, materialmen, and laborers who did the work or supplied material for this building with a view to paying their claims, if any: Provided, That no payment shall be made until 60 days from the passage of this act or until personal notice has been given all claimants for the filing of such claims.

And there is hereby made available from such appropriations not to exceed $19,138.18 for this purpose; payments so made shall be charged to the National Surety Co. in the adjustment of the accounts between said company and the United States: Provided, That before any allowance is made pursuant to the terms of this act, the liquidator of the National Surety Co. shall file with the Comptroller General written consent thereto.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

PORT FREDERICA NATIONAL MONUMENT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8431) to provide for the establishment of Fort Frederica National Monument at St. Simon Island, Ga.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That when title to the site of Fort Frederica, on St. Simon Island, Ga., and such other related sites located thereon, as may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, in the exercise of his discretion, as necessary or desirable for national-monument purposes, shall have been vested in the United States, said area shall be, and is hereby, set apart as a national monument for the benefit and inspiration of the people, and shall be called the Fort Frederica National Monument.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept donations of land, interests in land, buildings, structures, and other property within the boundaries of the said national monument as determined and fixed hereunder, and donations of funds for the purchase and maintenance thereof, the title and evidence of title to lands acquired to be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That he may acquire on behalf of the United States out of any donated funds, either by purchase at prices deemed by him reasonable, or by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, such tracts of land within the said national monument as may be necessary for the completion thereof.

SEC. 3. (a) The Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to maintain in some suitable structure within the national monument a museum for relics and records pertaining to Fort Frederica, and for other articles of national and patriotic interest, and in his discretion to accept, on behalf of the United States, for installation in such museum, articles which may be offered as additions to the museum.

(b) Any State or political subdivision thereof, organization, or individual may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, erect monuments or place tablets commemorating historic events or persons connected with the history of the area, within the boundaries of the Fort Frederica National Monument.

SEC. 4. The administration, protection, and development of the aforesaid national monument shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes", as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

EMPLOYMENT OF SKILLED SHORTHAND REPORTERS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4886) providing for the employment of skilled shorthand reporters in the executive branch of the Government.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any department, bureau, board, commission, or independent agency in the executive branch of the Government is authorized, without regard to the civil-service laws and without regard to any provision of law requiring advertising for proposals to furnish supplies or services to any of the departments of the Government, to employ such number of shorthand reporters as may be necessary in the conduct of its business.

SEC. 2. Said reporters shall be skilled in their profession and before receiving any employment under this act shall have had not less than 3 years' actual experience reporting court proceedings or similar work. Said reporters shall be given an examination by the employing authority as to their competency and upon completing such examination to the satisfaction of such employing authority they may be employed for such period as the character of the services require.

SEC. 3. Said reporters shall be sworn to report and transcribe correctly any proceedings in connection with which they are employed. Copies of the transcript of such proceedings when certified by the reporter making the same may be admitted as prima facie evidence of their correctness in the courts of the United States and shall have the same force and effect as the original would have if produced and authenticated in court.

SEC. 4. For services performed within the District of Columbia said reporters shall receive compensation of not exceeding 25 cents per one hundred words for the original copy of the transcript and 5 cents per one hundred words for each additional copy; for services performed outside the District of Columbia they shall receive compensation of not exceeding 30 cents per one hundred words for the original copy of the transcript and 5 cents per one hundred words for each additional copy.

SEC. 5. All appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for contract stenographic reporting services shall be available for payment of compensation provided for in section 4.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 2, line 23, after the word "receive", insert the words "the rates of."

Page 2, line 24, strike out the words "of not exceeding 30 cents per one hundred words for the original copy of the transcript, and 5 cents per one hundred words for each additional copy" and insert "prevailing in the locality where they are employed."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BOARD OF SHORTHAND REPORTING

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4887) to create a Board of Shorthand Reporting, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill S. 1453 be substituted. The bills are identical, except sections 9 and 10, and correspond with the recommendation made by the House Judiciary Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

An act to create a board of shorthand reporting, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established a National Board of Shorthand Reporting (hereinafter referred to as the "Board") to be composed of three members to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The members of the Board, with the exception of the members first to be appointed, shall be holders of certificates issued under the provisions of this act. The members first appointed shall be skilled in the art and practice of shorthand reporting and shall have been actively and continuously engaged as professional shorthand reporters within the United States for at least 5 years preceding their appointments. The members shall hold office for a term of 3 years, except that (1) any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, shall be appointed for the remainder of such term, and (2) the terms of office of the members first taking office after the date of enactment of this act shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of nomination, one at the end of 1 year, one at the end of 2 years, and one at the end of 3 years, after such date. The Board shall elect one of its members as chairman and one as secretary-treasurer, who shall hold their respective offices for 1 year. The Board shall make all necessary rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this act. Any two members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

SEC. 2. Any person who has received from the Board a certificate of his qualifications to practice as a shorthand reporter shall be known and styled as a "Federal certified shorthand reporter", and no other person, and no partnership all of the members of which have not received such certificate, and no corporation shall assume such title or the abbreviation "F. C. S. R.", or any other words, letters, or abbreviations tending to indicate that the person, partnership, or corporation so using the same is a Federal certified shorthand reporter.

SEC. 3. The Board shall grant a certificate as a Federal certified shorthand reporter to any citizen of the United States, or to a person who has duly declared his intention of becoming a citizen, (a) who is over the age of 21 years, is of good moral character, and is a graduate of a high school or has had an equivalent education; and (b) who has, except as provided in section 5 of this act, successfully passed an examination in shorthand reporting under such rules and regulations as the Board may prescribe.

SEC. 4. The Board shall hold regular meetings for the examination of applicants for certificates under this act beginning on the third Monday of June and December of each year, and additional meetings at such times and places as it shall determine but not to exceed one every 3 months. The time and place of holding such examinations shall be advertised in a periodical to be selected by the Board at least 30 days prior to the date of each examination.

SEC. 5. The Board may, in its discretion, waive the examination provided for in this act and issue a certificate as a Federal certified shorthand reporter to any person submitting an application within 1 year after the appointment of the members of the Board (a) who possesses the qualifications set out in section 3, (b) who has been actively engaged in the practice of shorthand reporting for more than 5 years next preceding the date of enactment of this act, and (c) who is competent, in the opinion of the Board, to perform the duties of a Federal certified shorthand reporter.

SEC. 6. The Board may revoke any certificate issued under this act for unprofessional conduct or other sufficient cause after appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing. Said notice shall state the cause for such contemplated revocation, the time and place of such hearing, and shall be mailed to the registered address of the holder of such certificate at least 30 days before such hearing. Each member of the Board shall be empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, or other records concerning any matter within the jurisdiction of the Board.

SEC. 7. Upon the filing of an application for an examination or a certificate under this act the Board shall charge a fee of $25. Should the applicant fail to pass the required examination he shall be entitled to take subsequent examinations after the expiration of 6 months and within 2 years without the payment of an additional fee.

SEC. 8. Each member of the Board shall receive $25 for each day actually employed in the discharge of his official duties and in addition thereto all necessary expenses incurred by them in executing their functions under this act. The compensation and expenses of the members of the Board and the expenses of the Board that are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act shall be paid from the fees collected under section 7: Provided, That such compensation and expenses shall not exceed the amount so collected as fees.

SEC. 9. On and after January 1, 1936, no person shall be employed for shorthand reporting in the judicial or executive branches or by any independent agency of the Government unless said person is the holder of a certificate provided for in this act: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit the temporary employment of a shorthand reporter not holding a certificate, until a reporter holding a certificate shall be available: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any person not employed for the shorthand reporting of such proceedings as are described and defined in section 10 hereof.

SEC. 10. When used in this act the term "shorthand reporting" means the making, by use of symbols or abbreviations, of a verbatim record of any oral testimony, proceeding, hearing, or trial before a court, commission, independent agency of the Government, master, referee, convention, deliberative assembly, or proceedings of like character.

SEC. 11. If after January 1, 1936, any person shall represent himself as having received a certificate as provided for in this act or shall practice as a Federal certified shorthand reporter without having received such certificate, or after having his certificate revoked shall continue to practice as a Federal certified shorthand reporter, or shall use any title or abbreviation that indicates that the person using the same is a Federal certified shorthand reporter, or shall violate any of the provisions of this act, said person shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

SAN CARLOS APACHE INDIANS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2523) authorizing payment to the San Carlos Apache Indians for the lands ceded by them in the agreement of February 25, 1896, ratified by the act of June 10, 1896.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN. I object.

LONGSHOREMEN'S AND HARBOR WORKERS' COMPENSATION ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8293) to amend the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia, Mr. BLAND, and Mr. BACON objected.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I make this request because the committee instructed the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GREGORY], chairman of the subcommittee, to make the request; and the gentleman from Kentucky asked me, if he was not present, to make the request in his behalf.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Reserving the right to object, I have had some correspondence in reference to this matter, and as I understand, the Judiciary Committee said that it might recall the bill for further consideration.

Mr. CELLER. Reserving the right to object, if this request is granted will it take it off the calendar?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. Does not the gentleman think it was the purpose of Mr. GREGORY to have it passed over without prejudice?

Mr. MICHENER. It was not; the Judiciary Committee took action and directed the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GREGORY] to make a unanimous-consent request that the bill be recommitted to the committee, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GREGORY] asked me to do this if he was not present.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

CLAIMANTS UNDER WAR MINERALS RELIEF ACT

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1567) to amend section 5 of the act of March 2, 1919, generally known as the War Minerals Relief Act.

The SPEAKER. This bill requires three objections.

Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. BACON, and Mr. DONDERO objected.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I think there is some misunderstanding about this bill. I feel sure that the gentlemen who object do not understand the bill.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Speaker, may I explain the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, others have objected to the bill besides me; but as far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to withdraw the objection for the time being to allow the lady from Arizona to speak.

The SPEAKER. Does anyone else object?

Mr. DONDERO and Mr. BACON withheld their objection.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Speaker, this bill has no connection whatever with the Georgia war minerals relief bill. It is a bill to take care of a group of claimants, constituting 300 in number, who have not been cared for as the larger corporations were under the War Minerals Act. We have received today a statement from the Department explaining that they have actually found in their records over 50 percent of the notices that would have enabled these 300 miners to take the same advantage that the corporations took. They have found these letters returned, in their files, and do not now object to the passing of this bill, which involves $75,000, to be distributed to 300 miners. The bill has already passed the Senate, and I hope those objecting will see its merit and will not object.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. GREENWAY. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is it not true that this bill originally passed 15 years ago?

Mrs. GREENWAY. Not for this group.

Mr. COCHRAN. I think the gentlewoman is mistaken. The report shows it did. And then in 1929 Congress very generously reopened the matter and gave the claimants who had not filed a right to file. Now we are going back again, 6 years afterward, and we are asked to reopen the claims again. Seventy-five thousand dollars is involved in the claims. The Departments are opposed to reopening the claims. Is the gentlewoman in favor of going back and reopening them after they have had a second opportunity to file?

Mr. CRAVENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. GREENWAY. Yes.

Mr. CRAVENS. Mr. Speaker, since the report from the Secretary it has been discovered that practically 183 notices mailed out to these claimants were returned, never having been delivered. The claimants had no notice of their right or opportunity to file their suits.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman must realize that if the Government or a State passes a statute which grants to an individual the right to enter suit under certain conditions the Government or the State is not going to mail out notices to everyone who might have the right to sue under the act.

Mr. CRAVENS. However, they did mail out notices to the claimants, and 183 were returned, because when the act passed out of existence these miners left their work and went elsewhere. They had no further work to do.

Mr. COCHRAN. They are simply attempting to reopen a matter that has been closed on the books of the Government. These people had opportunity in 1919 and again in 1929. I think the Government has been fair.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is so fair-minded that I am sure if he would just let us bring the human equation into this he would not object. Let me read what the War Minerals Relief Commissioner of the Department of the Interior says in a letter received this morning:

The records of this Commission disclose that about one-half the claimants under the original War Minerals Relief Act were notified of their rights under the 1929 amendment to petition the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to review the decisions of the Secretary of the Interior upon questions of law. For the reason that so many letters were returned because of change of address, as shown in the records of the Commission, some former Secretary of the Interior discontinued the sending of further notices—

And so forth. This group of scattered people have no permanent addresses, did not receive the notices, and could not take advantage of the act.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to have the bill go over without prejudice until I can communicate with the Comptroller. I have one letter here from the Comptroller respecting some war-mineral claims already settled that involves a million dollars and more in interest.

Mrs. GREENWAY. But that is not this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. I know it is not, but when are we going to end these matters? If they had not had their day, I would not object, but twice they have had an opportunity to file their claims.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. BACON, and Mr. DONDERO objected.
ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FOUNDING OF PRATTVILLE, ALA.

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 241, to provide for the observance and celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of Prattville, Ala.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts and Mr. WOLCOTT objected.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish the gentlemen would withhold their objections. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] is compelled to be absent today. I also have an interest in this bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

ECONOMIC STUDIES OF FISHERY INDUSTRY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8055, to provide for economic studies of the fishery industry, market news service, and orderly marketing of fishery products, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

GOVERNMENT OF MILITARY AND NAVAL FORCES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2253, to make better provision for the government of the military and naval forces of the United States by the suppression of attempts to incite the members thereof to disobedience.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MAVERICK, Mr. LUCKEY, Mr. BIERMANN, Mr. PIERCE, Mr. MONAGHAN, and Mr. SAUTHOFF objected.

LIMITATIONS ON PROSECUTIONS BY COURT MARTIAL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4454, to amend the Articles of War to provide a 10-year period of limitations on prosecutions by court martial for offenses involving frauds against the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts, Mr. SNELL, Mr. RICH, and Mr. KINZER objected.

EVERGLADES NATIONAL PARK, FLA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8741, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of the Everglades National Park in the State of Florida, and for other purposes", approved May 30, 1934.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH, Mr. SNELL, Mr. BACON, Mr. WOLCOTT, and Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts objected.

VENDING STANDS IN FEDERAL BUILDINGS FOR BLIND PERSONS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4688, to authorize the operation of stands in Federal buildings by blind persons, to enlarge the economic opportunities of the blind, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of providing blind citizens of the United States with remunerative employment, enlarging the economic opportunities of the blind, and stimulating the blind to greater efforts in striving to make themselves self-supporting, all Federal buildings having suitable locations for stands are hereby required to be open for operation of vending stands therein by blind persons licensed by the Office of Education, and the Office of Education in the Department of the Interior, subject to the direction of the Commissioner of Education and such rules and regulations as he may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, prescribe, shall (1) make surveys of concession-stand opportunities for blind persons in Federal and other buildings in the United States; (2) make surveys throughout the United States of industries with a view to obtaining information that will assist blind persons to obtain employment; (3) make available to the public, and especially to persons and organizations engaged in work for the blind, all information obtained as a result of such surveys; (4) issue licenses to blind persons who are citizens of the United States and 21 years of age or over for the operation of vending stands in Federal buildings for the vending of newspapers, periodicals, candies, tobacco products, and such other articles as may be approved for each building by the custodian thereof and by the Commissioner, and (5) take such steps as may be necessary and proper to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. (a) The Office of Education shall, in issuing each such license for the operation of a vending stand, give preference to blind persons who are in need of employment and have resided for at least 1 year prior thereto in the State in which such stand is to be located. Each such license shall be issued for an indefinite period but may be terminated by the Commissioner when he is satisfied that the stand is not being operated in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by him. Each such license shall be subject to the approval of the Federal agency having charge of the building in which the stand is located. Such licenses shall be issued only to applicants who are blind within the meaning of this act but are able, in spite of such infirmity, to operate such stands.

(b) The Office of Education is authorized, with the approval of the Federal agency having charge of the building in which the stand is to be located, to select a location for the stand.

SEC. 3. The Office of Education is authorized to purchase stand equipment out of funds hereinafter authorized to be appropriated, and, subject to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to lend such stand equipment to the various State commissions for the blind, and in States in which no State commission for the blind is in existence, the Commissioner shall designate a responsible private agency or agencies which will agree to cooperate with the Commissioner as provided in section 4 of this act.

SEC. 4. A State commission for the blind or an agency designated by the Commissioner shall, in order to obtain such stand equipment, (1) agree to supply such stand equipment without charge to blind persons who are licensed by the Commissioner to operate a vending stand in the Federal buildings in such State, and to other blind persons who are qualified to operate stands in other buildings in such State and who are in need of employment; (2) agree to cooperate with the Commissioner and the division of rehabilitation of such State, in training, placing, and supervising blind persons; (3) lend such funds as may be necessary to enable the blind persons operating such stands in such State to purchase an original stock of supplies to be vended therefrom; and (4) agree to keep such stand equipment in repair.

SEC. 5. The Commissioner is authorized to cooperate with the State boards for rehabilitation of handicapped persons, established by the several States pursuant to the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment", approved June 2, 1920, as amended and supplemented, in carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. (a) The Commissioner is authorized to make such expenditures out of any money appropriated therefor (including expenditures for personal services and rent at the seat of government and elsewhere, books of reference and periodicals, for printing and binding, and for traveling expenses) as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

(b) The Commissioner shall, in employing such additional personnel as may be necessary, give preference to blind persons who are capable of discharging the required duties.

SEC. 7. As used in this act—

(a) The term "United States" includes the several States, Territories, and possessions of the United States, and the District of Columbia.

(b) The term "blind person" means a person (1) having not more than 10-percent visual acuity in the better eye with correction, or (2) whose vision is so impaired that regular employment cannot be obtained due to this infirmity; and such blindness shall be certified by a duly licensed ophthalmologist.

(c) The term "State commission for the blind" means a commission established under authority of the State and engaged primarily in work for the blind.

(d) The term "private agency" means any organization, other than a State commission for the blind, engaged primarily in work for the blind.

(e) The term "State" means a State, Territory, possession, or the District of Columbia.

SEC. 8. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of this act.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I offer certain clarifying amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANDOLPH: Strike out beginning on page 1, line 3, down to and including line 10, on page 4, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That for the purpose of providing blind persons with remunerative employment, enlarging the economic opportunities of the blind, and stimulating the blind to greater efforts in striving to make themselves self-supporting, all Federal buildings having suitable locations for vending stands are hereby authorized to be made available for operation of such stands therein by blind persons licensed under the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 2. (a) The Office of Education in the Department of the Interior, subject to the direction of the Commissioner of Education and such rules and regulations as he may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, prescribe, shall—

"(1) Make surveys of concession-stand opportunities for blind persons in Federal and other buildings in the United States;

"(2) Make surveys throughout the United States of industries with a view to obtaining information that will assist blind persons to obtain employment;

"(3) Make available to the public, and especially to persons and organizations engaged in work for the blind, information obtained as a result of such surveys;

"(4) Designate, as provided in section 4 of this act, the State commission for the blind in each State, or, in any State in which there is no such commission, some other public agency to issue licenses to blind persons who are citizens of the United States and at least 21 years of age for the operating of vending stands in Federal and other buildings in such State for the vending of newspapers, periodicals, confections, tobacco products, and such other articles as may be approved for each building by the custodian thereof and the State licensing agency; and

"(5) Take such other steps as may be necessary and proper to carry out the provisions of this act.

"(b) The State licensing agency shall, in issuing each such license for the operation of a vending stand, give preference to blind persons who are in need of employment and have resided for at least 1 year in the State in which such stand is to be located. Each such license shall be issued for an indefinite period but may be terminated by the State licensing agency if it is satisfied that the stand is not being operated in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by such licensing agency. Each such license for the operation of a vending stand in a Federal building shall be subject to the approval of the Federal agency having charge of the building in which the stand is located. Such licenses shall be issued only to applicants who are blind within the meaning of this act but are able, in spite of such infirmity, to operate such stands.

"(c) The State licensing agency designated by the Office of Education is authorized, with the approval of the custodian having charge of the building in which the vending stand is to be located, to select a location for such stand and the type of stand to be provided.

"SEC. 3. (a) Subject to such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Education, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may prescribe, the Office of Education is authorized—

"(1) To purchase vending-stand equipment for use in Federal buildings. Such equipment shall be purchased on requisition of the custodian of the Federal building in which the stand is to be placed and shall thereafter remain in his custody and be used for the purposes specified in this act; and

"(2) To purchase vending-stand equipment for use in all other buildings where vending-stand concessions for blind persons have been obtained by the State licensing agencies designated by the Office of Education. Such equipment shall be purchased on requisition of such licensing agencies and loaned to such State licensing agencies under the conditions set forth in section 4 of this act.

"(b) All stand equipment purchased under the provisions of subsection (a) of this section shall be made available, without charge, for the use of blind persons licensed under the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 4. (a). A State commission for the blind or other State agency desiring to be designated as the agency for licensing blind persons for the operation of vending stands and desiring to secure vending-stand equipment as provided in this act shall, with the approval of the Governor of the State, make application to the Commissioner of Education and agree—

"(1) To cooperate with the Commissioner of Education and with the division of vocational rehabilitation of such State in training, placing, and supervising blind persons;

"(2) To provide through loans, gift, or otherwise, for each blind person licensed to operate a stand, an adequate initial stock of suitable articles to be vended therefrom; and

"(3) To keep such stand equipment in other than Federal buildings in repair."

Page 5, line 4, before the period, insert a comma and the following: "and at least 50 percent of such additional personnel shall be blind persons."

Page 5, strike out lines 9 to 14, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The term 'blind person' means a person having not more than 10 percent visual acuity in the better eye with correction. Such blindness shall be certified by a duly licensed ophthalmologist."

Page 5, line 21, strike out the letter "e" in the parentheses and insert in lieu thereof the letter "d."

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, these amendments are rather long and I wonder if the gentleman will give us some explanation of how they affect the bill? It appears to me that they create a new bill.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The clarifying amendments are drawn up with the approval and desire of the Office of Education of the Department of the Interior, and instead of the legislation being mandatory the word "required" is changed to read "authorized" throughout. The bill remains with its features of self-help for deserving blind, a survey of industry to show opportunities for employment of the blind.

Mr. McLEAN. They still allow discretion in the Department?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes.

Mr. McLEAN. As to when, where, and how the stands will be placed?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes. I might say further the custodian of the building, of course, must give his O. K. In other words, there must be approval of the Federal agency having charge of the building in which the stand is located.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I understand that was the objection to the bill. Otherwise the Rules Committee had considered hearing the bill, and possibly reporting out a rule for it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is right. It comes here with the unanimous approval of the House Committee on Labor, and the support of practically all agencies for aid to the blind. The bill provides a common-sense method of aiding this deserving group to help themselves.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SAN JUAN NATIONAL MONUMENT FOR PUERTO RICO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7931, to establish the San Juan National Monument, P. R., and for other purposes.

Mr. COSTELLO, Mr. CLARK of Idaho, and Mr. McLEAN objected.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION, PARIS, FRANCE, 1937

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 305, accepting the invitation of the Government of France to the United States to participate in the International Exposition of Paris—Art and Technique in Modern Life, to be held at Paris, France, in 1937.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Are there further objections?

There being no further objections, the Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the invitation extended by the Government of France to the United States to participate in the International Exposition of Paris—Art and Technique in Modern Life, to be held at Paris, France, in 1937, is hereby accepted.

SEC. 2. The President is authorized to appoint a commissioner general to represent the United States in the exposition, who will serve in this capacity without compensation. The President is further authorized to designate upon the nomination of the Secretary of State a permanent Government official as commissioner, who while on this detail shall serve without additional compensation. The expenses of the commissioner general and the commissioner and such staffs as they may require will be met out of the funds provided for the purposes of the Government participation in the exposition. Their duties shall be prescribed by the Secretary of State and shall include arrangements for providing and allotting space for exhibitors who may be willing to ship exhibits to the exposition. All arrangements with regard to such exhibit space to be provided for American exhibitors shall be made between the exposition authorities and the commissioner general, or, in the event he should delegate the authority, the commissioner. All arrangements made by exhibitors for space not provided by themselves, but made available through arrangements carried on by the commissioner general or commissioner, shall be with the latter two officials. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of State to indicate to the commissioner general and the commissioner appropriate methods of interesting possible American exhibitors in the exposition. The other departments of the Government are authorized and directed to cooperate with these officers when requested.

SEC. 3. The commissioner general and the commissioner may employ such clerks, stenographers, and other assistants as may be necessary and fix their reasonable compensation without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; purchase such material, contract for such labor and other services without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5), and exercise such powers as are delegated to them by this act, and in order to facilitate the functioning of their officers may subdelegate their powers (authorized or delegated) to such officers and employees as may be deemed advisable.

SEC. 4. In order to defray the expenses of representation of the United States at this exposition, including personal services; transportation of things; travel and subsistence expenses; rent; printing and binding; official cards; entertainment; hire, maintenance and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; and such other expenses as may be necessary in the opinion of the Secretary of State to carry out the purposes of this act, the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to remain available until expended. All expenditure shall be subject to approval by the Secretary of State and payable upon his certification, provided that he is authorized in his discretion to delegate this authority to the commissioner general and/or the commissioner. Such expenditures shall not be subject to the provisions of any law regulating or limiting the expenditure of public money other than this act, but this provision shall not be construed to waive the submission of accounts and vouchers to the General Accounting Office for audit, or permit any indebtedness to be incurred in excess of the amount authorized to be appropriated.

SEC. 5. The heads of the various executive departments and independent offices and establishments of the Government are authorized to assist the commissioner general and the commissioner in the procurement, installation, and display of exhibits; to lend to the International Exposition of Paris—Art and Technique in Modern Life, with the knowledge and consent of the commissioner general and the commissioner, such articles, specimens, and exhibits which the commissioner shall deem to be in the interest of the United States to place with the science or other exhibits to be shown under the auspices of the exposition management; to contract for such labor or other services as shall be authorized by the commissioner general or commissioner, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5); and to designate officials or employees of their departments or branches to assist the commissioner general and the commissioner.

SEC. 6. The commissioner general and the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of State, may receive from any source contributions to aid in carrying out the general purpose of this act, but the same shall be expended and accounted for in the same manner as any appropriation which may be made under authority of this act. The commissioner general and the commissioner are also authorized to receive contributions of material to aid in carrying out the general purpose of this act, and at the close of the exposition or when the connection of the Government of the United States therewith ceases, under the direction of the Secretary of State, shall dispose of any such portion thereof as may be unused, and account therefor.

SEC. 7. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of State to transmit to Congress within 6 months after the close of the exposition a detailed statement of all expenditures, together with the reports hereinbefore specified and such other reports as he may deem proper, which reports shall be prepared and arranged with a view to concise statement and convenient reference.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 3, line 20, strike out "20,000" and insert "50,000."

On page 3, line 23, after the word "expended", strike out the period and insert "for the purposes of this joint resolution and any unexpended balances shall be covered back into the Treasury of the United States."

On page 4, line 2, strike out the word "and."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZATION FOR EXCHANGE OF LAND BETWEEN WAIANAE CO. AND THE NAVY DEPARTMENT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9999, to authorize an exchange of land between the Waianae Co. and the Navy Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to transfer to the Waianae Co. title to a tract of land, containing an area of 665 acres, more or less, now a part of the United States Naval Radio Station, Lualualei, Oahu, Territory of Hawaii, and comprising the northeast corner of said radio station, in exchange for title to a tract of land, containing an area of 800 acres, more or less, now the property of the Waianae Co. and adjoining the said radio station to the south, and any and all interest the Waianae Co. has in any and all rights-of-way in and through the said naval radio station: Provided, That the President is hereby authorized to transfer to the Territory of Hawaii the land, or any portion thereof, conveyed by the Waianae Co. pursuant to this act, whenever such land, or portion thereof, shall no longer be required for the uses and purposes of the United States Navy.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Hawaii?

There was no objection.

HOURS OF DUTY OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10193, to amend the act to fix hours of duty of postal employees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] justify the Federal Government establishing this policy, setting up an agency which competes with private enterprise in which governmental agency the women employed receive from $4.40 a day to $7.60 a day? It is now desired to cut their hours from 44 down to 40 and to increase their pay 10 percent. Will the gentleman from Buffalo, N. Y., advise us if there is a plant in Buffalo which treats its employees as well as the Government treats these employees?

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that if they are not doing as well, they should. If the gentleman will yield, I will take a few moments to explain the bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MEAD. In the first place, we are not competing with private enterprise, because this branch of the Post Office Department was instituted in 1798. In this equipment shop they sew up torn mail bags, repair mail locks, and do other work of such nature.

The employees we are trying to benefit by this bill, 192 in number, are mostly women, many of them old women. They are the poorest-paid employees in connection with the activities of this shop.

Under the Classification Act the employees of the equipment shop were divided into two classes, and these people got the worst of that deal. They were called per diem employees rather than per annum, which has not accorded them the same security and consideration under subsequent legislation.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit an interruption at this point, the gentleman states they got the worst of the situation. Does the gentleman think it is fair to the people back home to pay this group of employees from $4.40 to $8 a day? Are they not treated pretty well?

Mr. MEAD. I would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the people back home, except as they buy postage, are not paying the salaries of these people by taxation, because the postal salaries in the aggregate are lower today than they were in 1929, 1930, and 1932. In other words, the efficiency of the Postal Service, even though we have restored all the wage cuts and reduced the hours, makes it possible for us to do the same work with fewer employees than used to be the case in the Postal Service.

Mr. RICH. The only reason that seems to be so is because of the devaluation of the gold dollar.

Mr. MEAD. That has nothing to do with it. The efficiency of the Postal Service, even though the workers are not machine mechanics, has increased so rapidly that I really believe the postal employees of today could do the work of two postal employees of 25 or 30 years ago.

The skilled workers at the equipment shop were put on a 40-hour week with full-time pay by the act of March 28, 1934. Our shorter workweek act of last session took care of the per annum employees at the shop in the same manner. But the 192 per diem employees at the shop, through the Comptroller's decision, forfeit a day's pay every week for their reduced workweek under the same legislation.

I merely want to give them what we intended when we passed the 5-day-week bill. There are 192 of these employees, most of them women, and they are not engaged in competition with private enterprise. They sew up the mail bags, and by doing so they save money for the Government. I hope there will be no objection to the bill.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman does not mean to say we could not have this work done at the rate of $4.40 for the smallest ones and $8.80 for the highest ones by private enterprise and make money and pay a tax to the Government? It is all tommyrot.

Mr. MEAD. It was decided as early as 1888, in connection with this activity, that the Government should have an agency or a shop in which to repair mail bags. This department has been associated with the Postal Service for years. Most every agency of the Government has a repair shop; it would be too expensive to dispatch small articles used by a particular agency to a private business shop for repairs, and besides it takes more time, as it would involve advertising for bids, and so forth.

Mr. RICH. I am not trying to kick the mail-bag shop out of existence, but I am thinking of the people back home who have not half as much as these people have. Do not forget that these mail-bag employees have been to see me in Pennsylvania. They all admitted that there was not a person in their own town who received as much as they are getting. Now, two wrongs do not make a right. Why do something here just because we did something to other employees when the people back in our respective districts do not have the same advantage?

Mr. DOBBINS. Replying to the gentleman's statement that private industry could do this work cheaper than this department, may I say this:

Mr. RICH. Well, leave that out of the matter. If these people want to do it, all right.

Mr. DOBBINS. May I give the gentleman this information. This repair shop was established by the Government in 1888, at which time we probably did not have one-third of the postal business we have today. The first year it was established the Government saved $60,000 by having this work done in its own repair shop instead of letting it out at private contract. The Government now has a modern factory building for this work which was built several years ago.

Mr. RICH. I do not have anything against these employees and I do not want to hurt them, but I think we are doing an injustice to the people back in the gentleman's district and in my district if we permit this bill to go through.

Mr. DOBBINS. The gentleman will hurt these employees by uttering just two words, "I object." If the gentleman wishes to do that, then all right.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object. It does not make any difference about that, and I am not trying to hurt any Government employees.

VOLUNTEER OFFICERS AND SOLDIERS IN THE WAR WITH SPAIN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9472, for the relief of officers and soldiers of the volunteer service of the United States mustered into service for the War with Spain and who were held in service in the Philippine Islands after the ratification of the treaty of peace, April 11, 1899.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will someone inform us whether or not this bill has been previously vetoed?

Mr. GUYER. Yes; I think it has been.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all officers and soldiers of the volunteer service of the United States mustered into service for the War with Spain who were held to service in the Philippine Islands for service in the Philippine Insurrection after April 11, 1899, and after the conclusion of peace with the Kingdom of Spain, shall be entitled to the travel pay and allowance for subsistence provided in sections 1289 and 1290, Revised Statutes, as then amended and in effect, as though discharged April 11, 1899, by reason of expiration of enlistment, and appointed or reenlisted April 12, 1899, without deduction of travel pay and subsistence paid such officers or soldiers on final muster out subsequent to April 11, 1899.

Sec. 2. Claims hereunder shall be settled in the General Accounting Office and shall be payable to the officer or soldier, or if the person who rendered the service is dead, then to his widow, children in equal shares (but not to their issue), father, or mother as provided by existing acts relating to the settlement of accounts of deceased officers and soldiers of the Army (34 Stat. 750), but if there is no widow, child, father, or mother at the date of settlement, then no payment on account of the claim shall be made.

Sec. 3. The Comptroller General is authorized and directed to certify to the Congress, pursuant to the provisions of section 2 of the act of July 7, 1884 (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 266), all claims allowed hereunder.

Sec. 4. Applications for the benefits of this act shall be filed within 3 years after the date of its passage.

Sec. 5. Payment to any attorney or agent for such assistance as may be required in the preparation and execution of the necessary papers in any application under this act shall not exceed the sum of $10: Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to attorneys employed by claimants entitled to the benefits of this act who were active in the prosecution of their claim before Congress, to whom a fee of not to exceed 10 percent of the amount found to be due may be allowed. Any person collecting or attempting to collect a greater amount than is herein allowed shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

DISPOSITION OF MATERIAL TO SEA-SCOUT DEPARTMENT OF THE BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9671, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of material to the sea-scout department of the Boy Scouts of America.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to dispose of without charge, except for transportation and delivery, to the sea-scout department of the Boy Scouts of America such obsolete material as may not be needed for the Coast Guard, and such other material as may be spared at prices representing its fair value to the Coast Guard.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 5, strike out "department" and insert "service."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of material to the sea-scout service of the Boy Scouts of America."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT RANDOLPH, MO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10187, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Randolph, Mo.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of the bridge across the Missouri River, at or near Randolph, Mo., authorized to be built by the Kansas City Southern Railway Co., its successors and assigns, by the act of Congress approved May 24, 1928, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved March 1, 1929, May 14, 1930, February 6, 1931, May 6, 1932, January 19, 1933, and April 9, 1934, are hereby further extended 2 and 4 years, respectively, from May 24, 1936.

Sec. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 7, strike out "the act" and insert in lieu thereof "an act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SECTIONS 109 AND 113 OF THE CRIMINAL CODE AND SECTION 190 OF THE REVISED STATUTES OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3453, limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to certain counsel.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That nothing in sections 109 and 113 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States", approved March 4, 1909, as amended (U. S. C., title 18, secs. 198 and 203), or in section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 99), or in any other act of Congress forbidding officers or employees or former officers or employees of the United States from acting as counsel, attorney, or agent for another before any court, department, or branch of the Government, or from receiving or agreeing to receive compensation therefor, shall be deemed to apply to Clarence C. Calhoun, in the event he shall be employed, retained, or appointed by the Attorney General or under authority of the Department of Justice, to assist in the prosecution of litigation arising under the War Risk Insurance Act, as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COAST GUARD STATION, CRESCENT CITY, CALIF.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1398, to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station at or near Crescent City, Calif.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a Coast Guard station on the Pacific coast at or in the vicinity of Crescent City, Calif., in such locality as the Commandant of the Coast Guard may recommend, and appropriations for the establishment and construction thereof are hereby authorized, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "may", strike out the remainder of the bill and insert "recommend."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COAST GUARD, PORT WASHINGTON, WIS.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8370, to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station at Port Washington, Wis.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a Coast Guard station on Lake Michigan at Port Washington, Wis., and appropriations for the establishment and construction thereof are hereby authorized, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 5, after the word "Wisconsin", strike out the remainder of the bill and insert "at such point as the Commandant of the Coast Guard may recommend."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

PACIFIC OCEAN FISHERIES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3013, to provide for the construction and operation of a vessel for use in research work with respect to Pacific Ocean fisheries.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say that I am going to insist upon my objection, but I will withhold it for the purpose of allowing the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to make a statement about the measure. This is an important bill. It provides a fisheries' research vessel for the Pacific coast. A similar vessel was provided for the Atlantic coast by legislation enacted at the last Congress. The fisheries on the Pacific coast are valued at about $50,000,000, and recently testimony was taken before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries with respect to the condition of the sardine or pilchard industry. The salmon industry is also involved. There is serious need of a research vessel to make this study and to determine just whether depletion is occurring or not. These people are entitled to this. They have been asking for it a long time and I hope the bill may go through.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentleman that we have just defeated a bill that would allow the Bureau to carry on research in other matters. This bill authorizes an appropriation of $500,000 and is not in accord with the financial program of the President.

Mr. BLAND. That is true.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And I am simply coming to the defense of the President when I object to this bill.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. I wish to say to the gentleman that this bill vitally affects the Pacific coast and particularly my town. The fishermen from San Pedro in the tuna industry go at least 2,000 miles away from home, down to Galapagos Islands on the coast of Ecuador. The salmon, the tuna, and the sardine industry are vitally affected. There is continual controversy between the fish and game commission of the State of California and the fishermen about the depletion or the supply of these various fishes. It is very necessary that we have some authority to make this investigation. The Bureau of Fisheries has approved the bill. Other countries are doing similar work. England, for instance, has five of these research vessels; Scotland has three, Ireland has one, Denmark has three, and even Persia has one, while France also has three. There is no other way by which we can get an accurate opinion of the supply of these fish.

The bill simply authorizes a boat, such as has already been provided on the Atlantic coast, and I wish the gentleman would waive his objection and give us an opportunity on the Pacific Coast to have this boat, so that the fishing industry there may have the same advantage as the fishing industry on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That statement might go to the merits of this whole matter, but here is a bill that comes in here and you ask us to authorize an appropriation of $500,000 by unanimous consent. Now, it is somewhat ironical that when the gentlemen on your side of the aisle want to disagree with the President they do so with impunity, but when they want to stick with the President they come in and say, "Follow our great leader." In this instance, for the protection of the Budget, whether the President recommends it or not, I am compelled to object, and I am going to object, because I do not think we have any moral right to pass a bill which authorizes an appropriation of $500,000 for the purchase of a vessel in opposition to the Director of the Budget and the President himself; and if you gentlemen over there do not want to go along with your President to the extent of protecting him and his Budget, you will find plenty of support on this side when it comes to protecting the credit of the United States, and for this reason I object.

Mr. COLDEN. I may say to the gentleman that we are following the President better than the gentleman who is objecting to this bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am sure that is true. I object, Mr. Speaker.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE CURRENT RIVER AT POWDER MILL FORD, MO.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 11073) granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Missouri to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Current River at or near Powder Mill Ford on route no. Missouri 106, Shannon County, Mo.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State Highway Commission of Missouri to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Current River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Powder Mill Ford on route no.

Missouri 106, in Shannon County, Mo., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

Sec. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TIMBER RIGHTS ON THE GIGLING MILITARY RESERVATION, CALIF.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 10182) to authorize the Secretary of War to acquire the timber rights on the Gigling Military Reservation (now designated as Camp Ord), in California.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, all the rights and interests which were reserved by the former owners on conveyance to the United States of the land embraced in the military reservation known as the Gigling Military Reservation (now designated as Camp Ord), in Monterey County, Calif., relative to the cutting of timber thereon and the preparation and removal of forest products, and to terminate all easements, rights, and privileges insofar as they have application to timber operations for private benefit; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $25,000 to carry out the provisions of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TO EXTEND THE PERIOD FOR THE EMIGRATION OF FILIPINOS FROM THE UNITED STATES TO THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 9991) to extend the time for applying for and receiving benefits under the act entitled "An act to provide means by which certain Filipinos can emigrate from the United States", approved July 10, 1935.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act entitled "An act to provide means by which certain Filipinos can emigrate from the United States", approved July 10, 1935, is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 6. No application for the benefits of this act shall be accepted by any officer of the Immigration Service after December 1, 1937; and all benefits under this act shall finally terminate on December 31, 1937, unless the journey has been started on or before that date, in which case the journey to Manila shall be completed."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONFIRMING BY PATENT THE TITLE TO LOTS IN PENSACOLA, FLA.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2737) extending and continuing to January 12, 1936, the provisions of the act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to determine and confirm by patent in the nature of a deed of quitclaim the title to lots in the city of Pensacola, Fla.," approved January 12, 1925.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to determine and confirm by patent in the nature of a deed of quitclaim the title to lots in the city of Pensacola, Fla.," approved January 12, 1925, are hereby extended and continued to January 12, 1936: Provided, That there be paid to the register of the district land office a fee of $5 for each lot described in an application for a deed of quitclaim under such act, which fee shall be considered earned, irrespective of the action taken on the application.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 1, strike out "register of the district land office" and insert "Commissioner of the General Land Office."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended.

RECOINAGE OF 50-CENT PIECES FOR EXPOSITION AT SAN DIEGO, CALIF.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 9673) to authorize the recoinage of 50-cent pieces in connection with the California-Pacific International Exposition to be held in San Diego, Calif., in 1936.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I wish the gentleman would explain wherein this is going to be done without cost to the Government. I have in mind that this bill is merely asking cooperation of the Government in advertising the San Diego exposition. I understand that the surplus minted last year was returned to the Treasury and minted up into new coin.

The question I wish to ask is, Will the recoinage be confined to coins already coined or is it directing new 50-cent pieces to be coined?

Mr. BURNHAM. This bill merely calls for reminting of the 50-cent pieces coined last year bearing date 1935, which the exposition paid for. It costs the Government not one cent. Two hundred and fifty thousand were coined, and the exposition people took them all and paid for them. Due to the fact that they were received so late and the short time that the exposition was in existence thereafter they were not all disposed of. Those remaining bearing the date 1935 we are asking to have reminted, bearing the date 1936, the expense of which the exposition pays. There will be no cost to the Government whatsoever.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, to indicate the interest of the Government of the United States in the continuation of the California-Pacific International Exposition at San Diego, Calif., for the year 1936, the Director of the Mint is authorized to receive from the California-Pacific International Exposition Co., or its duly authorized agent, not to exceed 180,000 silver 50-cent pieces heretofore coined under authority of an act of Congress approved May 3, 1935, and recoin the same, under the same terms and conditions as contained in said act, bearing date 1936.

SEC. 2. The United States shall not be subject to the expense of making preparations for this recoinage, and such coins shall be issued only to California-Pacific International Exposition Co., or its duly authorized agent, which may dispose of the same at par or at a premium: Provided, That all proceeds therefrom shall be used in furtherance of the California-Pacific International projects.

SEC. 3. That all laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of same; regulating and guarding the process of coining; providing for the purchase of material, and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins; for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting; for security of the coin; or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the recoinage herein directed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

AREAS BETWEEN SHORES AND BULKHEAD LINE IN RIVERS, ETC.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 3071) providing for the placing of improvements on the areas between the shore and bulkhead lines in rivers and harbors.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. In many instances the States have provided by law for the ownership or title of lands between the meandering lines, which are supposed to be the low-water mark, and the actual low water. It is problematical whether this bill recognizes the State laws in that respect or whether or not we are granting to the Secretary of War the right to authorize the use of the land in some other manner than is provided by the State law.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, that has already been worked out by the engineers of the War Department with the various States where this will have effect. This bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and was recommended by the Chief of Engineers and by those who studied the matter for the last 2 or 3 years.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In the interpretation of the act, is it the gentleman's opinion that as to the lands which I think are called relicited lands, the title to which usually vests in the State, under this bill the State is fully protected in its right to exercise jurisdiction over those lands.

Mr. PARSONS. Absolutely; and it will not be taken without due process of law and agreement with the owners.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That where bulkhead lines have been or may be established in or along navigable waters except the inland waterways of the United States in accordance with the provisions of section 11 of the River and Harbor Act of March 3, 1899, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion and on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, grant authority to the owners of shore lands and the submerged lands in front thereof to fill in and erect structures on the whole or any part of the area between ordinary high-water line on the shore and the established bulkhead line. When such authority has been granted by the Secretary of War and availed of by the grantee, the said area shall be deemed to be exempt from any servitude in favor of the Federal Government for the benefit of navigation and, if required and taken thereafter by the Government for navigation purposes, the owners thereof shall be entitled to just compensation for the improvement and structures made and erected in pursuance of such authorization.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "waters", strike out "except the inland waterways."

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

EXTENDING BENEFITS OF EMERGENCY OFFICERS' RETIREMENT TO CERTAIN PROVISIONAL OFFICERS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2265) extending the benefits of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928, to provisional officers of the Regular Establishment who served during the World War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, being advised that certain groups propose through their voice on this floor to propose an amendment to this bill that might affect very materially its operation, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be allowed to go over without prejudice so that the committee may have a chance to consider the proposed amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the bill conform with the suggestion of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs in reference to having Public Act No. 2 apply to certain cases that might come up so that they will all be on an equal footing?

Mr. McSWAIN. I am not prepared to say just what would be the effect of it. I confess certain lack of information as to the details of the operation of it, but I am sure that the amendment proposed would very materially modify the operation of the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman not think he ought to give us some information in reference to the question of expense and whether we are giving special recognition to some that will be denied others?

Mr. McSWAIN. That is why I want it to go over.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. I was going to offer an amendment. The purpose of the amendment was to eliminate the "causative factor" in reference to emergency officers. In no way does it effect existing law with reference to those whose injuries are presumptively service-connected. It does not go that far. In other words, the "causative-factor rule" has worked extreme hardship on those who contracted disability from sickness in actual service, and it places the emergency officer in this respect in the same category as it does the Regular Army officer. The proposed amendment has no intention of affecting those whose injury is presumptively service-connected, but to change the "causative-factor rule" with reference to those whose condition are directly service-connected.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. THOMASON. I do not profess to know the merits of the amendment the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] proposes to offer when the bill is heard on the floor, but it occurs to me that it would probably change the entire text and purpose of this bill. This bill as introduced and as passed by the Senate is to take care of a very few provisional officers who rendered distinguished service in the World War. They were among the very first who went to France, and if I understand the report correctly, there are only 10 provisional officers affected, and those men at the present time have no status at all relative to financial benefits which accrue to other officers. They cannot come under the retirement act or avail themselves of the bonus, and yet those fine young lieutenants who were taken in as provisional officers, and who believed they were entitled to the same benefits and privileges as other officers are being denied justice. I am not saying that I am against the suggested McCormack amendment, but we ought not in this bill reopen the whole field concerning emergency officers, for that is a big subject and very controversial. It only means delay and complications. I hope nobody will now object and let us pass on this bill on its own merit. I know some provisional officers in my own district who have been denied justice for years. I have specially in mind Capt. Charles Chaffee, of El Paso, who has a splendid record, and is entitled to relief. I propose to offer an amendment myself, but it is germane and largely corrective. I realize that if the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. McSWAIN] objects there is nothing under the rules that I can do to stop it.

I fear the McCormack amendment will change the entire purpose of the bill and probably defeat it. The War Department has made an adverse report. I am very hopeful that this bill will be promptly reported back to this House and these few provisional officers who today have no status at all will be given at least some measure of justice. I insist that the amendment be considered by the Committee on Military Affairs at its regular meeting tomorrow, so that bill will be sure to come up again on next Consent Calendar day.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McSWAIN. I yield, but this really is neither the time nor the place to debate it.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the gentleman has taken the proper course, and I am in complete agreement with what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] says. I am for this bill. On the other hand, if the committee can consider this question, the time to do it is while this bill is pending, and I think the chairman of the committee has made a very excellent suggestion, which in no way interferes with this bill.

Mr. THOMASON. Do I understand the bill is not being recommitted?

Mr. McSWAIN. Oh, no.

Mr. THOMASON. It is simply going over without prejudice?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes. I am for this bill myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] that the bill go over without prejudice?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, is it the intention of the gentleman to have informal hearings on the bill?

Mr. McSWAIN. It is our intention to give whatever consideration we decide may be necessary in order to be prepared to advise the House as to what to do with the amendment which will be proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. WOLCOTT. There seems to be need for the legislation and also the proposed amendment. I was wondering if the gentleman had in mind at the present time calling his committee together and considering the proposition.

Mr. McSWAIN. The committee will meet tomorrow and take whatever action it decides to take; yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN]?

There was no objection.

COINAGE OF 50-CENT PIECES COMMEMORATING TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF FOUNDING OF NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10489, to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding and settlement of the city of New Rochelle, N. Y.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in commemoration of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the city of New Rochelle, N. Y., there shall be coined by the Director of the Mint 20,000 silver 50-cent pieces, such coins to be of standard size, weight, and fineness of a special appropriate design to be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the models for master dies or other preparations for this coinage.

Sec. 2. Coins shall be issued at par, and only upon the request of the committee, person, or persons duly authorized by the mayor of the city of New Rochelle, N. Y.

Sec. 3. Such coins may be disposed of at par or at a premium by the committee, person, or persons duly authorized in section 2, and all proceeds shall be used in furtherance of the commemoration of the founding of the city of New Rochelle, N. Y.

Sec. 4. All laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same; regulating and guarding the process of coinage; providing for the purchase of material, and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins; for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting; for the security of the coin; or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein directed.

Sec. 5. The coins authorized herein shall be issued in such numbers, and at such times as they may be requested by the committee, person, or persons duly authorized by said mayor of New Rochelle, N. Y., and only upon payment to the United States of the face value of such coins.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "twenty" and insert "twenty-five."

Page 2, line 5, strike out the words "the committee, person, or persons" and insert in lieu thereof "a committee of not less than three persons."

Page 2, line 9, strike out the words "person, or persons."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION OF MODEL BASIN ESTABLISHMENT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10135, to authorize the construction of a model basin establishment, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to acquire 55 acres of land, more or less, in the vicinity of Cabin John, Md., and to construct thereon a model basin establishment, with buildings and appliances, in which the Bureau of Construction and Repair of the Navy Department shall conduct the work of investigating and determining the most suitable and desirable shapes and forms to be adopted for United States vessels, including aircraft and the investigation of other problems of ship design, at a cost not to exceed $3,500,000: Provided, That upon the authorization of the Secretary of the Navy experiments may be made at this establishment for private parties, who shall defray the cost thereof under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may from time to time prescribe: Provided further, That the results of such private experiments shall be regarded as confidential and shall not be divulged without the consent of such private parties, except that the right is reserved to the Secretary of the Navy to use data so obtained for governmental purposes, subject to the patent laws of the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the words "55 acres of land, more or less, in the vicinity of Cabin John, Md." and insert in lieu thereof "a site at a cost not to exceed $100,000 in the vicinity of Washington, D. C."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TERMS OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT AT WILKES-BARRE, PA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11098, to provide for terms of the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania to be held at Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That terms of the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania shall be held at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., on the second Monday of April and second Monday of September of each year: Provided, however, That all writs, precepts, and processes shall be returnable to the terms at Scranton and all court papers shall be kept in the clerk's office at Scranton unless otherwise specially ordered by the court, and the terms at Scranton shall not be terminated or affected by the terms herein provided for at Wilkes-Barre: Provided further, That this authority shall continue only during such time as suitable accommodations for holding court at Wilkes-Barre are furnished free of expense to the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DEPORTING CERTAIN ALIENS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11040, to deport certain aliens who secured preference-quota or non-quota visas through fraud by contracting marriage solely to expedite entry into the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. I may say I am only doing this at the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], who is somewhat interested in the bill and has requested that I do this in order that he may discuss it with the lady from New York [Mrs. O'DAY] before the next call of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION RECEIPTS FROM OLYMPIC GAMES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11327, to exempt from taxation receipts from the operation of Olympic games if donated to the State of California, the city of Los Angeles, and the county of Los Angeles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from California why the Federal Government should give up its receipts to any subdivision?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. The Federal Government is not really giving up anything, as appears from the report, page 2, on which appears the following statement from the Treasury Department:

Since the language of the bill is deemed to be merely declaratory of existing exemptions with respect to income and gift taxes, this Department has no objection to its enactment.

In other words, the Treasury Department does not believe there would be any tax, either income, gift, or inheritance, levied against this corporation which conducted the Olympic games in California.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does it have anything to do with the admissions tax?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. It has nothing to do with the admissions tax whatsoever. The admissions tax was paid in every case on every admission which was purchased on the occasion of the Olympic games held in Los Angeles.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. They must be expecting some profit or the bill would not direct the profit be turned over to the State and county.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. The Olympiad Committee, Inc., did not expect to make a profit. It was organized by some of our very civic-minded men, and we never anticipated any profit. The State of California issued $1,000,000 of bonds to help defray the expenses.

A part of this—about $1,250,000—we want to repay to the State of California, the $1,000,000 in anticipation of the due date of these bonds; and we want to repay to the city and county of Los Angeles, which also made contributions toward the holding of these games, some moneys they paid us.

As the gentleman will note from the letter of the Treasury Department, attention is called by the Bureau of Internal Revenue to the fact that a decision of the Supreme Court of California has been rendered which holds that the surplus money from the operation of the Olympic games belongs to the Tenth Olympiad Committee; that the committee is ready to dissolve or dispose of its surplus; and that technically its members are entitled to the whole surplus, share and share alike, as a liquidating distribution but that the members have waived their rights in favor of gifts of such surplus by the committee of the State of California, the city of Los Angeles, and the county of Los Angeles.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Would not the members of this Olympiad Committee be obliged to pay a tax; and are we not giving up the right of the Federal Government to collect that tax?

Mr. BUCK. If the gentleman will yield for a moment, I think I can perhaps explain the situation to his satisfaction.

The American Olympic Association endeavored to collect any surplus moneys and prevent them from being paid back to the incorporators of the Tenth Olympiad Committee. The Tenth Olympiad Committee was a voluntary, non-profit organization composed of certain representative gentlemen of California. Money was loaned to this committee by the State of California and by the city and county of Los Angeles. The Supreme Court on March 21, 1935, decided that the American Olympic Association had no right to these funds; that they belonged to the Tenth Olympiad Committee. This committee is a nonprofit organization.

The Treasury Department at the present time feels that there is no tax coming from these people as individuals growing out of these Olympic games; but they feel there might be some adverse ruling in the future; so we are asking Congress to pass a declaratory statute that such money as they received in transit and pass over to the State of California and to the city and county of Los Angeles be declared exempt from taxation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There is no urgency about the matter; we can let it go over for another 2 weeks.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERRY VICTORY MEMORIAL, PUT IN BAY, OHIO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8474, to provide for the creation of the Perry's Victory and International Peace Memorial National Monument on Put in Bay, South Bass Island, in the State of Ohio, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hesitate to object to this bill. I am somewhat acquainted with this monument and I think it should be perpetuated. The monument and the park have been there for many years.

I am of the opinion this is just a transfer of the obligation to maintain the park and the monument to the Federal Government.

There is one thing, however, which does compel me to object to the bill in its present form, and that is section 5, which provides that the employees of the Perry Victory Memorial Commission may be employed without regard to the civil-service laws. In order that the committee may take into consideration my objection, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF COSATOT RIVER, ARK.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9235, to provide for a preliminary examination and survey of the Cosatot River in Sevier County, Ark., to determine the feasibility of cleaning out the channel and leveeing the river and the cost of such improvements with a view to the controlling of floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination and survey to be made of the Cosatot River in Sevier County, Ark., to determine the feasibility of cleaning out the channel and leveeing the river, with a view to the control of floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the control of floods of the Mississippi River, and the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

With the following committee amendment:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to provide for a preliminary examination of the Cosatot River in Sevier County, Ark., to determine the feasibility of cleaning out the channel and leveeing the river and the cost of such improvements with a view to the controlling of floods."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF RED AND LITTLE RIVERS, ARK.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9236, to authorize a preliminary examination and survey of the Red and Little Rivers, Ark., insofar as Red River affects Little River County, Ark., and insofar as Little River affects Little River and Sevier Counties, Ark., to determine the feasibility of leveeing Little River and the cost of such improvement, and also the estimated cost of repairing and strengthening the levee on Red River in Little River County, with a view to the controlling of floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination and survey to be made of the Red and Little Rivers, Ark., insofar as Little River affects Little River and Sevier Counties, Ark., to determine the feasibility of leveeing Little River and the cost of such improvement, and also the estimated cost of repairing and strengthening the levee on Red River in Little River County, with a view to the control of floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the control of floods of the Mississippi River and the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, and the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

With the following committee amendment:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to authorize a preliminary examination of the Red and Little Rivers, Ark., insofar as Red River affects Little River County, Ark., and insofar as Little River affects Little River and Sevier Counties, Ark., to determine the feasibility of leveeing Little River and the cost of such improvement, and also the estimated cost of repairing and strengthening the levee on Red River in Little River County, with a view to the controlling of floods."

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF LITTLE MISSOURI RIVER, ARK.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9249, to provide for a preliminary examination and survey of the Little Missouri River in Pike County, Ark., to determine the feasibility of cleaning out the channel and leveeing the river and the cost of such improvements, with a view to the controlling of floods.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire how much money is being expended for all these different surveys?

Mr. CRAVENS. This bill does not provide for a survey.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am not referring particularly to this bill. I am taking this opportunity, however, to find out how much money is being expended for all these different surveys. Can the gentleman throw any light on that inquiry?

Mr. TERRY. These are not my bills, but I can answer the question in a general way.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is what I want the gentleman to do. I am asking for information.

Mr. TERRY. When one of these bills is passed calling for an examination but not a survey the practice is for the district engineers' office having charge of that area to send one or more of their engineers into the area affected. They make an informal examination; and if they think there is anything worth while, they make a report to the Rivers and Harbors Board of Engineers in Washington. Then that Board takes the matter up further.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Then there is not a great amount involved in any of these preliminary surveys?

Mr. TERRY. It is a preliminary examination by the local engineers' office, that is all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination and survey to be made of the Little Missouri River in Pike County, Ark., to determine the feasibility of cleaning out the channel and leveeing the river and the cost of such improvement with a view to the control of floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the control of floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examination, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

With the following committee amendment:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to provide for a preliminary examination of the Little Missouri River in Pike County, Ark., to determine the feasibility of cleaning out the channel and leveeing the river and the cost of such improvements with a view to the controlling of floods."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF THE PETIT JEAN RIVER, ARK.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9250, to provide for a preliminary examination and survey of the Petit Jean River in Scott and Logan Counties, Ark., to determine the feasibility of cleaning out the channel and leveeing the river and the cost of such improvements with a view to the controlling of floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination and survey to be made of the Petit Jean River in Scott and Logan Counties, Ark., to determine the feasibility of cleaning out the channel and leveeing the river and the cost of such improvement, with a view to the control of floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the control of floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

With the following committee amendment:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to provide for a preliminary examination of the Petit Jean River in Scott and Logan Counties, Ark., to determine the feasibility of cleaning out the channel and leveeing the river and the cost of such improvements, with a view to the controlling of floods."

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF BIG MULBERRY CREEK, ARK.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9267, to provide for a preliminary examination and survey of Big Mulberry Creek, in Crawford County, Ark., from the point where it empties into the Arkansas River up a distance of 8 miles, to determine the feasibility of cleaning out the channel and repairing the banks, and the cost of such improvement, with a view to the controlling of floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination and survey to be made of Big Mulberry Creek, in Crawford County, Ark., from the point where it empties into the Arkansas River up a distance of 8 miles, to determine the feasibility of cleaning out the channel and repairing the banks, and the cost of such improvement, with a view to the control of floods, in accordance with the provision of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the control of floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, and the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for the examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

With the following committee amendment:

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF CADRON CREEK (ARK.)

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9874, authorizing a preliminary examination of Cadron Creek, Ark., a tributary of the Arkansas River.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of Cadron Creek, Ark., a tributary of the Arkansas River, with a view to the control of floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

PERISHABLE AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES ACT, 1930

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8759, to amend the act known as the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930, approved June 10, 1930, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder if the gentleman from California will explain the purpose of this bill?

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, it is provided by the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act that where reparation awards have been made to shippers by the Secretary of Agriculture at any time within 2 years prior to the application for renewal of an old license or for a new license, and they still remain unpaid, the Secretary may refuse to issue a license to the applicant. It was the intention of Congress in adopting the amendment that I proposed 2 years ago to provide that the words "said applicant" should refer back to the words "partnership, association, or corporation" in a previous subsection, but the Solicitor has ruled that the language adopted is not sufficient.

The purpose of this bill is to provide new language in section 2, subsection 4, providing that if the Secretary finds after notice and hearing in case the applicant is a partnership, association, or corporation, that any individual holding any office or, in the case of a partnership, having any interest or share in the applicant, had previously, at any time within 2 years, been responsible in whole or in part for any flagrant or repeated violation of the provisions of section 2, the application may be refused.

The point is that at the present time a man may be engaged in the perishable commodity business as an individual. When his license is about to expire, even though he has repeatedly refused to pay the awards against him or otherwise has violated the act, he may incorporate and receive a new license. The Solicitor has ruled that in the case of a new corporation there is not sufficient language to justify the Secretary in keeping these wicked operators out of the perishable business.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand that one of the purposes of the bill, and perhaps the principal purpose, is that heretofore the wording of the bill has been such that it has compelled the issuance of licenses in some instances where the Secretary of Agriculture would have preferred not to issue the license?

Mr. BUCK. The gentleman's understanding is correct.

Mr. WOLCOTT. This bill is to correct that abuse?

Mr. BUCK. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. With that explanation, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR). Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph 4 of section 2 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act of 1930, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(4) For any commission merchant, dealer, or broker to make, for a fraudulent purpose, any false or misleading statement in connection with any transaction involving any perishable agricultural commodity which is received in interstate or foreign commerce by such commission merchant, or bought or sold, or contracted to be bought, sold, or consigned, in such commerce by such dealer, or the purchase or sale of which in such commerce is negotiated by such broker; or to fail or refuse truly and correctly to account promptly in respect of any transaction in any such commodity to the person with whom such transaction is had;"

SEC. 2. That paragraph (b) of section 4 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act of 1930, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(b) The Secretary shall refuse to issue a license to an applicant (1) if he finds that the applicant has previously been responsible in whole or in part for any violation of the provisions of section 2 for which a license of the applicant, or the license of any partnership, association, or corporation in which the applicant held any office, or, in the case of a partnership, had any share or interest, was revoked; or (2) if he finds after notice and hearing that at any time within 2 years said applicant was responsible in whole or in part for any flagrant or repeated violation of the provisions of section 2; or (3) if he finds, in case the applicant is a partnership, association, or corporation, that any individual holding office or, in the case of a partnership, having any interest or share in the applicant, has previously been responsible in whole or in part for any violation of the provisions of section 2 for which the license of such individual, or of any partnership, association, or corporation in which such person held any office, or, in the case of a partnership, had any share or interest, was revoked; or (4) if he finds, after notice and hearing in case the applicant is a partnership, association, or corporation, that any individual holding any office or, in the case of a partnership, having any interest or share in the applicant, subject to his right of appeal under section 7 (b), has failed, except in case of bankruptcy, to pay within the time limit provided therein any reparation order which has been issued, within 2 years, against him as an individual, or against a partnership of which he was a member, or an association or corporation in which he held any office, or, in case the applicant is a partnership, association, or corporation, that any individual holding any office, or, in the case of a partnership, having any interest or share in the applicant, subject to his right of appeal under section 7 (b), has failed, except in the case of bankruptcy, to pay within the time limit provided therein any reparation order which has been issued, within 2 years, against him as an individual, or against a partnership of which he was a member, or an association or corporation in which he held any office. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions, the Secretary, in the case of such applicant, may issue a license if the applicant furnishes a bond or other satisfactory assurance that his business will be conducted in accordance with the provisions of the act and that he will pay all reparation orders which may previously have been issued against him for violations, or which may be issued against him within 2 years following the date of the license, subject to his right of appeal under section 7 (b), but such license shall not be issued before the expiration of 1 year from the date of revocation of license or from the date of the Secretary's finding that the applicant has been responsible, in whole or in part, for any flagrant or repeated violation of section 2;."

Sec. 3. That paragraph (c) of section 7 of the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(c) Either party adversely affected by the entry of a reparation order by the Secretary may, within 30 days from and after the date of such order, appeal therefrom to the district court of the United States for the district in which said hearing was held: Provided, That in cases handled without a hearing in accordance with paragraphs (c) and (d) of section 6 or in which a hearing has been waived by agreement of the parties, appeal shall be to the district court of the United States for the district in which the party complained against is located. Such appeal shall be perfected by the filing of a notice thereof, together with a petition in duplicate, which shall recite prior proceedings before the Secretary, and shall state the grounds upon which petitioner relies to defeat the right of the adverse party to recover the damages claimed, with the clerk of said court with proof of service thereof upon the adverse party by registered mail. The clerk of court shall immediately forward a copy thereof to the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall forthwith prepare, certify, and file in said court a true copy of the Secretary's decision, findings of fact, conclusions, and order in said case, together with copies of the pleadings upon which the case was heard and submitted to the Secretary. Such suit in the district court shall be a trial de novo and shall proceed in all respects like other civil suits for damages, except that the findings of fact and order or orders of the Secretary shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated. Appellee shall not be liable for costs in said court, and if appellee prevails he shall be allowed a reasonable attorney's fee to be taxed and collected as part of his costs. Such petition and pleadings certified by the Secretary upon which decision was made by him shall, upon filing in the district court, constitute the pleadings upon which said trial de novo shall proceed subject to any amendment allowed in that court;."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 165. Joint resolution directing the Architect of the Capitol to accept a copy of the painting, Liev Eiriksson Discovers America.

CONSENT CALENDAR

CHICKASAWHA RIVER IN THE STATE OF MISSISSIPPI

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8694, to provide a preliminary examination of Chickasawha River and its tributaries in the State of Mississippi, with a view to the control of their floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to call a preliminary examination to be made of the Chickasawha River and its tributaries in the State of Mississippi, with a view to the control of their floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 4, strike out "call" and insert "cause."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

SAN DIEGO RIVER IN THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10583, to authorize a preliminary examination of the San Diego River and its tributaries in the State of California, with a view to the control of its floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the San Diego River and its tributaries in the State of California, with a view to the control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

NAVAL RESERVE

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Reserve bill I have introduced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, the world situation is such today that it behooves the United States to take every precaution to ward off the danger of our being drawn into war, but to be adequately prepared to defend ourselves against any threat to us as a result of a possible world-wide conflict.

The best way to do both of these things is to properly build up our trained civilian components of the military and naval forces. Since the Navy is our first line of defense, it must be completely ready to go into defensive action at all times. In order to do this, there must be provided in times of peace an adequately trained Naval Reserve of twice the size of the regular peacetime Navy.

For every officer and man in the Navy now we will need two additional Reservists.

The civilian military trained Reservist is the best guaranty of our safety and is certainly no military threat to the peace of the world. He has everything to lose and nothing to gain by war, but he makes by far the most effective defense force because he is able to effectively fight to defend his family and home.

Willingness to defend one's country is not enough. To be effective, one must also be trained to do the job.

Well-trained Reserves are the cheapest and most effective defense forces possible, and they are never going to try to stimulate aggressive nor overseas wars.

Unfortunately, our Naval Reserve is not at present an effective force. Because of its pitifully small size and inadequate training, it is not in a position to permit quick mobilization of even a treaty Navy. Immediate, effective mobilization of the Navy is the heart of our national-defense plans.

The Naval Affairs Committee of the House, last session of Congress, came to a realization of the inadequacy of our Naval Reserve, and so the able chairman of the committee appointed a select subcommittee, of which I have the honor of being a member, to make a full study and to make recommendations for a proper program. Our select committee, under the direction of its chairman, Hon. JOHN J. DELANEY, held extensive hearings. The results of a Navy board, which studied the problem, were presented to us. Representatives of the United States Naval Reserve Officers Association testified and made recommendations after extensive studies upon their part.

As a result of these elaborate reports and recommendations and following a personal intensive study of the matter, both in committee and throughout the country, made on a private trip last summer and fall, I have introduced two bills to carry out the objectives of providing a proper and definite program for building up such a Naval Reserve as will accomplish the purpose for which a Reserve is needed—the mobilization of the Navy in time of emergency.

Since the present method of administering the Naval Reserve has not accomplished the desired results, I have provided a new set-up, somewhat similar to that of the National Guard Bureau in the War Department, which has brought that arm of defense to such a high and yet economical state of efficiency.

Such a bureau in the Navy Department will be resisted by many old line officers just as the National Guard Bureau was resisted in the Army.

Today, no one connected with the Army would have the National Guard system changed if he could. The whole Army is proud of the National Guard and its splendid administration.

To object to a Reserve bureau in the Navy is to indict the bureau system as it exists today, and not of the proposed method of administering the Reserve as such.

If the bureau system is good for the various activities of the Navy, then it should be good for the Reserve. After all, it is the system that the Navy has built up, and I am merely adapting it to one of the most vital activities of the Navy—training and organizing the Reserves.

At present, because of the loose, unwieldy, and overlapping system of administering the Reserve, in which every bureau has a hand but little responsibility, the results are most unsatisfactory. All the testimony demonstrated the necessity for a unified, coordinated administrative set-up with a definite program and plan—something now sadly lacking.

The committee is convinced that the present Reserve presents the finest material possible, if properly directed and expanded.

At present a number of officers have responsible direction over various Reserve matters, but these same officers have many other duties and responsibilities beside directing Reserve activities. Reserve is a side line with them, while it represents a major national policy to the country.

The present method leaves the direction of Reserve policies in the hands of officers who are coming and going, their contact with Reserve matters being comparatively short, and then only a minor part of their duties. The result is necessarily a complete lack of continuity of policy and the absence of a definite program.

The policy and program of the Reserve is the policy and program of the officer in charge at the moment.

The establishment of a Reserve bureau should result in a definite program and intelligent long-time planning.

The bill provides for reaching the necessary minimum requirements of the Navy by definite annual steps.

The bill also provides for placing annually on active duty with the Regular Naval Establishment 500 Reserve officers, 25 of whom each year shall be commissioned in the line of the Navy and Marine Corps. This should have a very healthy effect. It will bring to the Navy, fresh each year, the best civilian point of view and indoctrinate into the Regular Navy the civilian philosophy. It will give new blood to the service.

At the same time, these Reserve officers, going back to civilian pursuits each year after their year's contact with the Navy, will carry back to the general public in a splendid manner the real needs of the Regular Establishment.

This bill will provide a trained Reserve based exclusively upon qualifications and ability of officers and men for the ranks which they will fill in time of national emergency or war.

To sum up, this new Reserve with its definite objectives, definite training program, its extension of the principles of naval administration to include the Reserve, the weeding out of all inactive personnel, the system set-up that all rewards go only to such officers and men who establish, maintain, and improve their professional efficiency, should result favorably and create a Naval Reserve of which the Navy and the country may well be proud. I think, too, that the recognition accorded to the Reserve by many of the provisions of this bill should create a new morale, a new desire to serve, a throwing off of a possible inferiority complex by the realization that the required professional skill may well and profitably be sought for and attained.

The continuance of a small number of Reserve officers on active duty in the naval districts will assure the necessary contacts with civilians, civilian authorities, and local naval authorities to further the best interests of the Navy and the Reserve.

To insure full and proper administration of the Reserve there is provided an Assistant Secretary of the Navy in charge of such activities. It is certainly not asking too much to have the administration of an activity which is twice the size of the Regular Navy itself administered by an Assistant Secretary. This assures that a major policy of the Congress in our Naval Establishment will be carried out by a responsible civilian official.

A synopsis of these two bills which will provide the above program will show just how this is to be accomplished.

DIGEST OF H. R. 11681

A bill to provide for the reorganization, administration, and maintenance of the United States Naval Reserve, the United States Marine Corps Reserve, and for other purposes.

Section 1: States that an adequate Naval and Marine Corps Reserve composed of such numbers and classes as Congress may direct is necessary for the national defense in time of war or national emergency, for expansion and operation of the Navy and its activities.

Section 2: Creates United States Naval Reserve to be made up of three classes—fleet, volunteer, and merchant marine. Also a Marine Corps Reserve of two classes—fleet and volunteer.

Section 3: Subjects the Marine Corps Reserve to the provisions of this act and subsequent acts affecting the Naval Reserve so far as they are adapted.

Section 4: Repeals the act of February 28, 1925, and various other acts which are pertinent.

Section 5: Declares the Naval and Marine Corps Reserve to be integral components of Navy and Marine Corps, respectively, and to be administered accordingly except as otherwise provided.

Section 6: Transfers to the new Reserves in their present ranks, grades, warrants, or ratings all personnel now covered by the act of 1925 except enlisted men receiving compensation as the result of 16 or more years' service in the Navy or Marine Corps.

Section 7: Transfers to the graded retired list of the Navy or Marine Corps those long-service enlisted men not transferred to the new Reserve by section 6.

Section 8: Transfers to the new fleet reserves the personnel in the former fleet and volunteer general classes who have established their professional qualifications, except those enlisted men transferred to the graded retired list by section 7.

Section 9: Transfers the old volunteer special class to the new United States volunteer Reserve as qualified therefor.

Section 10: Provides similar transfer of the Merchant Marine Reserve personnel to its new class.

Section 11: Provides that all personnel as transferred shall retain their respective dates of precedence.

Section 12: Provides for an Assistant Secretary of the Navy to supervise the administration of this act under the directions of the Secretary.

Section 13: Provides for a staff to assist, consisting of Reserves, Regulars, and civilians.

Section 14: Creates a Bureau of the Naval Reserve in the Navy Department under the direction of Secretary of Navy.

Section 15: Provides a Chief of the Bureau of the Naval Reserve, to be appointed by the President, and prescribes manner in which he shall be recommended for appointment by selection from a list compiled by a board of seven members, appointee to be confirmed by Senate.

Section 16: Only qualified or confirmed officers of the Naval Reserves of the grade of lieutenant commander or above shall be considered for this appointment.

Section 17: Chief of Bureau shall serve 4 years, unless removed for cause; shall not succeed himself, and when 64 years old shall cease to hold office. His rank shall be that of rear admiral, United States Naval Reserve, and while serving shall receive similar pay and allowances of other chiefs of bureaus.

Section 18: Provides for the detail of requisite regular personnel deemed necessary for the instruction of the Reserve by the Secretary of the Navy.

Section 19: Similar to section 18 but relates to Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve personnel.

Section 20: Relates to employment of civilian personnel to carry out this act.

Section 21: Creates a Naval Reserve Policy Board of 10 members who shall be experienced officers, half to be Navy and half to be Reserves, one of each group to be a marine, the Assistant Secretary to preside. Board to meet annually in October and oftener if necessary, shall study and recommend policies for the Reserve. Two members shall be appointed from States with Naval Militia organizations with 95 per cent of their personnel members of the Naval Reserve. Recommendations shall be requested from adjutants general of such States for study by this Board.

Section 22: All other courts and boards dealing with Reserve matters and not specifically provided for shall consist of equal numbers of Regulars and Reserves.

Section 23: Provides for segregating Fleet Reserve into two parts—seagoing and aviation—qualified for combatant duties and available for immediate mobilization.

Section 24: Provides for organization of seagoing class Fleet Reserve into units or individuals for duties on board combatant vessels of the Navy.

Section 25: Provides similarly for aviation class Fleet Reserve.

Section 26: Provides for mandatory training periods Fleet Reserve not to exceed 15 days annually.

Section 27: Authorizes drill pay at rate of one-thirtieth of monthly base pay, for duty under competent orders as prescribed by Secretary of the Navy, not to exceed 60 drills in any one fiscal year.

Section 28: Authorizes appropriate duty pay not to exceed $10 per week for certain officers under regulations prescribed by Secretary of the Navy.

Section 29: Authorizes command pay at rate of $240 per year for administrative functions prescribed under Secretary of the Navy regulations.

Section 30: Authorizes a moderate uniform allowance for Fleet Reserve officers in peacetime and for all officers in wartime.

Section 31: Provides for an inspection board of regular officers to inspect and report upon the qualifications of the Fleet Reserve units, annually.

Section 32: Federally recognizes the Organized Militia and members thereof of certain States and provides for the loan of vessels and equipment under certain conditions, namely, conformation with standards prescribed by Secretary of the Navy.

Section 33: Provides that distribution of commissioned officers of the line in the Fleet Reserve shall be same relatively as authorized by law for the Navy and Marine Corps and not less than 12 percent of enlisted men of this class. Present personnel who are to be transferred to the new Fleet Reserve under section 6 are protected in their grades.

Section 34: Provides that number and distribution of commissioned officers of the Staff Corps of the Fleet Reserve in the several grades shall be in the same proportion, relatively, as authorized for the Staff Corps of the Navy and Marine Corps.

Section 35: Establishes the grade and rank of commodore in the United States Naval Reserve.

Section 36: Provides that computations shall be made annually by the Secretary of the Navy to determine the authorized total number of commissioned officers and the authorized number in each grade.

Section 37: Provides for the commissioning in the Reserve of officers of the Navy or Marine Corps resigning under honorable conditions.

Section 38: Provides for promotion of Fleet Naval Reserve line officers to vacancies in grades above lieutenant commander by selection board, one-half of whom shall be Reserve officers.

Section 39: Provides for promotion of Fleet Naval Reserve staff officers in similar way except that selection board shall contain four officers (two Regular, two Reserve) of particular staff concerned.

Section 40: Provides for promotion Fleet Marine Corps Reserve to vacancies in grades above that of major, both line and staff, by selection board, one-half of which to be Marine Corps and one-half Fleet Marine Corps Reserve.

Section 41: Provides for assignment to Merchant Marine Naval Reserves of personnel of the seafaring profession and connected with certain ships.

Section 42: Provides two classes—Merchant Marine Naval Reserve—organized and unorganized.

Section 43: Prescribes certain qualifications for organized class of Merchant Marine Naval Reserve.

Section 44: Prescribes and authorizes certain training duty for organized class of Merchant Marine Naval Reserve under regulations and conditions set up by Secretary of the Navy.

Section 45: Authorizes drill pay for organized class of Merchant Marine Naval Reserve under certain conditions.

Section 46: Authorizes personnel of unorganized class of Merchant Marine Naval Reserve to apply for training duty.

Section 47: Authorizes Merchant Marine Naval Reserve pennant to be flown on certain ships under certain conditions.

Section 48: Provides for the annual inspection of the units and vessels of the organized class, Merchant Marine Naval Reserve, and report thereon by inspection board. If unsatisfactory conditions are found, pennant warrant may be withdrawn.

Section 49: Provides for transfer or discharge of Merchant Marine Naval Reserve personnel when they become ineligible for class.

Section 50: Assigns to the volunteer Naval Reserve all United States Naval Reserve personnel not otherwise assigned. Assigns to the volunteer Marine Corps Reserve all members of the United States Marine Corps Reserve who are not assigned to Fleet Reserve.

Provides two classes, organized and unorganized, in volunteer Naval and volunteer Marine Corps Reserves.

Section 51: Prescribes qualifications for the organized class of the volunteer Naval and Marine Corps Reserves.

Section 52: Provides for mandatory instruction and training duty for volunteer classes, as may be prescribed by Secretary of the Navy.

Section 53: Authorizes annual compensation of $240 to commanding officers of organized volunteer units for faithful performance of administrative duties.

Section 54: Prescribes citizenship of the Reserve and age of entry. Also obligation to perform training duty and serve in Navy in time of war or national emergency, and prohibits membership in any other naval or military organization except the naval militia.

Section 55: Authorizes in the Naval and Marine Corps Reserves the various grades, warrants, and ratings of the Regulars, and provides for appointments, promotions, changes in rating, and transfer between classes to be made in accordance with regulations prescribed by Secretary of the Navy.

Section 56: Provides that original appointments of Reserve officers shall be provisional and made by Secretary of the Navy. Upon qualifying under regulations for duties of grade they shall be certified for appointment by President and thereafter become eligible for promotion.

Section 57: Authorizes qualified Fleet Reserve officers of or above grade of lieutenant commander or equivalent to be confirmed by Senate.

Section 58: Provides that all other commissioned Reserve officers who have established their qualifications in grade and class shall be appointed by the President alone upon certification by Secretary of the Navy.

Section 59: Provides that Secretary of the Navy shall warrant persons in midshipman and warrant grades.

Section 60: Provides that Secretary of the Navy shall make assignments to and transfer between the several classes of the Reserve.

Section 61: Provides that Reserve enlistments be for 4 years and may be extended for varying periods thereafter.

Section 62: Provides that Reserve officer personnel shall be commissioned or warranted in grades authorized by law for Navy and Marine Corps to serve during the pleasure of President or Secretary of the Navy, as case may be.

Section 63: Provides that numbers and distribution of Reserve warrant officers shall be determined by Secretary of the Navy.

Section 64: Provides that the numbers and distribution of commissioned officers by classes and grades in the Volunteer Reserves and Merchant Marine Reserve shall be determined by the Secretary of the Navy. Also that in the staff corps of the Volunteer Reserves there shall be maintained such minimum numbers of captains and commanders or equivalent as recommended by chiefs of the respective staff bureaus of the Navy and Commandant of Marine Corps.

Section 65: Provides that promotions in Reserves not otherwise covered in this act shall be as prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.

Section 66: Provides for manner of separation of Reserve personnel from service in peace and war.

Section 67: Authorizes appointment from enlisted Reserves of 50 midshipmen annually.

Section 68: Authorizes active duty with Navy or Marine Corps for 1 year 500 professionally qualified Reserve line officers.

Section 69: Authorizes for 10 years the annual commissioning in the Navy of 25 Reserve officers who have qualified for seagoing or aviation duties. Five to be in Marine Corps and 20 in line of the Navy.

Section 70: Provides for active duty with pay of Reserve personnel in peacetime in naval districts and areas, such numbers as the Secretary of the Navy may require to carry out this act.

Section 71: Provides that all Reserve personnel may be ordered to active duty in time of war or national emergency, by the Secretary of the Navy, to service for such duration. In time of peace consent of individual is required. Release from duty may be by request or for cause after a hearing.

Section 72: Provides when Reserve personnel shall be subject to the laws, regulations, and orders from the government of the Navy and the duration thereof.

Section 73: Authorizes and prescribes the pay and allowances of Reserve personnel when in active or training duty and what service shall be included in computing same.

Section 74: Prescribes uniform bedding and equipment allowances of Reserve enlisted men and issue thereof by regulations.

Section 75: Establishes jurisdiction of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission in cases where members of the Reserve incur injury, illness, or death under certain conditions in line of duty in time of peace.

Section 76: Provides for precedence of Reserve officers among themselves according to date of appointment, except as otherwise provided. Officers of the same date shall be regulated by Secretary of the Navy.

Section 77: Provides that in time of peace Reserve officers take precedence with but after Regulars of the same grade and same or approximately same dates of commission or warrant.

Section 78: Provides for precedence of Fleet Reserve Officers when mobilized for war. If previously confirmed by Senate, they shall take precedence with but after a running mate of the Regulars assigned by Secretary of the Navy, and thereafter by seniority.

Section 79: Provides for precedence when mobilized for war, of Reserve officers who have qualified in grade, but not confirmed, by assignment of running mates in the Regular service as in section 78.

Section 80: Provides for precedence when mobilized for war, of Reserve officers who have not been confirmed nor found qualified. They take precedence with, but after the junior regulars, in the line on mobilization date, and thereafter are subject to promotion by seniority with assigned running mate.

Section 81: Provides that in time of war commissioned Reserve officers on active list and on active duty shall be advanced in grade as prescribed for the Regulars and take precedence in accordance with date of advancement, and upon establishing his qualifications by examination as prescribed. Reserve officers who are advanced shall receive pay allowance of higher grade from date of commission. This section does not apply to retired Reserve officers.

Section 82: Provides that when serving in time of war, Reserve personnel shall be entitled to all rights, privileges, and benefits, except retirement for age, that are accorded by law to Regulars.

Section 83: Provides for quadrennial physical examination for Reserve officers and honorable discharge or retirement if found not qualified. Age in grade retirements under certain conditions also provided for.

Section 84: Establishes 64 years as compulsory retiring age for Reservists. May voluntarily retire after 30 years' service.

Section 85: Authorizes a limited retired pay up to 50 percent of active pay (from Navy) for Reserve personnel of the honorary retired list, who have performed not less than 20 years' active service.

Section 86: Authorizes similar benefits to those set forth in section 85 to apply to certain enlisted shipkeepers.

Section 87: Provides for reenlistment of certain Reservists in the Navy or Marine Corps.

Section 88: Outlines the duties of the Secretary of the Navy in connection with Reserves' administration and not otherwise covered in this act. Provides also that Federal employees who are Reservists shall be entitled to leave without loss of pay while performing training duty.

Section 89: Prescribes that the Reserve shall be administered with the definite objective of reaching the prescribed numerical strength, in qualified personnel, within 10 years and if possible by equal annual increments.

Section 90: Authorizes the appropriation of necessary funds annually for the support of the Reserves.

Section 91: Authorizes the part-time employment of scientists, technicians, and specialists—various bureaus and officers of the Navy Department, and that bureau appropriations in certain cases shall be available for active-duty pay and allowances of Reserve officers ordered to such duty by the Secretary of the Navy.

Section 92: Provides that Secretary of the Navy shall submit annual statement to Congress in considerable detail, showing the sums required for the various Reserve purposes by separate classes, namely, Fleet, Volunteer, and merchant-marine classes during succeeding fiscal year; the numerical strengths of said classes are also established in this section.

Section 93: Authorizes the use of unobligated funds from Reserve appropriations for current fiscal year to carry out this act.

Section 94: Provides that Secretary of the Navy shall submit annual report to Congress for preceding fiscal year, which shall contain certain specified matters concerning:

First. Numerical strengths in detail at beginning and end of year.

Second. Officers confirmed at beginning and end of year.

Third. Qualified personnel at beginning and end of year.

Fourth. Provisional appointments at beginning and end of year.

Fifth. Separation from Reserve in detail, and reasons therefor.

Sixth. Cost of Reserve in preceding fiscal year, with appropriate detail.

Seventh. Recommendations for progressive development over the 10-year period, with estimated cost in detail.

DIGEST OF H. R. 11682

A bill to establish a graded retired list for the enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps who were transferred to Fleet Naval Reserve by act of February 28, 1925, without loss of previous rate of pay or benefit; upon completion of 20 years' total service, transfer to retired list of Navy with legal pay; plus allowances, of regular 30-year Navy men.

Section 4: Provides for transfer to the graded retired list with one-third base pay, plus permanent additions, at time of transfer if service has been 16 years but less than 20; if 20 or more years' service, the rate is one-half; 10 percent added for heroism or high good-conduct marks. After 30 years' total service, they go to Regular Navy retired list. Men affected are: (a) The enlisted men serving in Navy on July 1, 1925, and now serving; (b) or who upon discharge reenlisted in Navy within 3 months; (c) or who serving in Naval Reserve force on July 1, 1925, in enrollment within 4 months of Navy discharge and who have or hereafter may reenlist in Navy within 3 months of discharge from Naval Reserve.

Section 5: Men enlisting in Navy after July 1, 1925, and those enlisting after passage of this act must serve 20 years before applying for transfer to graded retired list; except when on active duty, pay is one-half of base. After 30 years total they go to retired list of Navy with one-half base pay of rating, plus permanent additions and allowances.

Section 6: Authorizes certain computations of service requisite for transfer.

Section 7: Authorizes Navy Department to supervise transfers and makes its findings final in determination of such questions as pay and allowances, rank, rating, length of service, may correct errors, etc. Allows double time now authorized by law to count toward retirement.

Section 8: Provides for forfeiture of pay for failure to report for inspection under conditions prescribed by Secretary of Navy.

Section 9: Provides for optional 2 months' active duty each 4 years and physical examinations once in 4 years. If found not qualified for war duty, transfer to the retired list of Navy with pay of transfer date. After 30 years' total shall receive pay authorized by law. Provides for sick rations in hospital under certain conditions.

Section 10: Provides that transferees shall at all times be governed by Navy law and regulations; no discharge without consent of transferee except by court-martial sentence or conviction of felony by civil authorities, in discretion of Secretary of Navy after opportunity to submit written statement before final action.

Section 11: Provides for appointment, under regulation by Secretary of the Navy, of commissioned or warrant grade in event of war or national emergency; and upon release, resume former status without loss of any benefit, but retaining rank without pay increase.

Section 12: Effective date of act, July 1, 1936.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

PAY AND ALLOWANCES IN THE ARMY, NAVY, MARINE CORPS, COAST GUARD, COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY, AND THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3281, to amend the act of February 16, 1929, entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Public Health Service', approved June 10, 1922, as amended."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand, this bill is to put the Coast and Geodetic Survey upon a basis of equality with the other services referred to.

Mr. BLAND. That is the purpose of the bill. There is a discrimination in view of the important duties that are performed by this officer and the bill puts him on a parity with the other officers.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The effect will be to raise their salaries to that existing in the Coast Guard?

Mr. BLAND. No; the head of the Coast and Geodetic Survey will be raised and put on a parity with the heads of the other bureaus.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The purpose is to put him on an equality with the others.

Mr. BLAND. That is the sole purpose; yes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of the act of February 16, 1929, entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Public Health Service', approved June 10, 1922, as amended", be amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 5. That the Director of the Coast and Geodetic Survey shall be appointed and hold office as now authorized by law; his appointment shall not create a vacancy, and while holding said office he shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a Chief of Bureau of the Navy Department."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INCREASING CAPACITY OF PANAMA CANAL

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 412, to authorize an investigation of the means of increasing capacity of the Panama Canal for future needs of interoceanic shipping, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Governor of the Panama Canal is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the means of increasing the capacity of the Panama Canal for future needs of interoceanic shipping, and to prepare designs and approximate estimates of cost of such additional locks or other structures and facilities as are needed for the purpose, and to make progress reports from time to time of the results thereof.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ALIEN EMPLOYEES OF THE PANAMA CANAL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4991, authorizing superannuation disability pay for alien employees of the Panama Canal.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the chairman of the committee if this sets up an old-age pension for the superannuated employees of the Panama Canal?

Mr. BLAND. No; the bill takes care of the particular class that is mentioned here, the old and faithful employees who have been working there for years and who were brought in for construction purposes on the Canal. It serves as an old-age pension for this particular class of employees.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is there any provision as to the amount of time they must be employed in order to participate?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The thought I have in mind is whether we are not, perhaps, discriminating against our own citizens in the passage of this bill in favor of the aliens who have been employed there.

Mr. BLAND. Our own citizens have already been taken care of, and at a much better rate of pay.

Mr. WOLCOTT. How long must an alien be employed by the Panama Canal in order to be eligible under this bill?

Mr. BLAND. Ten years of service on the Panama Canal, including any service on the Panama Railroad on the Isthmus of Panama.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And the beneficiary gets this only when he is mentally or physically disabled, presumably, as a result of his service or employment on the Panama Canal?

Mr. BLAND. Not necessarily as a result of his service, but from age or disability. Many of these men, I may say, were recruited when the construction of the Panama Canal was in process.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question. How many employees, approximately, will this embrace?

Mr. BLAND. I do not recall now, but I may say the report shows the amount will gradually increase from $12,000 for the first year to $121,000 in the twentieth year, and will stop there.

Mr. BLANTON. It will stop entirely in 20 years?

Mr. BLAND. That will be the maximum attained. I do not want to say it will stop then, but the maximum will be attained in 20 years and will amount to $121,000.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman means that in 20 years the amount will gradually increase to $121,000 and thereafter will not be increased but will be continued indefinitely until they die.

Mr. BLAND. That is, if this class of employees is still employed by the Canal?

Mr. BLANTON. Will it embrace eventually employees who are not now employed?

Mr. BLAND. Yes; I should say it would.

Mr. BLANTON. It will embrace all new employees who are to be employed hereafter?

Mr. BLAND. It would embrace all the alien employees, but there is a tendency, of course, to get American labor so far as conditions will permit.

Mr. BLANTON. And these men who are to draw pensions are not American citizens?

Mr. BLAND. No; they are not.

Mr. BLANTON. And they do not intend to become American citizens?

Mr. BLAND. The evidence shows many of them desire to become American citizens, but there was no naturalization court and no opportunity in the Panama Canal for them to become American citizens. I talked with many of them when I was down there last summer, and some of them are as fine a type of man as I have ever seen.

Mr. BLANTON. Does my friend think that we ought to extend old-age pensions to these people before we have provided for all of our own nationals? Many States have not taken advantage of the Federal law. Does the gentleman think that we should provide old-age pensions to these people before we provide old-age pensions for all of the citizens of the United States?

Mr. BLAND. I will say that when the bill was first brought to my attention I felt a prejudice against it mainly on the ground stated by the gentleman from Texas. But these beneficiaries, we must remember, were brought in there for the purpose of construction. Many are employed on the Panama Canal now. If they go back home they are a burden on the islands. They cannot return to the city of Panama without being put on charity there. It is one of those things that unfortunately arise, a peculiar condition, and probably could exist nowhere else in this country.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think the Government of the United States has done more for Panama and the people living in that section, in bettering health conditions and in furnishing employment to an army of them. [Cries of "The regular order!"] Then, Mr. Speaker, if two Members are so petulant they cry "Regular order" and we cannot discuss the matter of granting these pensions to aliens, I object to the bill, and we will stop it right here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'CONNOR). Objection is heard.

ARE YOU TAX CONSCIOUS?

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a radio address that I made on Saturday last.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following address on the tax problem which I delivered on the radio on March 14, 1936, through the courtesy of the National Broadcasting Co.:

My talk, tonight, may differ from the usual discussion of political and economic subjects in that I am not going to vilify anyone or call anyone names.

I propose to talk to you on one of the most important and vital problems of our Government, the tax problem. It has been said that two things are certain; death and taxes. Yet there's a difference between the two. Death doesn't get worse every time Congress meets.

In its last session, Congress appropriated $9,948,370,000. To give you an idea of just how fast your money is being spent by the Federal Government, I call to your attention that that figure represents over $27,000,000 every day, over $1,000,000 every hour, over $18,000 every minute, and over $300 every second. Time will not permit me to elaborate on the merits or demerits of those appropriations of your money. Some of these expenditures are good, some are bad, some necessary, others unnecessary.

When added to the cost of local and State governments and compared with the total national income, it becomes apparent that you, my listeners, are paying nearly 30 cents out of every dollar you earn for the cost of Government. The earnings of over 3 months of your year's work is what you pay to be governed.

The tax bill is now the biggest bill paid by the American people. We pay more for taxes than we do for food or for rent, twice as much as we do for clothing, and six times as much as is spent for light and power.

You may or may not pay an income tax or a real-estate tax, but you are paying it just the same.

The trend in tax legislation in recent years has been most insidious. Taxation has become the art of so picking the goose as to secure the greatest amount of feathers with the least amount of squawking. We have turned from direct taxes on private incomes, which we could all understand, to indirect taxes on private spending, which few can decipher. Our taxes have been disguised, they have been candy coated, or they have been injected as a narcotic, in every business transaction, leaving most of us unconscious of the fact that we are being assessed.

As a result, everything we buy, not only luxuries, but our food and clothing, the very necessities of life, are increased in cost. Let us take a look at some of our hidden taxes.

You have been in the habit of crawling out of bed in the morning from between cotton sheets taxed at over 4 cents a pound. You have gone into the bathroom and turned on the electric light, taxed at 3 percent of your bill. You have brushed your teeth with a dentifrice taxed at 5 percent. The soap you used had a 5-percent tax on it.

When you sat down to breakfast there was a card on your plate printed in invisible ink which you could not read, but which said, nevertheless: "Cover charge payable to government—25 percent of the cost of all food on this table." Your ham was taxed over $2 per hundredweight. The ice water came from a refrigerator which was taxed 5 percent of what you paid for it. The toast you ate carried 53 separate taxes. Other food, the silverware, linens, dishes, and other household appliances, each bore the sign—also invisible—of hundreds of tax collectors.

When you light a cigarette you are taxed nearly 100 percent. You paid 13 cents for the package, but you didn't notice the little green stamp pasted on the top which, had your curiosity been great enough, would have disclosed to you that Uncle Sam collected 6 cents in tax.

The flivver you drive to the office carries a 3-percent sales tax. Your tires are taxed 2½ cents per pound—the innertubes 4 cents a pound—and when you fill your tank with gas you pay more in taxes on the gas than its wholesale price.

Meantime, your wife's cosmetics, perfumes, and furs and jewels—if she is fortunate enough to possess them—are all taxed 10 percent. If you hunt or fish, your gun and your rod bear a 10-percent tax. If you play golf or tennis, your clubs and rackets each carry a 10-percent tax.

When you get home at night and sit down to a friendly rubber of contract you have paid a 10-cent tax on the cards you use. If you go to the movies or the theater, you pay 1 cent on each 10 cents in excess of the admission price of 40 cents. Other examples and the manner in which the tax is passed on to you could be related ad infinitum.

You may say, well, what difference does it make how I pay it as long as I pay it. It makes a great difference. Direct taxes result in greater interest in the cost of Government. As an example, permit me to call to your attention the situation here following the World War. It is unquestionably true that because the major part of the Government's income was derived from direct taxation, causing greater interest in governmental expenditures, the post-war retrenchments and economies were effected in Washington.

Until 1932 the income tax provided 53 percent of the Government's income, but then an astonishing decline took place, and now we find that less than one-third of its revenue is derived from that source. As we borrow 49 percent of our expenditures and raise 44 percent by hidden taxes, we find the personal income tax pays only 7 percent of the Government's spending.

Only 1 out of every 41 Americans of voting age pay an income tax. Less than 2 percent of our population file a taxable return. In the light of our burdens this is, indeed, an undesirable situation.

Let us compare our position with that of Great Britain. In Britain a married man without dependents begins to pay when his net earnings exceed $1,060, or about $20 per week. Here he would pay nothing until his net earnings amounted to $53 per week. Over there he pays $26 on a net income of $1,500, $67 on $2,000, and $157 on $2,500 net income. Here he pays nothing at all on any of these figures.

All through the lower and middle brackets the British tax is higher than ours. It is only on the very large incomes that our tax is greater than theirs. As a result, they have a far greater stability of revenue.

Between 1926 and 1931 the number of taxable returns in Great Britain varied less than 3 percent, while here it fell off by nearly 40 percent. It is a startling comparison that the number of individuals now paying income tax in Great Britain is one and a half times as large as those in the United States, while their population is about one-third of ours.

But, even if stability of revenue were not an important consideration, their direct method of payment produces a result, making it far more desirable than our experiment in camouflaged levies.

In England, when the taxpayer who earns $50 per week pays $157 of his earnings to the Government, his mind's eye traces a straight line from his $157 contribution to the Government's spending. As a result, England has been able to resist, far more successfully than we, the demands of special groups for special subsidies.

One of the most urgent needs in our national life today is tax consciousness on the part of our people. It is true that the adversity of the last few years has turned the attention of some of the people toward the cost of Government. But, strange as it may seem, the great masses of our people show a marked indifference toward the cost of Government or how the bills are to be paid.

As a result, one group after another, without regard for costs, and often spurred on by utopian money schemes that lead them to believe that their demands won't cost anyone anything, have lined up at the door of the United States Treasury for one kind of a subsidy or another.

The popular impression seems to be that Uncle Sam, in order to obtain these millions and billions, has merely to rub some sort of an Aladdin's lamp. Ah, but there's the rub. There comes a day of reckoning.

For every dollar spent or handed out, a dollar must be collected in taxes, and with interest. We may do tricks with our currency or we may juggle our books, but we can't stop the inevitable; we've got to pay the bills sooner or later. Uncle Sam will stop being a wet nurse only when the masses of our people realize this.

The dawn of tax consciousness in this Nation will arrive only when we have had the courage to discard those taxes, narcotic in their nature, which, while sapping our vitality, leave us blissfully ignorant of their damage, and substitute therefor necessary direct taxes, which we can see and feel.

Although the country needs taxes for revenue, designed to distribute the burden over a larger proportion of the population, no legitimate tax program will be followed during this session of Congress. Piecemeal efforts at reform like those now proposed are both inopportune and inadequate. And, of course, we must remember that this is election year. A President, Senators, and Congressmen have to be elected or reelected. The real music will be faced in 1937.

What then? you may ask. My answer is that if Congress is to do the honest thing tax innovations will be dropped. We'll reject artfully worded tax schemes designed to lead the masses to believe they're escaping the levy, and substitute therefor a broader base for our income-tax structure, commensurate with our ability to pay, comparable with taxes we're all paying indirectly, under a sound and orderly program designed to ultimately balance the Budget.

I hope I can make it clear that what I am advocating is not a greater tax than that which we will be called upon to pay, but rather that our tax program be brought out in the open when our people will know what they have to pay and thus understand what the spending of Federal funds means to their pocketbooks.

This statement may not carry popular appeal. I suppose I'll be told why not "soak the rich" some more. Ladies and gentlemen, under the present "soak the rich" policy there isn't anything left to soak. We could confiscate all the really large incomes and our problem would still be with us. Then I may be asked, Why not get after the big corporations? Why not a manufacturers' sales tax or a transaction tax? In that event who will pay the bill? You, Mr. Average Citizen; you'll pay 90 percent of it by every purchase you make, because it will be passed right on to you.

Some may say, Why not increase the corporation tax? If Uncle Sam took all the net income of every corporation that had a net income, he could obtain less than $3,000,000,000, and we spend over twice that sum annually.

The answer to this problem is retrenchment in the cost of government, aided and encouraged by direct taxation.

Rather than be waylaid in the dark, let us understand the levy we have to pay, so that tax consciousness may be restored and efficiency and economy in Government become an achievement, rather than a forlorn hope.

CONSENT CALENDAR

REMOVAL OF FINANCIALLY DISTRESSED ALIENS TO THEIR NATIVE COUNTRY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3472) to amend section 23 of the Immigration act of February 5, 1917 (39 Stat. 874).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that this bill was on the calendar last session. I am going to ask that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FADDIS, Mr. STARNES, and Mr. FORD of Mississippi objected.

REPATRIATION OF CERTAIN NATIVE-BORN AMERICAN WOMEN CITIZENS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2912) to repatriate native-born women who have heretofore lost their citizenship by marriage to an alien, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FADDIS, Mr. STARNES and Mr. WOLCOTT objected.

REPATRIATION OF CERTAIN NATIVE-BORN PERSONS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3023) to provide for citizenship to persons born in the United States who have not acquired any other nationality by personal affirmative act, but who have heretofore lost their United States citizenship through the naturalization of a parent under the laws of a foreign country, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ALIEN HUSBAND OF CITIZEN OF UNITED STATES

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 336, to clarify the provisions of section 4 of the act of May 24, 1934, with regard to period of residence required of an alien husband of a citizen of the United States as a prerequisite to naturalization.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SPECIAL MEXICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 10670) to amend section 11 of Public Law No. 30, approved April 10, 1935, to establish a commission for the settlement of the special claims comprehended within the terms of the convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States concluded April 24, 1934.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to ask the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs if the Appropriations Committee has already passed on this bill? As I understand it, we do not authorize an appropriation here, but we appropriate an additional $90,000.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. If there is any question about it, we will make it an authorization.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think I would be inclined to object to it anyway.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I do not think the gentleman would object with all of the facts before him. A million dollars has now been paid into the Treasury by the Mexican Government and over $5,000,000 are to be paid. That settlement is already made between the United States and Mexico for a certain class of claims. It is necessary for our Government to set up some way of determining who have the proper claims and how much.

Mr. WOLCOTT. When this bill was on the calendar last year, if the gentleman will remember, there was extended argument concerning the advisability of authorizing even $90,000.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I know.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And now the gentleman comes back and asks to increase that amount.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The gentleman was not in that argument. Mr. ZIONCHECK had it all wrong. He thought it was for some oil company.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I remember we went into it thoroughly. I wish the gentleman would consent to have it go over without prejudice.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I am not going to consent to that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I object.

TURTLE MOUNTAIN BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6499) referring the claims of the Turtle Mountain band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota to the Court of Claims for adjudication and settlement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. BURDICK. The only purpose of this bill is to give the Court of Claims jurisdiction to inquire into the claims made by the Indians to the loss of some 10,000,000 acres of land.

Mr. COCHRAN. Why send the case to the Court of Claims when we have already paid $1,000,000 for the land? Of course, the land is more valuable now than it was 53 years ago.

Mr. BURDICK. The Government paid the Indians $1,000,000 for 10,000,000 acres of land in 1882, at a time when the Indians were wards of this Government. It stands to reason on the face of it that a court of equity should inquire into the matter of giving $1,000,000 for 10,000,000 acres of land to a bunch of people who were wards of this Government and there should be a strict accountability in any court, and the only thing we ask now is to be given a chance to go before the Court of Claims and present our case.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman advise the House how much in gratuities and advances the Government has made to this band of Indians?

Mr. BURDICK. Under the term "gratuity" as this House will have it, the Government has paid $1,000,000, and from whatever may be found by the Court of Claims that million dollars will be deducted as a set-off.

Mr. COCHRAN. I admit to the gentleman that this is one bill that I have not received a report on from the Comptroller General and I shall call for a report upon it immediately. I hope to have it on the next call of the calendar. The bill is not going to be considered until I have that report.

Mr. BURDICK. Here is the report.

Mr. COCHRAN. Oh, no; the report the gentleman has is from the Secretary of the Interior, who does not have the records. The records are in the hands of the Comptroller General and he is the one I will ask for a report.

Mr. BURDICK. This report has what the gentleman has in mind. It says that the proposed legislation is not in accordance with the financial policy of the President.

Mr. COCHRAN. Then it should not be passed. However, I am willing to withdraw the objection and let it go over without prejudice to be taken up at the next call of the calendar, and I shall get the Comptroller's report by that time, if possible. I will write for it this evening. Is that satisfactory? I shall not withdraw the objection unless the gentleman agrees to do that.

Mr. BURDICK. Oh, I agree to do that.

Mr. COCHRAN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TRIENNIAL MEETING OF ASSOCIATION OF COUNTRY WOMEN OF THE WORLD

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2664) to aid in defraying the expenses of the Third Triennial Meeting of the Associated Country Women of the World, to be held in this country in June 1936.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to ask who are the Associated Country Women of the World? Personally I have never heard of them.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. An international organization, made up of real country women of this country. Nobody can be a delegate unless she is a real dirt farmer. I am opposed to this character of appropriations. We have stopped it for international meetings here.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the gentleman is opposed to it, let me call attention to the fact that he says in his report—

So strongly are we of this opinion that of our own accord we have raised this authorization from $5,000 to $10,000.

So the gentleman could not have been very strongly opposed to this meeting.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The gentleman did not wait until I finished. I said I am opposed to this character of legislation, but this is an exception, and I so state. It was the custom of this committee to report out quite large sums for the entertainment of these international organizations. I am opposed to that. It was some time before we would even give these good ladies a hearing; but when they came before the committee I saw it was a real organization of country women, and I saw the great benefit they could do, and it completely sold me on this proposition.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What is the purpose of the organization and why do they have international conferences?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bloom].

Mr. BLOOM. About once every 3 years the farm women of the world get together and hold these conferences, and it is to teach the farm women how to raise things on the farm, how to market things, how to dress the children, how to make their clothes, and so forth. It is composed only of women who do their own work and marketing on the farm. This is not a society women's affair. It is really a worthwhile thing.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Some of the ladies who came before me operated stalls out here at this country market.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say that we have the Grange and the Farm Bureau and the Farm Union, and all of those meetings of American women. They meet and talk things over.

Mr. BLOOM. This is to hold an international convention. Those women have been to other countries on several occasions. They all pay their own expenses.

Mr. WOLCOTT. How much did they ask for?

Mr. BLOOM. They asked for $5,000.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Does not the gentleman think it is rather presumptive on our part to give them $10,000 when they asked for only $5,000?

Mr. BLOOM. Now, they have nothing for their convention expenses. They come overland in their cars. They sleep in tents. This $5,000 would not even pay the regular expenses, such as the cost of a hall, clerks, or anything else. That is why the committee, after listening to these women, raised it from $5,000 to $10,000. It is one of the most meritorious bills that has ever come before the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. McLEAN. Is it like a Rotary Club? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOOM. No; nothing like that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The argument of the gentleman from New York overwhelms me, and I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, to aid in defraying the expenses of the Third Triennial Meeting of the Associated Country Women of the World, to be held in this country in June 1936, such sum to be expended for such purposes and under such regulations as the Secretary of State shall prescribe and without regard for any other provision of law.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$10,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, on March 3 I received permission to extend my remarks and to incorporate some excerpts and data. I am waiting on some data from the Department, and I will not have it until Friday. I ask unanimous consent that instead of dating it on the 3d it may be dated next Friday the 20th.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

AMEND SECTION 4, PUBLIC ACT NO. 286

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10321, to amend section 4 of Public Act No. 286, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 19, 1935, as amended.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of Public Act No. 286, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 19, 1935, is amended by striking out the words "section 3 hereof" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "section 2, paragraph 2, and section 3 of this act."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE AVAILABLE TO SEAMEN ON GOVERNMENT VESSELS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2625, to extend the facilities of the Public Health Service to seamen on Government vessels not in the Military or Naval Establishments.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter seamen not enlisted or commissioned in the Military or Naval Establishments, who are not now entitled by virtue of any law to medical relief by the Public Health Service, shall, when employed on vessels of the United States Government of more than 5 tons' burden and on State school ships, be entitled to medical relief by the Public Health Service in the same manner and to the same extent as seamen employed on registered, enrolled, and licensed vessels are entitled. Cadets on State school ships shall also be entitled to the same medical relief as is herein granted to seamen.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "Government", insert the following: "(other than those of the Panama Canal)."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SURVEY OF LOWELL CREEK, ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10487, to authorize a survey of Lowell Creek, Alaska, to determine what, if any, modification should be made in the existing project for the control of its floods.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Alaska to the fact that this authorizes and directs a survey to be made. All of the other flood-control bills which we have permitted to be passed without objection call for a preliminary examination in anticipation of a survey if the War Department reports that a survey should be made in consequence of their preliminary examination. The difference to us is that a preliminary examination involves the expenditure of no additional money, because it is made by the personnel who are on the pay roll of the War Department at the present time and involves no extra expense. But a survey does sometimes cause additional expense, and we have been asked to make appropriations for surveys; so I ask the gentleman if a preliminary examination is not what he wants instead of a survey?

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, answering the question just propounded, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that a survey is what is desired and not a preliminary examination. This, of course, was thoroughly understood by the committee.

May I give a very brief historical account of the matter? In the Fifty-ninth Congress an act was passed calling for the construction of a flood-control project at Seward, Alaska—this identical one. The Federal Government put up $100,000, and local interests, including the city of Seward, put up $25,000. The project was undertaken and completed.

Last summer it was discovered for the first time that the work then done is not sufficient to take care of the floods, for last summer this region was visited by a flood which destroyed property in value probably between $25,000 and $50,000, including a very large damage to the Alaska Railroad, which is owned by the Government.

I may also say that the flood was so serious that it put the electric-light plant which serves the city out of commission for a period of nearly 10 days. After this occurred I wrote the Chief of Engineers and asked what ought to be done, and I have in my hand a letter from General Pillsbury, Acting Chief of Engineers, dated November 18, 1935, in which, among other things, he states as follows:

The review of the existing project to determine the best plan for future flood control would appear desirable, and I am enclosing for your information a draft of a proposed bill which would authorize this Department to undertake the necessary investigations, with a view to submitting an appropriate review to Congress.

Accompanying this letter was draft of the identical bill now before the House for action.

A preliminary examination would add nothing to the information of the War Department.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand they have already obtained all the information which it is customary to obtain through a preliminary examination.

Mr. DIMOND. Yes; that is true.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And I notice the Secretary of War has no objection to it. Inasmuch as it has been referred to the Secretary of War, and he has no objection to it, I am sure I have no objection so long as it is understood by the War Department that this is to be a survey and not a preliminary examination.

Mr. DIMOND. Yes; and I repeat to the gentleman that the draft of the bill now before the House was prepared in the War Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of Lowell Creek, Alaska, to determine what, if any, modification should be made in the existing project for the control of its floods, the cost of such survey to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for flood control of Lowell Creek.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MATANUSKA RIVER, MATANUSKA, ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11042, authorizing a preliminary examination of the Matanuska River in the vicinity of Matanuska, Alaska.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Matanuska River in the vicinity of Matanuska, Alaska, with a view to the control of floods in the said Matanuska River, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for control of floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF PENSION ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9496, to protect the United States against loss in the delivery through the mails of checks in payment of benefits provided for by laws administered by the Veterans' Administration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes", approved August 7, 1912 (37 Stat. 312; 38 U. S. C., sec. 50), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 3. Pensions, compensation, insurance, or other allowances or benefits provided for by laws administered by the Veterans' Administration shall be paid by checks drawn, pursuant to certification by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, by the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department in such form as to protect the United States against loss, without separate vouchers or receipts, and payable by the Treasurer of the United States, except in any case in which the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs may consider a voucher necessary for the protection of the Government. Such checks shall be transmitted by mail to the payee thereof at his last-known address, and the envelope or cover thereof may bear an appropriate notice of the prohibition hereafter set forth in this section.

"Postmasters, delivery clerks, letter carriers, and all other postal employees are prohibited from delivering any mail addressed by the United States bearing such notice and containing any such check (except that in the case of checks in payment of allowances and benefits other than pensions, compensation, or insurance, the prohibition shall apply only insofar as the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs deems it necessary to protect the United States against loss), to any person whomsoever, if the addressee has died or removed, or in the case of a widow believed by the postal employee entrusted with the delivery of such mail to have remarried (unless such mail is addressed by the United States in the name which the widow shall have acquired by remarriage); and the postmaster in every such case shall forthwith return such mail with a statement of the reasons for so doing, and if because of death or remarriage, the date thereof, if known. Checks returned as herein provided on account of death or remarriage shall be canceled."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the figure "7" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "17."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STATE OF ALABAMA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3369, for the relief of the State of Alabama.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Alabama be, and is hereby, relieved from all responsibility and accountability for certain quartermaster and other property to the approximate value of $22,361.43, the property of the War Department in possession of the Alabama National Guard, which was lost, destroyed, or used for emergency relief work incident to the Elba (Ala.) flood of March 1929, and the tornadoes which occurred over large portions of said State in March 1932; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to terminate all further accountability for said property.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ACQUISITION OF ADDITIONAL LAND FOR WALTER REED HOSPITAL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3629, to authorize the acquisition of additional land for the use of Walter Reed General Hospital.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice this bill is not recommended by the War Department and is not in accordance with the financial program of the President of the United States. I wonder if the chairman of the committee could review the bill for us and state why the War Department is opposed to it?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I may say to the gentleman that a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs, which has jurisdiction over the purchase of land for military reservations, had a thorough hearing on this bill. Among other witnesses, we had General Reynolds, Surgeon General of the United States Army, before the subcommittee. There is no question about the fact that additional land is needed today for the Walter Reed Reservation. There seems to be no question about the fact that this is the most propitious time to buy the land. If we delay purchasing the land, it will cost us more in the future than at the present time.

The truth of the matter is the situation there is such that the reservation now cannot be extended on the north, east, or west. Any extension will have to be made to the south. If we do not secure the property now, as the plan calls for, and if that property is divided up into lots and streets are laid off, as is proposed, and the property is sold for residences and houses are built there, it will cost the Government a great deal more money in the future than if purchase is made at the present time.

I may say further there are some eighty-odd medical officers at the Walter Reed Hospital who have to live in town because there is no place on the reservation for them to reside. This is a bill that no Member of the House would have a particular personal interest in, but looking at it entirely from the standpoint of the Government and the matter of economy, as well as the welfare of the reservation, I think the bill should pass.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The point that I wanted to raise was simply that this is an authorization which permits the Secretary of War to acquire this land. It does not direct him to do it. Inasmuch as he has reported unfavorably upon this bill, does not the gentleman think it is idle on our part to authorize him to do something which he has inferentially said he should not do?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I do not think so, and I will state my reason. The Secretary of War realizes the need for this land. The reason he could not report favorably on the bill was because at this particular time the Director of the Budget did not approve the bill. However, the gentleman will recognize the fact that this authorization bill has to pass and become law before an effort can be made to secure the funds with which to purchase the land. If the authorization bill passes the House and Senate and becomes law, then the Secretary of War may pursue the matter further with the Director of the Budget and have him send up an item to be put into an appropriation bill. However, nothing can be done until the Congress sees fit to appropriate the money.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In view of the gentleman's explanation, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to negotiate for the purchase from the present owner or owners, and to enter into a contract for the purchase, if the price be satisfactory and within the limits hereby authorized, of all that tract or parcel of land shown on plat book of the District of Columbia as parcel 89/14, located adjacent to and on the south side of the existing reservation of the Walter Reed General Hospital, and extending from Sixteenth Street on the west through to Georgia Avenue on the east, and containing 22.78 acres, more or less, exclusive of all lands therein set apart for streets; and if said land be acquired, the said Walter Reed General Hospital, by the Secretary of War, is hereby authorized and empowered to use for hospital purposes all land indicated upon said plat book as reserved and set apart for streets within said tract of land, and all of said land when so acquired shall be for use in connection with the Walter Reed General Hospital.

Sec. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated a sum not exceeding $200,000 to enable the Secretary of War to carry out the provisions of this act.

Sec. 3. If the Secretary of War be unable to negotiate a contract for the purchase of said tract of land from the present owner or owners thereof at a price that he shall deem to be fair and reasonable, and not exceeding the sum of $200,000, then and in such event the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause condemnation proceedings to be instituted in the name of the United States for the condemnation of said tract of land for the purposes herein stated, under the provisions of the act of Congress of May 18, 1933, being Public Law No. 17 of the Seventy-third Congress, and entitled "An act to improve the navigability and to provide for the flood control of the Tennessee River; to provide for reforestation and the proper use of marginal lands in the Tennessee Valley; to provide for the agricultural and industrial development of said valley; to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals in the State of Alabama, and for other purposes." Section 25 of said act with reference to the procedure in condemnation proceedings is hereby made a part of this act by way of reference, and for the purpose of prescribing the mode and manner of exercising the right of eminent domain for securing for the uses of the Government of the United States the land hereinbefore mentioned.

Sec. 4. In the hearing upon said condemnation proceedings, it shall be in order to introduce in evidence the tax assessments as to said real estate of the taxing authorities of the District of Columbia for the 10 years preceding the institution of such condemnation proceedings, and it shall be further in order to offer in evidence in the course of said condemnation proceedings, testimony as to the prices for which parcels of real estate situate within 1,000 feet of any portion of the land hereby sought to be acquired for the uses of the United States Government, whether such sale was by private contract between the seller and buyer, or at any judicial sale whether for the partition of real estate or for the satisfaction of any lien, or for the satisfaction of any execution based upon judgment, and any other facts logically and naturally indicating the fair and reasonable value of said parcel of real estate shall be competent to be introduced in evidence in such condemnation proceedings, irrespective and notwithstanding any existing rules of evidence heretofore prevailing in the United States courts in the District of Columbia or elsewhere.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 8, strike out "parcel 89/14" and insert "parcels 89/16, 89/17, 89/18, and 89/19."

Page 3, after line 12, insert "The provisions of this section shall not be construed to be in substitution for, but shall be supplemental to, any method of acquiring land or interests therein provided in existing law."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VETERAN ORGANIZATIONS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10388, to aid the veteran organizations of the District of Columbia in their joint Memorial Day services at Arlington National Cemetery and other cemeteries on and preceding May 30.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $2,500 be, and the same is hereby, authorized to be appropriated for the current and succeeding years to aid the Veterans Memorial Day Corporation in its Memorial Day services and the decoration of the graves of all the soldiers, sailors, and marines with flags and flowers in the cemeteries in the District of Columbia and in the Arlington National Cemetery in Virginia.

Sec. 2. That said fund shall be paid to the treasurer, or his successor or successors in office, of the Veterans Memorial Day Corporation, organized under the laws of the District of Columbia on or about November 17, 1928, and shall be disbursed by him or them for said memorial services, flowers, and flags: Provided, That no part of said fund be expended for salaries or compensation for services rendered by any member or officer of said corporation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

AUTHORITY TO ATTORNEY GENERAL TO DETERMINE AND PAY CERTAIN CLAIMS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2603, to authorize the Attorney General to determine and pay certain claims against the Government for damage to person or property in sum not exceeding $500 in any one case.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General is hereby authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay any claim accruing after January 1, 1934, on account of damages to any person or damages to or loss of privately owned property, where the amount of the claim does not exceed $500, caused by the Director, any Assistant Director, Inspector, or special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice acting within the scope of his employment: Provided, That no claim shall be considered or paid under the provisions of this act unless presented to the Attorney General within 1 year from the date of accrual of said claim; except that any claim accruing between January 1, 1934, and the date of approval of this act may be presented within 3 months after the date of such approval.

Sec. 2. Appropriations to carry into effect the provisions of this act are hereby authorized.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That the Attorney General of the United States may consider, adjust, and determine any claim accruing after January 1, 1934, on account of damages to any person or damages to or loss of privately owned property, caused by the Director; any Assistant Director, Inspector, or special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice acting within the scope of his employment, and such amount as may be found due to any claimant, not exceeding $500 in any one case, shall be certified to Congress as a legal claim for payment out of appropriations that may be made by Congress therefor, together with a brief statement of the character of each claim, the amount claimed, and the amount allowed: Provided, That this authorization shall not be construed to apply to cases of persons in the employ or service of the United States while acting within the scope of such employ or service: Provided further, That no claim shall be considered under this act unless presented to the Attorney General within 1 year from the date of the accrual of said claim; except that any claim accruing between January 1, 1934, and the date of the approval of this act may be presented within 3 months after the date of such approval: And provided further, That acceptance by any claimant of the amount determined to be due him under the provisions of this act shall be deemed to be in full and final settlement of such claim against the Government of the United States."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed. The title was amended to read as follows: "An act to provide for the adjustment and settlement of certain claims arising out of the activities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation", and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORITY TO ATTORNEY GENERAL TO SETTLE OUTSTANDING CLAIMS AGAINST CHAPMAN FIELD, FLA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4670, to authorize the Attorney General to settle outstanding claims against Chapman Field, Fla., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE FOR EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11072, authorizing the appointment of an additional district judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think we should have an explanation as to why this judge seems to be necessary at this particular time? It is stated that when a vacancy occurs, a judge shall be appointed. Will the gentleman explain the reasons for this bill?

Mr. WALTER. The reason is that the business in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania has been steadily increasing. Last year there were 11 percent more cases in which the United States was a party than there were at the end of the fiscal year immediately preceding. The criminal cases have increased approximately 40 percent. In all, there are about 2,000 cases on the calendar that were not disposed of by the end of the last fiscal year.

I may say further that the judges have been very actively attending to their duties. They have been sitting there very steadily. As the Members know, two of the judges are former Members of the House, and I do not believe there are any more conscientious, able, or hard-working judges than these men anywhere in the United States. If the gentleman will examine the report of the Attorney General and compare the amount of business transacted in the courts of the eastern district of Pennsylvania with that of other districts he will easily see the great need for the additional judge at this time. Unquestionably the business of the courts is going to increase steadily. The newly created judgeship expires upon the death or resignation of any one of the three sitting judges, and by providing for it we will materially assist in providing speedy justice for all.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Frequently there have been occasions where a temporary judge has been named, and the office which he holds expires at his death. Is that the situation which the gentleman has in his district at the present time?

Mr. WALTER. No; when one of the present judges resigns or dies, then the judge who will be appointed under the authority of this bill receives a permanent appointment and the number of judges will then be three.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will it be necessary to create a new office?

Mr. WALTER. No.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then the purpose of this bill is to provide one more judge permanently?

Mr. WALTER. No; this will be a temporary judgeship.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And it does not create a permanent judgeship?

Mr. WALTER. It does not create an additional new judgeship.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I wonder if the gentleman would object to this bill going over without prejudice in order that we may look into it a little further?

Mr. WALTER. I dislike very much to consent to that, because there is such an urgent need for this judgeship. I may say to the gentleman that the Attorney General has requested it.

Mr. CELLER. The Attorney General has requested this because the docket is so very heavy.

Mr. WOLCOTT. He would probably ask for it anyway, because they usually want all the judges they can get. I simply wish sometime to go into the merits of this bill a little further.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

POST OFFICE AND CUSTOMHOUSE BUILDING IN NEWARK, N. J.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10985, to repeal Public Law 246 of the Seventy-second Congress.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Public Law No. 246 of the Seventy-second Congress, entitled "An act to provide for the sale of a portion of the site of the post-office and customhouse building in Newark, N. J., to the city of Newark for the use of a public street", be, and is hereby, repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

UNITED STATES RECLAMATION PROJECT AND INDIAN IRRIGATION PROJECTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10751, to further extend the operation of the act entitled "An act to further extend the operation of the act entitled 'An act to further extend the operation of the act entitled 'An act for the temporary relief of water users on irrigation projects constructed and operated under the reclamation law', approved April 1, 1932', approved March 27, 1934", approved June 13, 1935.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the provisions of the act entitled "An act to further extend the operation of the act entitled 'An act to further extend the operation of the act entitled 'An act for the temporary relief of water users on irrigation projects constructed and operated under the reclamation law', approved April 1, 1932', approved March 27, 1934", approved June 13, 1935, be, and all of the provisions thereof are hereby, further extended for the period of 1 year.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "extend", strike out down to and including "1934", on page 2, and insert "relief to water users on United States reclamation projects and on Indian irrigation projects."

Page 2, line 4, after "1935", strike out all of line 5 and insert "hereby"; and in line 6, after the word "year", insert "so far as concerns 50 percent of the construction charges, for the calendar year 1936."

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the committee amendment offered by Mr. WHITE: On page 2, line 8, after "1936", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, however, That where the construction charge for the calendar year 1936 is payable in two installments, the sum hereby extended shall be the amount due as the first of such installments. If payable in one installment, the due date for the 50 percent to be paid shall not be changed."

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, this is an amendment that was agreed to in committee. It simply provides that inasmuch as there is going to be a moratorium of 50 percent where there are two payments, the moratorium goes to the last payment and the first payment becomes due in the second half of the moratorium.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Was this amendment before the committee?

Mr. WHITE. Yes; it was before the committee and the committee agreed to it.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to further extend relief to water users on United States reclamation projects and on Indian irrigation projects."

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF THE YAKIMA RIVER, ETC.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8414) to provide a preliminary examination of the Yakima River and its tributaries and the Walla Walla River and its tributaries, in the State of Washington, with a view to control of their floods.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Yakima River and its tributaries and the Walla Walla River and its tributaries, in the State of Washington, with a view to the control of their floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING THE TAYLOR GRAZING ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 10094) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration; to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development; to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range; and for other purposes", approved June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I wish the gentleman would explain to the House what his amendment does.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to bring all the remaining public domain under the provisions of the Taylor Grazing Act that was enacted into law June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269). The way the bill passed the House in the spring of 1934 it applied to all the remaining public domain in the United States. The bill was amended in the Senate limiting its application to only 80,000,000 acres of vacant, unappropriated, and unreserved lands of the public domain. This bill only changes one word in that law. It extends that limitation of 80,000,000 to 143,000,000 acres and will enable all the Western States to come in and put all of their remaining public lands under this law if they desire to do so.

Mr. GREEVER. I should like to ask the gentleman, Is the bill properly safeguarded so that the rights of the States to exchange their lands for lands of the United States are preserved?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. This bill makes no change whatever in the existing law except in one word. It changes eighty to one hundred and forty-three. That is in the first section of the present law. The gentleman from Wyoming and all the rest of the western Members remember that last year we sought to make this change in the law, because it is entirely wrong to leave out of any protection all the 63,000,000 acres of remaining public domain. I think everybody now realizes that fact. In fact, several western Members have bills bringing all the remaining public domain in their States that is not now in a grazing district in as subject to this act. In fact, there are almost exactly 80,000,000 acres now in grazing districts and the Grazing Division has applications for practically all the rest of the public land to be put into grazing districts. The law is working splendidly and is wonderfully satisfactory and popular.

This provision was in a bill a year ago, and it was satisfactory to both the Senate and the House. But the Senate added some very objectionable additions to it, and for those reasons the President vetoed the bill. I hope no amendments will be added to this bill, because if those provisions are tacked onto this bill of mine, the President will probably veto it again.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of said act of June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), is amended to read as follows:

"That in order to promote the highest use of the public lands pending its final disposal, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, by order to establish grazing districts or additions thereto and/or to modify the boundaries thereof, not exceeding in the aggregate an area of 143,000,000 acres of vacant, unappropriated, and unreserved lands from any part of the public domain of the United States (exclusive of Alaska), which are not in national forests, national parks and monuments, Indian reservations, reversioned Oregon and California Railroad grant lands, or reversioned Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands, and which, in his opinion, are chiefly valuable for grazing and raising forage crops: Provided, That no lands withdrawn or reserved for any other purpose shall be included in any such district except with the approval of the head of the department having jurisdiction thereof. Nothing in this act shall be construed in any way to diminish, restrict, or impair any right which has been heretofore or may be hereafter initiated under existing law validly affecting the public lands, and which is maintained pursuant to such law except as otherwise expressly provided in this act, nor to affect any land heretofore or hereafter surveyed which, except for the provisions of this act, would be a part of any grant to any State, nor as limiting or restricting the power or authority of any State as to matters within its jurisdiction. Whenever any grazing district is established pursuant to this act, the Secretary shall grant to owners of land adjacent to such district, upon application of any such owner, such rights-of-way over the lands included in such district for stock-driving purposes as may be necessary for the convenient access by any such owner to marketing facilities or to lands not within such district owned by such person or upon which such person has stock-grazing rights. Neither this act nor the act of December 29, 1916 (39 Stat. 862; U. S. C., title 43, secs. 291 and following), commonly known as the Stock Raising Homestead Act, shall be construed as limiting the authority or policy of Congress or the President to include in national forests public lands of the character described in section 24 of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. 1103; U. S. C., title 16, sec. 471), as amended, for the purposes set forth in the act of June 4, 1897 (30 Stat. 35; U. S. C., title 16, sec. 475), or such other purposes as Congress may specify. Before grazing districts are created in any State as herein provided, a hearing shall be held in the State, after public notice thereof shall have been given, at such location convenient for the attendance of State officials, and the settlers, residents, and livestock owners of the vicinity, as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior. No such district shall be established until the expiration of 90 days after such notice shall have been given, nor until 20 days after such hearing shall be held: Provided, however, That the publication of such notice shall have the effect of withdrawing all public lands within the exterior boundary of such proposed grazing districts from all forms of entry of settlement. Nothing in this act shall be construed as in any way altering or restricting the right to hunt or fish within a grazing district in accordance with the laws of the United States or of any State, or as vesting in any permittee any right whatsoever to interfere with hunting or fishing within a grazing district.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 6, strike out the word "its" and insert the word "their."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF SPOKANE RIVER, IDAHO

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1470) to provide a preliminary examination of Spokane River and its tributaries in the State of Idaho, with a view to the control of their floods.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Spokane River and its tributaries in the State of Idaho, with a view to the control of their floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examination, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LIEV EIRIKSSON

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 165, directing the Architect of the Capitol to accept a copy of the painting Liev Eiriksson Discovers America and consider the same at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 165, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 165

Directing the Architect of the Capitol to accept a copy of the painting Liev Eiriksson Discovers America

Resolved, etc., That the Architect of the Capitol is authorized and directed to accept as a gift to the people of the United States from certain Norwegian citizens a copy of the painting Liev Eiriksson Discovers America, and to cause such copy to be hung in a suitable place at the National Capitol.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. What is this?

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Mr. Speaker, last year the Minister from Norway contacted Members of the House and Senate, asking if they could accept the painting offered to them by certain citizens of Norway. The matter was considered before Senator BARKLEY's committee in the Senate. They agreed to accept it. The painting has been finished and it is on its way over here. A program has been arranged for a week from today at which the painting will be formally accepted. It has been discovered that Senator BARKLEY failed to bring the resolution up at the last session for consideration in the Senate and have it passed. It was passed in the Senate today, and we are asking for its passage now because of the fact that the ceremonies for the acceptance of the picture are to take place a week from today.

Mr. SNELL. And there is no other obligation connected with it?

Mr. KNUTE HILL. None whatever.

Mr. SNELL. And where is it to be hung?

Mr. KNUTE HILL. In the gallery in the Senate.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Yes.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Has the picture been passed upon by the Fine Arts Commission or a similar body of the Capitol as to its merits?

Mr. KNUTE HILL. It has been passed on by the Joint Library Committee.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Just to make the observation that Christopher Columbus discovered America.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Christopher Columbus has been recognized twice here, and we are asking now for recognition for Liev Eiriksson, who came to the shores of America in the year 1000.

Mr. TERRY. And I was about to inquire whether a copy of the resolution has been served upon Christopher Columbus.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, these matters ought to be gone into very carefully. I do not know anything about what there is back of it, but when we accept something of this character from a foreign government, someone ought to know definitely what we are doing and why we are doing it.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Senator BARKLEY was to have brought this matter up last year, but did not. We went ahead thinking that it had been done. The ceremony is to take place a week from today.

Mr. SNELL. Whoever arranged for that ought to have arranged to have this properly explained in the House and the Senate. I shall not object to the resolution, but it is a poor way of doing business.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. I agree; but the blame rests with the Senate.

Mr. SNELL. No; it rests with the majority here.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

DISPENSING WITH BUSINESS IN ORDER ON CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is it the plan of the majority not to have any more Calendar Wednesdays?

Mr. BANKHEAD. We hope to have them, but we are very anxious to get through with the appropriation bills.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman's side is responsible for the program. I shall not object, but a tendency has grown up in the House to put all of the small bills from various committees on the Consent Calendar. That does not tend to careful and considered legislation, but Members are forced to do that because there are never any Calendar Wednesdays. They cannot bring their bills up in a normal way to receive consideration. That is wrong. I appreciate the responsibility on the part of the majority side, and if they wish to do away with all of the Calendar Wednesdays—and there has not been one this season, if I remember correctly—I shall not object, though I call attention to the fact the majority is following a wrong procedure in forcing so much on the Consent Calendar and having so many of these bills go through without careful consideration.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I admit there may be a good deal in what the gentleman says, but it has been our expectation to get through with what we regard as the essential bills of the session.

Mr. SNELL. But the average committee never gets a chance to call a bill up under the regular program.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. SNELL. I said I would not object, though I want to express my opinion about that kind of procedure. I shall not object.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We are all anxious to get through this session of Congress as soon as possible.

Mr. SNELL. I am anxious not to have so many bills go through on the Consent Calendar without proper consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to ask when the next appropriation bill will be called up in the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It may be brought up Wednesday, and if not, then immediately after we get through with the long- and short-haul bill, which it is intended to take up Thursday. That is the present arrangement.

Mr. SNELL. The long- and short-haul bill will be called up Wednesday?

Mr. BANKHEAD. On Thursday.

Mr. BACON. Then if the appropriation bill comes in Wednesday it will have to be laid aside until Friday?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true.

Mr. WHITE. Reserving the right to object, may I ask what we are going to take up on Wednesday?

Mr. BANKHEAD. We hope to have an appropriation bill ready.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the reading of the Journal and disposition of other matters on the Speaker's desk, and after the address of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER], I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. McFARLANE. Reserving the right to object, is the gentleman by any chance going to disclose to the House why his committee is not reporting out the antilobby registration bill?

Mr. CELLER. I do not know that that has anything to do with what I am going to address the House about.

Mr. McFARLANE. Well, I am trying to get at what the gentleman is going to address the House about.

Mr. CELLER. I might say for the gentleman's edification that the committee is considering the Smith antilobbying bill at the present time.

Mr. McFARLANE. Is there any chance of the committee reporting out that bill?

Mr. CELLER. I think there is a very excellent chance. It ought to be out shortly.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Reserving the right to object, the Rules Committee, which endorsed the bill, is very hopeful that the Committee on the Judiciary will report the bill out.

Mr. McFARLANE. Further reserving the right to object, I hope the committee will report out a much stronger bill than the Smith bill. I would much prefer that the committee would report out the Black bill which has been in the gentleman's committee since May of 1935.

Mr. CELLER. I shall convey the gentleman's observations to the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]?

There was no objection.

THE 30-HOUR WEEK

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, for the past 6 years everyone has been so busy passing that buck called depression that few of us have taken the time to analyze the real causes behind the national bugaboo of unemployment.

In our glowing recollections of the halcyon days of '28 and '29 we are inclined to lose sight of the fact that there were, even in that era of apparently limitless prosperity, almost 2,000,000 men on the rolls of the unemployed. When we realize that there is a yearly increase of approximately 1,000,000 work applicants it should be obvious to the most optimistic of us that there is little hope for lightening the relief burdens in trying to re-create the past.

Let the Liberty Leaguers grow maudlin over America, the golden land of opportunity, with every boy on his way to being a millionaire or President. For those whose days of accomplishment lie in the past, the past will always relive itself in an aura of perfection.

But to those of us who are trying to carry the burdens imposed by the past and who must look to the future for our utopia, it is obvious that the solution for our problems of the present and the future lies in the present and the future. We cannot answer starvation with the reminder that an Alfred E. Smith rose from poverty in Oliver Street to riches in the Empire State tower, nor unemployment by pointing to the fact that in 1929 there were less than 2,000,000 jobless.

According to a report of the National Bureau of Economic Research there has been an increase of 27 percent in the average workingman's output since 1929. That means that, leaving the depression out of our consideration entirely, there is one less job for every five workers in the United States than there was in 1929.

Granting the possibility of a return to the prosperity of the twenties, we are still no nearer to a solution of the problem of unemployment.

Progress and our modern passion for speed and efficiency have brought about an entirely new distribution of effort. For generations inventors have been occupied with schemes for lifting the burden of production from man and transferring it to machines.

The so-called machine age has produced two serious problems that must be solved by a new economics. Production has been speeded up to such an extent that artificial means must be employed to regulate the law of supply and demand. To further complicate this process of creating new demands, new buying power, there is that other problem of the men whose places in industry have been usurped by the machines.

It is a paradox of maladjustment that progress has served to lighten the burdens of the few and increase the burdens of the many.

But while we attempt to fit an entirely new industrial era into the mold of an old economic system, there can be no sense nor justice in the distribution of benefits.

There is something painfully illogical in us, as a nation, in our reactions to innovation. We do not travel by horse car just because our grandfathers found it a fairly successful mode of transportation. We did not cling to candles after electricity was proved a cheaper and more effective method of lighting. Yet the hue and cry that is raised over attempts to modify our outmoded legislation for the protection of the great majority of our American people—the working class—would seem to indicate that we shun progress as we would the plague.

Why? What strange blindness is it that afflicts American industry that it fails to see the writing on the wall?

It should not take a master mind to grasp the fact that if one perfects a machine that will turn out a million more pairs of shoes than were turned out yesterday, one is creating a demand for just that much more buying power. If, at the same time, the machine is one which requires 10 men to operate instead of 50, and if the other 40 men are thrown out of work, one is decreasing the prospective buying power by something like 80 percent.

That, in simple terms, is what has been happening in America during the past 30 years. Business has recognized the fact superficially. Combining streamlining with efficiency, packing products in attractive cartons, national advertising, are all high-pressure methods for forcing demand to keep pace with supply. But all those things are so much lost effort if the fundamental basis for demand—buying power—is wiped out.

For a time, perhaps, Federal relief in the form of P. W. A., A. A. A., C. C. C., and so forth, can bolster the national buying power and act as a check upon the falling demand. But Federal relief will never bring about permanent recovery.

President Roosevelt realized that when he mapped out the N. R. A. program. He said then that reform, and not just reform, but a new and sound economic set-up, were not only essential to the recuperation of industrial activity but that they must come through industry itself. The N. R. A. tried to point the way with its legislation for the abolishment of child labor, the shorter workweek, and the adjusted wage scale.

The N. R. A. was passed upon as unconstitutional, yet it was ultraconservative in its demands compared with the changes that are essential in order to reshape our economic system to fit our present needs.

When the workingman points out the fact that he is bled to put more money into the pockets of the capitalists, he is called a Socialist. But certainly there can be no socialism involved in pointing out to the capitalist that he is taking money out of his own pocket when he shows no interest in preserving the goose that lays the golden egg.

So, I repeat, the N. R. A. was ultraconservative in its suggestions. The American Federation of Labor, after making a survey of present conditions, maintains that only by the acceptance of the 6-hour day, the 5-day week, can business hope to take care of this country's employable millions. And only by raising the present wage scale can buying power be made to match production.

Yet, in the face of this incontestable evidence, the executive council of the A. F. L. reports that—

With increasing industrial activity this year, a tendency to increase work hours has become apparent. According to records of actual hours worked, as furnished by the United States Department of Labor, and covering about one-half of all small-salaried workers in industry, work hours in American mines, factories, and service industries have steadily averaged about one-half hour longer per week during the first half of 1935 than they did during the last half of 1934.

The N. R. A. was accused of attempting to straight jacket business, to strangle it in a series of petty tyrannies. But it would seem from this that if business is strangled it will be in the meshes of its own greed and lack of foresight.

The Government can remain static and let unemployment increase year by year, or it can force remedies upon a self-emaciated industry. Either way, industry will pay the price or reap the benefits.

It is possible that, left to itself, American business might eventually realize its mistakes and put into effect its own reforms. But can we afford to wait for that millennium?

And if so, in the meantime, what? Is the laboring man, like Rip Van Winkle, to go to sleep for 20 years?

We all seem to forget, in our concern with red tape and the business of maintaining the status quo, that the Government is the servant of the people. It was created by the majority for the protection of the majority.

The Constitution itself is not an heirloom of value only by reason of its antiquity. Its value lies in its life—its ability to serve.

It would be a poor servant who watched his master starve without taking steps to alleviate his sufferings. It would be a disinterested servant who permitted his master to commit suicide without interference.

And yet we have on the one side eleven and one-half million men who are on the verge of starvation, and on the other side we have industry stubbornly putting its head in the noose of economic suicide. And still there are the rugged individualists who demand a strictly hands-off policy on the part of the Government. In doing so they fail to realize that they are paving the way for the very danger they fear. For there are those who will defend a misguided government against revolution, but there are relatively few who want to die fighting for a corpse.

Those of us who have stood behind the President in his tireless efforts for recovery know that the worst criticism that can be made of the New Deal is that it has been forced to move fast in order to cope with emergencies—emergencies, I may add, that were not of its own making.

If it had been possible to take the time to sugar-coat the pills that were administered to business to remedy its own ills, it is probable that the dose would never have been followed by so bitter a storm of abuse.

But abuse does not alter the efficacy of the prescription. Critics may hound an N. R. A. off the boards, but criticism will never solve the problem of unemployment. Neither will it put industry back on its feet.

The solution of those problems lies in a program of economic adjustment that will give the workingman an equitable share in the benefits derived from the mechanized increase in productive efficiency in the form of shorter working hours and that will provide business with an outlet for its surplus production through a larger buying public.

Whether one calls that program N. R. A., New Deal, 30-hour week, or what you will, it is the program which has been and continues to be advocated by the Democratic Party and by the President. It is the only program which can hope to provide a more or less permanent adjustment of the differences between capital and labor and which takes into account immediate necessity and lasting good.

HISTORY OF TEXAS

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include an address which I made on Texas history recently.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by me at the First Baptist Church, Washington D. C., March 1, 1936, as a part of Texas Centennial service:

Dr. Weaver, ladies and gentlemen, I am very happy to have a part in this Texas centennial service. I feel greatly honored that the privilege has been accorded me.

Texas comes from the Indian word "tejas", meaning friendly. Our State motto is friendship.

Reference is frequently made to the vast area of Texas, which contains 265,896 square miles. It is farther from Texarkana, Tex., to El Paso, Tex., than it is from Texarkana to Chicago, and from Texline on the north to Point Isabel to the south is 200 miles farther than from Chicago to New York City by rail. There are 254 counties in Texas. From Rockwell, the smallest, with an area of 149 square miles, to Brewster, with an area of 5,935 square miles, which latter county is 1,000 miles greater than Connecticut and 50 percent larger than the combined area of Rhode Island and Delaware.

The greatness of Texas, however, is not dependent upon its immense area. This State has contributed much to the religious, educational, and commercial life of the Nation. Your great Baptist denomination has among its number Dr. R. C. Burleson, who was the first president of Baylor University at Waco, also Samuel Palmer Brooks, Ex-Governor Pat M. Neff, and that great churchman and religious leader, known not only throughout the United States but throughout the civilized world, Dr. George W. Truett, who has been pastor of the First Baptist Church in Dallas, Tex., for 39 years, and one of the great men of America today.

Other churches have contributed their share also. It was Mirabeau B. Lamar, second President of the Republic of Texas, who said, "A cultivated mind is the guardian genius of democracy; it is the only dictator which free men acknowledge and the only security which free men desire." He did much toward establishing a great school system for the infant Republic. The University of Texas and the Agricultural and Mechanical College are among the leading institutions of learning in this country today. Texas ranks first in the production of cotton, livestock, and mineral products. It produces approximately 40 percent of the oil produced in the United States, and more than 85 percent of the total sulphur production. It has more miles of railroad than any other State in the Union, and is now one of the leading States in agriculture, commerce, and industry.

The early history of Texas is replete with stories of daring, courage, and sacrifice. The oft-repeated expression, "Texas under six flags", is understood when we reflect that the flags of Spain, France, Mexico, the Republic of Texas, the United States, and Confederate States have all flown over this territory at different times. From March 2, 1836, at which time Texas declared her independence from Mexico, until her admission into the Union

In December 1845, Texas was an independent Republic. Except during Civil War days, perhaps the most dangerous and critical period in the history of the United States, was the several years during which time consideration was being given to the admission of Texas into the Union. Twice refused admission because of agitation and confusion growing out of the slavery question, Texas was seriously considering an offer on the part of England and France for protection against further Mexican aggression, provided she would not become a part of the American Union. Had this course been followed, the map of the United States would probably be quite different today. Oregon, California, New Mexico, and other western and northwestern States had not been organized into States at that time.

The Texas Revolution resulted from the clashing of religious views, governmental policies, educational ideals, etc., of the Latin-American people to the south and the Anglo-Americans on the north, the more aggressive and progressive Anglo-Americans finally prevailing.

It is hard to believe that Texas, with a mere 30,000 population, could win her independence from Mexico, with a population of 7,000,000, yet this was accomplished.

Many brave and noble patriots played an important part during these trying times and won for themselves lasting glory and fame. I have no hesitancy, however, in saying that the man who is entitled to first place in Texas history is Gen. Sam Houston. Born in Virginia March 2, 1793, he was left fatherless when a mere child. He moved with his mother to Tennessee, where he attended school, clerked in a store, and lived several years with the Cherokee Indians. He was a valiant soldier during the War of 1812, school teacher, lawyer, Member of Congress, and Governor of Tennessee. For some reason not fully understood, he voluntarily gave up the governorship, separated from his wife, spent a short time with his Indian friends again, and then cast his fortune with the Texas patriots during the most trying days of their struggle for independence. It was he who led the half-starved, undisciplined, and poorly equipped handful of Texas soldiers in orderly retreat for many days in advance of the Mexican Army of some 3,000 men, and finally, on April 21, with his army of less than 800, completely routed the Mexican Army under Santa Ana, killing, as he stated 5 days later, 630 men and taking 570 prisoners, among whom was Gen. Santa Ana.

The few weeks preceding the battle of San Jacinto were days of intense excitement, disorder, and consternation for the Texas colonists. On March 6 Col. William B. Travis, with 182 men, including James Bowie, David Crockett, and James D. Bonham, perished in the Alamo, after holding a large Mexican army of 3,000 men at bay for 13 days, in what is probably the most heroic struggle recorded in the annals of history. Although given an opportunity by Colonel Travis, not a man chose to escape, each man selling his life at an enormous cost to the enemy, and giving rise to the expression, "Thermopylae had her messenger of defeat, but the Alamo had none." On March 19, at Goliad, Colonel Fannin and about 300 brave men, finding themselves greatly outnumbered by the Mexicans, surrendered. On March 27 these men were marched out of camp and shot down while unarmed.

San Jacinto has been listed as the sixteenth decisive battle of the world. It determined not only the fate of the Texas colonists, but pointed the way to the Pacific coast.

General Houston was the first elected president of the Republic of Texas, and later served a second term. After Texas was admitted into the Union, he was elected Senator, and later Governor of the State. Although an ardent believer of State rights, he warned against secession, and was deposed as governor rather than take the oath of allegiance to the Confederacy. With prophetic vision and wisdom, he warned, "You may, after the sacrifice of countless millions of treasures, and hundreds of thousands of precious lives, as a bare possibility, win Southern independence, if God be not against you; but I doubt it." Before the Civil War ended he died, thus ending the career of a noble man, endowed with vision, courage, and patriotism.

For the past few years preparations have been under way for the Texas Centennial, which opens officially in Dallas on June 6. The citizens of Texas, as well as visitors from other States and countries, will have an opportunity to view the many places of historic interest, and also the wonderful progress and advancement which has been made in Texas during the past century. In the midst of the beautiful city of San Antonio still stands the historic Alamo. In this immediate vicinity are to be seen several old Spanish missions erected more than 2 centuries ago. The San Jacinto Battleground is now a beautiful State park. An imposing monument, comparable to any in the country, is being erected there. A great memorial museum building is being built on the 200-acre university campus at Austin, the capital, and magnificent buildings and improvements will be seen in Dallas, Fort Worth, and other places throughout the State. There is hardly a section of Texas but that has some place of historic interest, such as old forts, Spanish missions, etc.

We have a wonderful system of highways traversing every portion of the State, on which one may drive through the beautiful pine forests and great oil fields of east Texas, the broad prairies and great ranches of central and west Texas, from the Texas Panhandle on the north to the beautiful winter gardens in the Rio Grande Valley.

Every citizen of Texas is interested in making the Centennial a success and will take a delight in contributing to the happiness of each visitor who becomes our guest during this Centennial.

As stated in the beginning, our motto is friendship—

"Out where the world is in the making,
Where fewer hearts in despair are aching,
That's where the West begins;
Where there's more of singing and less of sighing,
Where there's more of giving and less of buying—
And a man makes friends without half trying—
That's where the West begins."

Texas, the land of the Tejas!

THE SYNAGOGUE AS AN AGENCY MAKING FOR ETHICAL GROWTH

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD to include an address delivered by my colleague, Mr. KOPPLEMANN, at the Willard Hotel recently.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN] delivered before the United Synagogue of America Convention at the Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C., Sunday afternoon, March 15, 1936:

The subject assigned to me is one that could more adequately be treated by a rabbi and scholar. Why a layman should have been chosen to speak on this vital problem is hard to say. Perhaps the intention was to limit the discussion just to those elements which appear significant to the average layman. Thus there would be a more practical approach to the discussion at this symposium as well as at the seminar meetings tomorrow. As a layman I naturally relate thinking and planning, whatever may be the nature of that thinking and planning, to everyday matters. Hence, I am glad to be here today and hope that whatever I can offer will be of help to this conference.

Many of us look at the synagogue chiefly as a house of worship, a holy temple where, through appropriate ritual and ceremony, we may come closer to the Divine. That is not altogether so. The synagogue is more than a place where prayer and praise is offered the Holy One. It has a definite concern and relationship to everyday life. That fact is evident when we review the principal activities of our present-day synagogue, particularly one affiliated with the United Synagogue. What do we find when we examine one of these?

Every day, except Saturdays, classes are conducted for children to receive instruction in Hebrew, the principles of our faith, and the history of our people. On Sunday afternoon and evenings groups of boys and girls organized in bar mitzvah clubs, alumni associations, Young Judean Clubs, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Junior Achievement Leagues, Camp Fire Girls, and others hold meetings.

The Young People's League, offering cultural and social activities, draws large attendance to the synagogue assembly rooms. Often committees of this organization will be found conferring in small rooms making arrangements for debates, dramatic performances, social gatherings, lectures, and forums. The Men's Club, or Brotherhood, and Sisterhood also have their functions at the synagogue for social, cultural, communal, and philanthropic endeavors. Thus, we find the synagogue of today much more than a house of prayer. Rather it is a community institution in which old and young find some interest that satisfies their religious, cultural, and social needs.

Let us examine the activities of these different organizations. The teachers of the religious classes instruct the children in the prayer book, the Bible, and the ceremonies which are part of our religion. They also teach the history of our people, and the events which form the background of our festival celebrations and the significance of these events which caused our ancestors to establish the commemoration of them and to attach to them holy importance. The festivals are not mere ceremonies. The manner and the reason for their observance brings us closer to the highest ideals of mankind. In the religious schools the children are taught early the nobility of charity and are encouraged to divide the money given them by their parents with the various charitable organizations. They send flowers to the hospitals, gifts to the home for the aged, and provide entertainment for the children of orphan asylums. Thus we see that children acquire more than mere knowledge in the synagogues. Their characters are trained and they are inspired to live in accordance with the highest ideals. Our young people are less concerned with the learning from textbooks than with the general interest that makes life real and vital to them. In the synagogue they engage in pursuits which bring them together, strengthen friendships, and because of these friendships they take a more understanding interest in what is happening. They consider it a matter of course to help the synagogue, to work for Palestine, and to support local social and welfare institutions.

The Sisterhood and Brotherhood make an important contribution to synagogue life and, as a result, to the community as a whole. Their interest in the synagogue extends to other institutions, Jewish and non-Jewish. Culturally they play an important part because of the discussion groups and lectures, which are outstanding features of their program.

Why do men and women join the Brotherhood and the Sisterhood? The answer will probably be, "We want to form new friendships, we want to cultivate our old friends, we want to learn something about Jewish life or about the great movements that determine human progress." Some will say they are interested in giving expression to their abilities and aptitudes. We see, then, that the synagogue has all the foundations needed for the building of a fine educational institution, dedicated to the enlarging of our human interests, and bringing out the best that is in us for worth-while causes and purposes.

Perhaps some look askance at these activities. Perhaps they feel that after all the most important activity of the synagogue is that of worship. But let us examine a little more closely the ritual and prayer of our services. What do we say or do when we worship? The most important part of the service is the reading of the Torah. This portion of the service is emphasized by the beautiful melodies chanted when the scroll is taken from the ark and replaced after an appropriate selection is read. Now, what is the nature of these selections that we read on the Sabbath and the holidays? They consist of laws, narrations of events, and exhortations of the prophets that express the highest ethical aspirations.

In the olden days when a man was called to the Torah he not only read the portion assigned to him but also translated it and explained to the congregation how the ethical principles expressed in that portion could be applied to their times and conditions. Nowadays this practice has been discontinued. The sermon has taken its place. It is evident, however, that the principal objective of the reading of the Torah was the ethical and moral education of our people.

What are the things we pray for? "Oh, my God," reads a prayer we recite every day, "guard my tongue from evil and my lips from speaking guile, and to such as curse me let my soul be dumb; yea, let my soul be unto all as the dust. Open my heart to Thy law, and let my soul pursue Thy commandments."

Again:

"And may it be Thy will, O Lord our God and God of our fathers, to make us familiar with Thy law, and to make us cleave to Thy commandments. Oh, lead us not into the power of sin, or of transgression or iniquity, or of temptation, or of scorn; let not the evil inclination have sway over us; keep us far from a bad man and a bad companion; make us cleave to the good inclination and to good works; subdue our inclination so that it may submit itself unto Thee; and let us obtain this day, and every day, grace, favor, and mercy in Thine eyes and in the eyes of all who behold us; and bestow loving kindness upon us."

When we express our remorse and penitence for our transgressions, it is not so much the violation of ritual observance that oppresses us as the transgression of ethical law.

Another prayer reads: "For in Thy compassion we put our trust, upon Thy charity we depend, to Thy forgiveness we look, and for Thy salvation we hope. The paths of Thy mercies Thou didst reveal unto him and taughtest him that Thou art a compassionate and gracious God, slow to anger, abundant in mercy, and full of beneficence, governing the whole world with the attribute of compassion."

How truly does the Prophet Micah guide us along paths of ethical conduct. Here are his words:

"And many nations shall come and say, Come and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord and to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us His ways and we will walk in His paths; for the law shall go forth of Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."

"And He shall judge among many people and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruninghooks; nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

"But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid, for the mouth of Lord of Hosts hath spoken it."

"He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly and to love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God?"

Would that every Member of the Congress and the leaders of the nations commit his words to memory and keep them in their hearts. What a happier world would be ours.

We must realize, then, that worship is intended to strengthen our will to live in accordance with moral and ethical law. From every standpoint, then, the synagogue is an institution that has found its highest usefulness in building character.

Unfortunately, we cannot say that the synagogue is altogether succeeding at the present time in this most-important function. Obsequious fealty inside the synagogue is not always followed by straightforward and ethical dealing outside the synagogue. There are times even when the synagogue adopts a business code for the management of its affairs, which falls short of the ethical codes set forth for us in our holy writings.

Why is the synagogue nowadays so powerless in influencing our lives? The answer must be because we have managed to confine synagogue activities to a very small part of our interests. If we cut the synagogue off from the world, how can we expect it to influence the world. We, ourselves, have impoverished and weakened the synagogue.

In times past the synagogue was the center of Jewish life. Everything that took place in the synagogue was related to the life of the Jewish community. The rabbi was more than a speaker—he was the guide and the leader. The social values of the synagogue were manifest in many ways. For instance, at least 10 people, a minyan, is necessary for adequate worship activity. The reason for group worship was to get away from the selfish motives of individual worship. When a man prays with at least nine other people he feels himself part of the larger community. His prayers are uttered not alone for his own benefit. They take into account the needs of the community and the suffering of his fellow men.

It often happened that the services would be interrupted, and properly so, by a worshiper, who would state that another worshiper had committed an injustice against him, had taken unfair advantage of him in some way. He felt himself aggrieved and stated that it was impossible for the congregation to draw closer to the divine when injustice and unrighteousness were in their midst. The community leaders made arrangements for the adjustment of the grievance in order that the service may be continued. Definitely here the ethical ideal was part and parcel of synagogue life.

Nowadays, unfortunately, we have retained only the shell, the outside form of our synagogue life. We go through the ceremonies, we utter the prayers, but they are meaningless to us. Something must be done to revitalize the synagogue as an agency making for ethical growth. The Jewish heart and soul crave it. Only a few days ago I received a letter from a very dear friend whose father had recently passed away. Because of his heart-rending experience his thoughts were naturally turned to the deeper things of life, and this is what he wrote me with regard to the synagogue:

"The thought that has come to me more than almost any other during the last few weeks is the yearning of people for understanding and fellowship. Too often in our synagogues and churches we find respect for the mighty, influential, and wealthy alone. Too often people do things for their effect and their publicity value. What we long for is the genuine fellowship of people who understand. We Jews today should be able to give each other just that type of understanding. Regardless of class, of wealth, of difference in creed, heart should touch heart and life should touch life. In the old days of our forefathers the synagogue meant just that. All of us together shared the ghetto life. We were all equal in the synagogue. Today, in the face of world disaster, we must recover some of that understanding of suffering. Then, too, this understanding of suffering should not be confined to that of our own people. We must extend the hand of friendliness and brotherhood to all who are afflicted, wherever they may be and whatever their faith."

My young friend continued: "Never before in my life have I felt the nearness of God as I have in these last 2 weeks. We, too, in Jewish life must recover our sense of the presence of the Heavenly Father as an unseen but constant companion. Hitler may persecute, pogroms may kill, fortunes may be wiped away, but 'from everlasting to everlasting Thou art God.' We Jews need this feeling of continuity—this possession of an anchor midst the turbulent seas of modern life. America has no greater need than the recovery of a sense of reverence for and worship of Almighty God."

To make the synagogue function once more in our lives in the vital way in which we need it, we should reexamine the present synagogue activities. Are we making adequate use of the institutions that are housed in our synagogues? Is the curriculum of our religious schools a mere vestige of what was adequate a hundred years ago? Are we utilizing modern educational progress in enriching our school life? Are the programs that we are adopting for our children, our youth, and our adults adequate for the ethical aims we seek to reach? Are we bringing out all the spiritual value in our services so that we can derive the greatest amount of help? Is the synagogue being used as a means for bringing back into our homes that beautiful love and spiritual content which made the home a bulwark of strength to our people?

The synagogue has preserved Jewish life for thousands of years. In times of persecution and despair the Jew has found in the synagogue a source of strength and happiness that has enabled him to hold his head high and to bear up under insult and oppression, confident of the greatness and value of his traditions. We must restore the synagogue to its former powers. To do this we must realize that a synagogue is very much like a dynamo. You know how a dynamo functions. Mechanical motion is applied to it, and it proceeds to transmit this coarser form of energy into electricity, a higher and more valuable form. So it is with the synagogue. Let us put into it our devotion, our material sacrifices; let us supply to it our energy, our intellectual strength, and it will transform this material force into spiritual energy that will ennoble, enrich, and uplift our lives.

Judaism has two institutions from which we can draw spiritual energy. As members of families, we go to the home for a sense of love and security. As members of the community, we go to the synagogue for fellowship and understanding. Let our seminar meetings tomorrow devote themselves to the various aspects of this problem so that the United Synagogue of America may have before it a program for developing and creating the materials, curricula, methods, textbooks, etc., that the synagogues and the institutions may need so that they may be restored to their functions as agencies for ethical growth. Our synagogues should become veritable towers of strength for the spiritual life. In this way the citizens of our faith in the United States will make their contributions to the development of ever higher ethical planes of living and fellowship in this great country of ours.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

INSPECTION AND ALLEGED SEIZURE OF TELEGRAMS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, transmitting, pursuant to Senate Resolution 245 (submitted by Mr. BORAH and agreed to on Mar. 9, 1936), a report relative to inspection or seizure of telegrams or other private communications, which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

REPORT OF NATIONAL HISTORICAL PUBLICATIONS COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Archivist, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report submitted by the National Historical Publications Commission pertaining to the making of "plans, estimates, and recommendations for such historical works and collections of sources as seem appropriate for publication and/or otherwise recording at the public expense", which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Library.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. WALSH presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the Gloucester (Mass.) Business and Professional Women's Club, praying for the enactment of the bill (H. R. 5051) to amend the Civil Service Act approved January 16, 1883 (22 Stat. 403), and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also presented the petition of Sergeant William E. Walters Camp, No. 58, United Spanish War Veterans, of Framingham, Mass., praying for the enactment of House bill 9472, the so-called Philippine travel pay bill, which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of Local Union No. 3284, United Textile Workers of America, of Webster, Mass., praying for the enactment of the so-called Ellenbogen bill, relating to the textile industry, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the board of directors of the Lowell (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce, praying for the enactment of the so-called Copeland bill, providing for the repeal of section 184D of the Revenue Act of 1934, pertaining to the publication of income-tax returns, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from the Greater Lawrence (Mass.) Liberty Associates, remonstrating against the imposition of additional taxes upon beers and liquors, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from the Springfield (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce, remonstrating against the enactment of the bill (S. 3744) to amend the act creating the Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from the board of directors of the Gardner (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce, remonstrating against Government ownership of railroads or further regulatory railroad measures, such as the full-crew bill, and so forth, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented letters in the nature of petitions from the legislative committee of the Massachusetts Home Economics Association, the Committee on Government and Its Operation of the Medford League of Women Voters, the Young Woman's Club, and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Winthrop, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate block booking and blind selling of motion pictures, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Division of Conservation of Natural Resources and Gardens of the Massachusetts Federation of Women's Clubs, favoring the enactment of legislation making Mount Olympus a national park, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens, being retail grocers, and the New Bedford Retail Grocers' and Provision Dealers' Association, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of Senate bill 3154, to prevent price discriminations, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from the board of directors of the Gardner (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce, remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 3154, to prevent price discriminations, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8577) to amend the Teachers' Salary Act of the District of Columbia, approved June 4, 1924, as amended, in relation to raising the trade or vocational schools to the level of junior high schools, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1699) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3976. A bill to amend the act approved February 27, 1931, known as the District of Columbia Traffic Act (Rept. No. 1701);

S. 3977. A bill to authorize the Washington Gas Light Co. to alter its corporate structure, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1695); and

S. 4165. A bill amending section 1 (h) of the District of Columbia Unemployment Act (Rept. No. 1700).

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3799. A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Randolph, Mo. (Rept. No. 1696); and

S. 3971. A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Ogdensburg, N. Y. (Rept. No. 1697).

Mr. SHEPPARD also, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3945) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of certain free highway bridges across the Red River, from Moorhead, Minn., to Fargo, N. Dak., reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1703) thereon.

Mr. BULKLEY, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 4212) to amend title I of the National Housing Act, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1698) thereon.

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 3486) to repeal the act entitled "An act relating to Philippine currency reserves on deposit in the United States", reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1702) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CAREY:

A bill (S. 4293) for the relief of George W. Middleton; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HATCH:

A bill (S. 4298) to authorize an appropriation to pay non-Indian claimants whose claims have been extinguished under the act of June 7, 1924, but who have been found entitled to awards under said act as supplemented by the act of May 31, 1933; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

(Mr. BARKLEY (for Mr. BLACK) introduced Senate Joint Resolution 234, which was ordered to lie on the table, and appears later under a separate heading.)

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. NORBECK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 11418, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 48, to strike out lines 4 to 8, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For cooperative planting and care of the shelterbelt on a 50-50 basis with landowners, who will make the land available free of charge and enter into an agreement with the Government for planting, care, and maintenance over a period of 5 years under conditions by which not more than 50 percent of the expense is borne by the Government, $1,000,000: Provided, That the shelterbelt shall consist of planting of trees and shrubs in strips not exceeding 165 feet wide and from one-half mile to a mile apart of length to be determined by the Government, oriented so as to protect fields and buildings from wind and located within a zone approximately 100 miles in width between the ninety-seventh and one hundred and first degrees of longitude west of Greenwich and extending from the Canadian boundary to the thirty-second degree of latitude: Provided further, There may first be a deduction of 5 percent from this fund to be used exclusively for the necessary expense in connection with production of trees and shrubs, including the purchase of land for nursery sites for the production of trees for shelterbelt purpose, and for distribution of nursery stock at cost to actual farmers living within the shelterbelt area, who may desire to undertake tree planting at their own expense."

ST. PATRICK'S DAY

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, March 17 has most unusual distinction, for on that day St. Patrick is honored throughout all America although he died 1,443 years ago in Ireland. Only one other person of foreign birth is so honored in this country and that is Columbus, who discovered the New World. The fact is that people generally in this country observe St. Patrick's Day with almost as much zest as they do the birthdays of our great national heroes.

This is more amazing when one recalls that St. Patrick was not a native of Ireland, but rather was a Britisher, stolen away as a slave to Ireland, escaping to secure an education, and then returning to the Emerald Isle as a missionary. While tradition has it that he was responsible for driving the snakes out of Ireland, and although many think of him in terms of the shamrock and the "wearing o' the green", the substantial reasons for preserving his memory have not been given sufficient attention.

Fourteen hundred and forty-three years ago, on the 17th day of March, St. Patrick died in Ireland after having devoted 61 years of his life to the holy work of implanting in the hearts of the Irish people the faith which, at all costs, they have kept to the present time.

Mr. President, St. Patrick's Day recalls the great achievements of men of Irish faith and trained in Irish learning during three centuries after Patrick's death—that golden age of Ireland, when not only the students of Europe flocked to her schools, were admitted to them without distinction, and educated gratuitously, but her scholars carried the light of knowledge to all parts of the then known world. The labors of Irish monks and missionaries in Scotland, England, Gaul, Italy, Switzerland, and Germany; the illustrious names that Ireland contributed to the civilization of those countries; Ireland's early contribution to the arts and sciences and to the principles of wise representative and just government are all set down in the pages of history never to be forgotten.

In order to have a proper appreciation of St. Patrick and the golden age which he introduced one should have some slight acquaintance with history. It should be remembered that he did his work in the fifth century, at a time when the light of Roman civilization was rapidly fading into its twilight glow. Then followed 500 years of the Dark Ages, when civilization lapsed into barbarism. During this time it was the beacon light of Irish culture, lighted by St. Patrick, which afforded the illumination by which Europe returned to the paths of civilization and culture. Hence it is true that not only Ireland but all the world has become indebted to this noble saint.

Mr. President, having been born in Wales, where Celtic blood and traditions are supreme, I have some understanding of the fascination which Ireland holds for Irish people everywhere. The map of Ireland represents the roots and bedrock of the Celtic race, regardless of class, boundary lines, or religious tradition. I have yet to meet any person coming from this place who has not been proud if he appeared to have the map of Ireland imprinted on his face.

St. Patrick was the most successful missionary of the fifth century. His resting place at Downpatrick is still a shrine of pilgrimage. His would have been a saint's life in any age or in any country. Since the days of St. Paul no greater missionary ever lived. The primal motive power of his life was his desire to preach the gospel.

I like to join in celebration of St. Patrick's Day because he belongs to all Christians, both Protestant and Catholic. He did his work in a day when Protestants and Catholics as we know them did not exist. His was undying loyalty to his Lord. It does us good today to lay aside the formalities of sectarian difference to join in praise of the patron saint of Ireland who belongs to men and women of all lands.

I have long observed that the true spirit of the Irish people is devotion to religion, irrespective of denomination or sect. We should not forget that Ireland has furnished the world with heroic examples of Protestant as well as Catholic leadership. The struggle for freedom in Ireland was basically due to an economic rather than a religious issue. Proof of this is found in the championship of Ireland's cause by the great Gladstone, who characterized the Act of Union of 1800 "the blackest and foulest transaction in the history of man." Witness also that bravest and most picturesque of Ireland's heroes, Robert Emmet, a stalwart Protestant. In 1803 Emmet led a desperate revolt which failed, and he died on the scaffold with such supreme courage that his name has ever been dearest to his race. The Young Ireland movement was led by brilliant men, John Mitchel, Thomas Davis, and Smith O'Brien, all of whom were Protestants. Hence it is that Ireland's cause has transcended the narrow boundaries of sectarianism.

Mr. President, if I interpret the genius of the Irish people aright, I would say that they have joined a consuming passion for the Christian religion with a flaming love for liberty. This has produced in them a spirit of toleration as a result of long generations of struggle for the ideals they hold dear. Having suffered in the cause of liberty, they have come to understand the virtues of patience and sympathy which extend the rights of religious liberty to others. The same spirit of religious toleration is one of the cornerstones of our American liberty. It is interesting to observe that apart from the birthday of the Christ, observed at Christmas, St. Patrick is the only outstanding character in the field of religion whose glory is extolled equally by men of all faiths in this country.

St. Patrick's life was one sublime with love. He was summoned to begin his missionary work in Ireland in a heavenly dream. In his dream he heard voices calling to him, saying: "We entreat thee, holy youth, that you come here and walk among us." He responded to the call, saying: "God rules me. Therefore I go to Ireland to preach the gospel."

It was the gospel of love which St. Patrick carried with him on his journeys. He was under commission of the Master who had said: "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another." No man could be, can be his disciple, his follower, and fail in the realization of this fundamental teaching. "By this shall all men know that ye are My disciples, if ye love one another." And going back again to his ministry we find that this precept breathes through all his teaching. Its very essence is summed up in the principle we call the golden rule. "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." As I view it, the golden rule is the supreme law of life. It may be paraphrased in the words of Ralph Waldo Trine: "As you do unto others, others will do unto you. What I give, I get. If I love you, really and truly and actively love you, you are as sure to love me in return as the earth is sure to be warmed by the rays of the midsummer sun. If I hate you, ill-treat you and abuse you, I am equally certain to arouse the same kind of antagonism toward me."

Mr. President, unless we love people we cannot understand them. The great need of the world today is love and understanding. In a world confronted with war, in a land where we have poverty amidst plenty, in a day when youth are graduating into a society where no useful employment is being offered them, in a machine age where automobile accidents take a toll of 36,000 people every year in this country, we need more of love and human understanding. We have acquired a knowledge of machines. Now we must acquire a knowledge of ourselves. We must come to a deeper appreciation of the human beings about us. The great problems of today are human problems, and we must solve them in a human way.

St. Patrick pointed the way for us when he went into Ireland when its natives were wild and barbarous and within his lifetime planted the seeds of love and understanding which produced the great people who are honored all over the world today. Let us, like St. Patrick, resolve to preach and to practice the gospel of love.

BOONDOGLING AND BUDGET BALANCING IN RELATION TO PROSPERITY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR ROBINSON

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a very interesting and timely address delivered by the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], majority leader of the Senate, over the national network of the Columbia Broadcasting System, on March 12, 1936. The subject of the address is Boondoggling and Budget Balancing in Relation to Prosperity.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Records which cannot be questioned disclose the existence of higher business levels during the early part of 1936 when compared with the same period for 1935.

The February department-store report of the Federal Reserve Board showed sales during February of this year 13 percent above those in February 1935.

Steam-railway freight revenues for the year 1935 exceeded those in 1934 by more than $155,000,000. Passenger revenues increased approximately $12,000,000. Railway employment was augmented more than 6 percent for February 1936, compared with the same month in 1935.

Labor Department statistics disclose a 33-percent decline in employment from April 1930 to April 1933 and a decrease in pay rolls during the same period of 53 percent. Industrial employment is shown to have risen 31 percent between April 1933 and December 1935 and the industrial pay rolls have increased 61 percent during the same time.

Do you know why agriculture and industry are making such rapid strides back to prosperous conditions under the wise policies of the Roosevelt administration? There is no occasion to repeat once again the dreary economic picture which prevailed when this administration came into power. It has been done elsewhere and done well and the people are acquainted with the facts.

During the Hoover administration approximately 900,000 farms were sold either for delinquent taxes or under mortgage foreclosure. Do you realize what that means? The American farmers, among the hardest-working men in the world, were being turned from their homes in the midst of plenty like exiles because a Republican administration was unable to manage properly our economic policies.

The Roosevelt administration broke the curve of deflation and started the spiral upward. How was this done? Simply by building up for the farmers a decent income. It substituted industrial activity for industrial stagnation. Our present enviable position in world economics is a direct result of Roosevelt policies. Don't let anyone tell you otherwise.

Every business page in every newspaper daily proclaims by its headlines that our people are again on the road to prosperity and the emergency is receding farther and farther into history. Our political foes cannot dispute the facts, but, driven by political necessity, they seek to belittle the administration that made success a fact and not a dream. So they are sniping at every policy, every step that leads toward the goal of restoration.

They have no economic plan; not even an economic theory. By elaborating on petty details they hope to build up a case which the American people will mistake for a program but thus far they have been notably unsuccessful. They moan about Government expenditures and speak of waste and squandering, failing to tell the public that legislators of their own political complexion voted for the very appropriations which they criticize. They likewise fail to tell the people why that spending program was necessary. I shall do so tonight.

The carping spokesmen fail to agree, and in most cases they merely plead for a chance to administer the very policies which the New Deal has placed in effect.

The only thing offered by the Republican Party is a return to the Pollyanna theory of economic reform. You good people are very well acquainted with the Pollyanna theory because it cost you dearly under the last Republican administration. You recall how the President in the White House was declaring that "prosperity was just around the corner" while a few of the vast army of unemployed stood on the street corners, shivering and cold, trying vainly to sell apples and pencils to the passersby. It was a "noble experiment" in economics but unfortunately it had a disastrous effect upon the unhappy occupants of American homes. It just wouldn't work.

In their efforts to ridicule and defame the Roosevelt program, the Republican spokesmen are now directing a heavy fire against certain work-relief projects which they call "boondoggling" and which they hold up as horrible examples of the waste of the taxpayers' money.

In a recent speech in the Senate I took up in detail the specific projects ridiculed by the Republican National Committee and by the miscalled Liberty League, and showed that in most instances they were the best projects that could be devised, considering the fact that the projects must be accessible to the workers and also of such nature as to absorb the untrained in great numbers, as well as the skilled, who are comparatively small in number. I showed by the record that they were health projects which will prevent untold misery for large numbers of people in the future. It was also shown that in every instance the Works Progress Administration had secured the advice and approval of local authorities before undertaking such projects, whether those local officials were Republicans or Democrats or members of any political party. The record discloses that the administration here in Washington has tried to keep politics out of the great humane and charitable work of caring for the unemployed.

But our Republican foes still continue to belabor the administration. They complain that we fail to answer their constant grumbling and complaints.

Tonight I shall answer one of our severest critics, because he has demanded an answer, and because he says we are afraid to meet him with the facts. It is my purpose now to take up some of the statements made by Mr. Herbert Hoover, the titular head and spokesman for the Republican Party, who is carrying on a continuous campaign to break the faith of the people in Roosevelt policies, and apparently to secure for himself the Presidential nomination.

In his speech at Colorado Springs on last Saturday night, Mr. Hoover accused Democratic spokesmen of answering him with personal remarks, but with making "no answer to facts or verses or chapters given in proof."

Let us examine some of the statements which Mr. Hoover has passed out for facts. In his Lincoln Day speech on February 12, the former President quoted a New York newspaper to the effect that the Rural Resettlement Administration was employing 12,089 Federal officials to provide relief for 5,012 persons, adding that it was costing Uncle Sam $350 in overhead for every $60 of relief. He neglected to state that the same newspaper, long before he made that Lincoln Day speech, published an admission that the story was in error and that the figures were grossly incorrect.

This newspaper ran the full text of Mr. Hoover's Lincoln Day speech, and once again, for the sake of accuracy, the newspaper pointed out that the figures were in error. But Mr. Hoover, to my knowledge at least, has never made correction.

Several months ago a member of President Roosevelt's Cabinet made an honest mistake by saying that three bills, later held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, had been passed during Mr. Hoover's administration. The latter promptly announced that the bills had actually been enacted under Mr. Coolidge, and he demanded a public correction, which was given him. I wonder now if Mr. Hoover will be fair enough to apologize publicly to the Roosevelt administration for this gross misstatement which he has sent broadcast regarding the cost of relief?

On every opportunity he can get, Mr. Hoover takes occasion to question the financial policies of the Federal Government and to raise disturbing doubts in the minds of people who have a little money invested in worth-while American stocks and bonds. He keeps preaching that inflation is on its way and that its consequences will ruin investors. Instead of promoting confidence, he seeks to destroy it.

A month or more ago he appeared as a witness in court to repeat once again his inflationary threat, and he cited the increase in stock-market values to justify his position. He made no reference to the all-important fact that at the same time the bond market was rising at a rate only slightly below that of the stock market. In other words, the whole picture showed public confidence in the upward swing of business and industry, while Mr. Hoover only gave part of the picture to suit his own ends. Is that conscientious or justified criticism? What he is saying now is exactly in line with the tactics he used in 1932, when he predicted that the election of the Democrats would still further paralyze trade and commerce, and that as a result of their policies, grass soon would be growing in the streets of every city.

Perhaps the most remarkable claim made by Mr. Hoover is that the downward spiral of the depression was stopped in June-July of 1932 and that the subsequent upward movement was stopped only because the people lacked confidence in Mr. Roosevelt. That statement was so contrary to the facts that the administration made no answer, but now it is being repeated in solemn and grave manner by Republican spokesmen and partisans in all parts of the country.

To refute that statement, I shall now call Mr. Herbert Hoover himself as a witness. He says the depression was turned in June and July of 1932. He accepted renomination by the Republican Party on August 11 of that same year, and in his acceptance speech he admitted that millions of his fellow countrymen were out of work, that the farmers were selling their products at prices below a living standard, and that millions of other people were "haunted by fears for the future." Then he added, and I quote:

"With united effort we can and will turn the tide toward the restoration of business, employment, and agriculture. It will call for the utmost devotion and wisdom. Every reserve of American courage and vision must be called upon to sustain us and to plan wisely for the future."

Now we have the true situation. Mr. Hoover claims now that he turned the depression in June of 1932, whereas in August of that same year he was accepting renomination with the pious hope that he might be able to turn the tide if given another chance.

Let us follow Mr. Hoover a bit further. Back in 1931, when the depression was digging in and taking a terrific toll in human suffering, I sponsored, along with my colleagues, a bill to provide a moderate sum of money to feed hungry drought victims in Arkansas and other States. Mr. Hoover fought that measure with all the power at his command, and he accused those of us who sponsored the bill with "playing politics with human misery." Yet in his recent speech at Colorado Springs, to which I just referred, Mr. Hoover said the following, and again I quote:

"If the use of all the powers of the Government to relieve our people from hunger and cold in calamity is radical, then you should be radical."

How can you reconcile those two conflicting statements? How can you answer a man who constantly shifts his position on every important issue?

Pass on now to perhaps what is the most amazing of all the astonishing statements made by the former Republican President in his frenzied efforts to halt the onward movement of President Roosevelt's popularity. Like the man who wanted to sweep back the tide with a broom, the unhappy Mr. Hoover is grasping at anything in the hope that it may serve his purpose. In another of his great oratorical efforts, this one delivered at St. Louis, on December 17 last, he said:

"After the election of the New Deal we began a retreat. Only in the United States was there an interruption. We were the strongest and should have led the van. And we lagged behind for 2 years."

"The other countries of the world went forward without interruption. They adopted no New Deal."

I ask the American people to pass judgment on that statement by Mr. Hoover. It seems incredible that any man who reads the daily newspapers could make such a statement. Of course, as good Americans, it is not our part to adopt a pharisaical attitude and to think ourselves better than other nations because we are fortunate enough to avoid most of the troubles which pursue them constantly.

One wonders how many people in this country agree with Mr. Hoover that the other nations of the world have gone forward economically while we lagged behind? Is that true of Europe? Is it true of the Orient? Why the newspapers for the past several weeks have been headlining the threatening events taking place across the Pacific and across the Atlantic. We have been assured that the far eastern powder keg is close to another explosion, that nations are glaring at one another and virtually defying one another to armed conflict. We heard of the war in Africa and of the mobilization of millions of armed men. We are informed by those who should know that the real cause is the severe economic crisis threatening the nations involved. We read of armies marching once again, of military airplanes droning overhead, of tanks rumbling through city streets, while statesmen meet and do their best to avert what threatens to be an awful calamity. And back of it all is the well-known fact that the main contributing factor is the distressed financial and economic position of those nations involved. We know how the nations of Europe have suffered economically during the past several years, and with the notable exception of Great Britain, we realize how hard they are finding the struggle to come back.

And yet in the face of such undeniable facts Mr. Hoover goes on the radio and solemnly assures the American people that the other nations are moving forward toward prosperity while we lag behind. It reminds us of the theory advanced by Republican spokesmen everywhere back in 1929 that the real cause of the depression came from abroad. Now we know that actually the depression in foreign lands was only a contributing factor, if any, and that the real cause of the collapse in this country was unbridled speculation and exploitation and the failure of the Republican Party to revive the buying power of agriculture.

Contrary to what Mr. Hoover says, the rest of the world, unfortunately, has suffered extreme reverses in the drive to bring back economic prosperity, while on the other hand, we have forged steadily forward under the New Deal policies. There has never been a time in recent years when the United States has occupied a finer or better position in world affairs, and it is due wholly to the course pursued under the leadership of our great President.

He has removed the rancor and distrust with which the nations of Latin America formerly looked upon our policies, and he has taken great strides forward in cementing the bonds which bind the peoples of North, South, and Central America. At the same time he has kept us away from anything even remotely suggesting participation in the quarrels of Europe and the Far East by pursuing a policy which was at once wise and strong.

In attacking what they call New Deal spending policies, I have pointed out that our Republican critics are careful to confine themselves to generalities without explaining the enormous good which New Deal policies have accomplished in promoting recovery both for the farmers and for industry in general. It is safe to say that without the courageous policies advanced by Mr. Roosevelt, an untold number of retailers, merchants, department-store owners, and businessmen engaged in the heavy construction industry would have passed into bankruptcy long since.

In his recent speech at Baltimore Senator TRIDINGS put his finger with unerring accuracy upon the fundamental distinction between the policies pursued by the three previous Republican administrations and those pursued by the administration now in power. We all know that if you want to run a business, you must have a market for your product. That market must be either in this country or abroad, and in some cases it may be both. The Roosevelt administration has been striving with might and main to build up a constant and permanent market for American goods in this country while the Republicans were always casting their eyes on Europe and other foreign lands. Let me quote from Senator TRIDINGS, who said:

"During the period from 1921 to 1929 approximately 14½ billions of dollars in gold were loaned by the people of this country to foreign governments with the stamp of approval of the United States Department of State upon most of the loans.

"During the same period of time America sold more goods abroad than ever before in its peacetime history.

"We made these large sales of goods to foreigners because we were lending them the money with which to buy our goods; lending it to foreigners who already owed us more than they could pay under existing tariff barriers created by us."

In line with the foregoing, I wish to point out that billions of dollars included in those foreign loans were lost by default. It may be objected that the Roosevelt administration is using Government loans while those loans abroad were privately promoted and privately floated. My contention is that it was money earned and owned by hard-working American citizens and that the loss was terrific.

These foreign-loan defaults were one of the major causes of the depression. They resulted in innumerable bank failures and gave birth to economic troubles which this administration is still endeavoring to overcome. You will note that these foreign loans built up a false prosperity and that to replace that market a new market had to be created. Under the prudent direction of Secretary of State Hull, this administration is now making substantial progress in clearing away the international trade and tariff restrictions which strangled world trade, to which strangulation this country had led the way by enacting the Smoot-Hawley tariff. Mr. Hull is succeeding in opening up new markets while at the same time avoiding consequent harm to industry and agriculture in this country.

Along with this restoration of foreign commerce the administration has made marvelous strides forward in building up new markets in America, in neglected areas, which should have received aid from the Federal Government years before. The best customer for American manufactured goods is the American farmer and the Roosevelt administration has acted on that theory.

Why are the smokestacks of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, and New England belching forth black smoke once again? Because the Roosevelt administration put money in the pockets of farmers in Kansas and Nebraska and other parts of the agricultural regions of this country. By the same token the policy of relief spending has accomplished the twofold purpose of providing absolutely essential assistance to millions of unemployed needy while at the same time it has primed the pump and helped start the wells of business once again. This relief money has not been tossed away in Europe or any other foreign land. Almost every dollar has been expended here in America, and by common agreement of the economists, it has been the most useful money imaginable.

We all know that relief dollars are spent quickly because the recipients have no cash reserves and they must spend it for necessities about as fast as it is received. The relief money in this way has been a tremendous help to the small business man and the retailers who depend upon a cash income for their livelihood.

As I said in the Senate the other day, the Roosevelt administration has no wish to claim that its administration of this relief money is perfect, but we do insist that it has been administered as honestly and efficiently as it is humanly possible to administer such a job. If there has been chiseling locally, it has not been countenanced by Federal officials here, but on the other hand every effort has been made to stamp out such practices. Some projects may have been undertaken unwisely, but on the whole the amount of permanent benefit which the $4,880,000,000 relief fund will confer upon this country is enormous. The cause of public health has been given a decided impetus and at the same time public buildings, highways, and bridges and other useful works are being constructed in all parts of the country.

I have tried to tell you in this broad outline why it was absolutely necessary for President Roosevelt to put in force the policies which he did, not alone to relieve the needy, but, at the same time, to rescue business men and individuals in every State of the Union who were threatened with dire disaster unless some method was found to get our agriculture and industry working once again.

The Roosevelt administration used the only method which was at hand and I'd like to remind you that it was endorsed in the beginning by virtually every outstanding Republican in this country. But now that they see the policy is working, they refuse to take responsibility for their own actions. They like to sit back and cry, very unfairly, that the Roosevelt administration is hurting business and piling up a huge and unnecessary tax burden. I have shown you how the administration has helped business by its spending policies, and now let's consider the tax burden. I'm going to quote briefly from a well-known economist, who said:

"Politicians may not like to deal with taxes in an election year, but every sensible citizen knows that sooner or later the enormous bills for the depression must be paid."

The writer has pointed out quite accurately that the cause of new taxes is the Hoover depression, and not the efforts of the Roosevelt administration to undo the causes of the depression. The use of Federal credit was necessary to save American business and States and cities from bankruptcy because of the unwise financial policies pursued by the last three Republican administrations.

As a matter of fact, many honest Republican leaders are willing to admit, and have admitted, that the policy of spending to provide relief will probably have to be carried on for some time to come.

The fact is that at present the Federal Government is in excellent financial condition in relation to normal receipts and normal expenditures. Because of better times, both in industry and agriculture, revenue has increased at a very encouraging rate and there is every indication that the increase in income will keep pace with the continued pick-up in industry. The tide of recovery, about which Mr. Hoover spoke so wistfully in 1932, is now flowing in the proper direction, and it is flowing in the right direction because of Roosevelt policies.

In facing the fact that relief expenditures for the unemployed may be necessary for a period to come, we should recognize the fact that such expenditures in the normal course of affairs would be made by States, cities, townships, and local charities. Does anyone wish to throw that burden back upon the cities and States at this time? Does anyone think they are financially able to bear the burden after the long strain through which they have passed? The adoption of such a course, abruptly taken, might prove a blow of deadly seriousness to the financial condition of State and local governmental units. The Federal Government, under the pressure of events, must continue to bear the burden until the other units are strong enough to take up and carry the load.

The use to which the Roosevelt administration has put the Federal credit is the most honorable use to which it could be put. In an era of deflation, at a time when homes, savings, and jobs were crashing away in the downward spiral of depression, Uncle Sam stepped in to save the day. We balanced the budget of the farmer; we balanced the budget of the businessman; we restored profits to industry; we balanced the budget of the small shopkeepers; we provided wages for industry; we aided the unemployed; and we kept cities and States from going into receivership with a consequent loss to millions of investors. Such a record calls for praise rather than blame and I hardly think our Republican foes will win public support in attacking that record.

Among those going about the country and complaining about the unbalanced state of the Federal Budget is Mr. Hoover. He apparently forgets that under his own administration the Budget was badly out of balance, with this essential difference: Under Mr. Hoover's administration the Budget was out of balance because people had suffered an appalling loss of income and hence could not pay taxes. Under this administration the Budget is out of balance because the Federal Government has undertaken a great constructive program which has restored industry and agriculture and put money into the pockets of the American people.

President Roosevelt has done a splendid job of putting this country once again on the road to economic stability and he has accomplished it without impairing the Federal credit in the least. He is now engaged in the great task of paring down expenditures in exact relation as private business takes up the burden, and he is doing that efficiently and decisively. The Federal Budget will be balanced as soon as practicable. It will be done by President Roosevelt and not by Mr. Hoover or those other Republican critics who talk about economy but do nothing to bring it about. The Republican membership in Congress, and by that I mean the old guard Members who intend to dictate the party nominee, have offered nothing constructive to solve the Nation's troubles and apparently they have nothing to offer.

Mr. Hoover is certainly a fit symbol and spokesman for the present-day grand old party. He offers nothing new; he still looks toward Europe while forgetting the great home markets which this administration is developing. He is using, as I have shown, inaccurate figures to support the picture of terror which he likes to paint to an anxious public.

I have one final word to say on the Federal credit. We have heard much in recent years about the need for the banks to resume the old practice of making "character loans." We know that the banks always regarded a man's character as the most essential thing in considering his ability to pay back what he has borrowed.

Let me say that the outstanding financiers of this country and the whole world have looked with critical and appraising eye at the financial policies pursued by President Roosevelt's administration. The bond markets and the investment markets show that these experts have faith rather than fear in the present state of Federal credit. In other words, the credit of the Federal Government is good, because the financiers and the people have faith in the character of its Chief Executive, Mr. Roosevelt.

OUR TERRITORIES AND INSULAR POSSESSIONS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR GIBSON

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, on March 10 my colleague, the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], delivered an informative and interesting address on the subject, Our Territories and Insular Possessions. I ask unanimous consent to have the address printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Nearly everybody knows about continental United States, but comparatively few people are as familiar with our Territories and insular possessions which have areas equal to one-fourth that of the mainland, a population of more than 16,000,000, and commerce running into the hundreds of million dollars annually.

My purpose this evening is twofold: First, to speak briefly of our Territories and possessions; and, second, to suggest a better medium for handling the administration of their affairs that must, of necessity, pass through the central Government at Washington.

The outlying islands and Territories should command our keen interest because most of the people inhabiting them are citizens of this Republic and have problems peculiar to themselves as well as in common with the people of the Nation as a whole.

We have possessions in the Atlantic; namely, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the Canal Zone.

We have Territories and insular possessions in and bordering the Pacific, which include American Samoa, Guam, several small islands, the Philippines, the Territory of Hawaii, and the Territory of Alaska.

A distinction exists between Territories and insular possessions. Territories are incorporated into the national fabric, have organized governments with legislatures, and governors appointed by the President. They are practically self-ruling as to their internal affairs. This is also true of Puerto Rico, an organized but not an incorporated Territory.

Now, let us look first at some of our far-away islands. Guam, which came to us under the Treaty of Paris in 1898, is the largest of the Mariana group. It is about 30 miles in length and $4\frac{1}{2}$ to 8 miles in width. The natives are Chamorros of the Malay race. The people are well Americanized. Their self-established congress sets forth their loyalty in the following resolution:

"Be it resolved, That we renew our pledge of allegiance to the United States of America, to its institutions, to its ideals of justice and democracy, and that we affirm our happiness to be a part of that great Nation, over which waves the Stars and Stripes."

I have never witnessed a more inspiring sight than that of hundreds of the school children of Guam saluting the American flag with great enthusiasm in the plaza at Agana, the capital.

We govern American Samoa, located far down in the Pacific. This dependency, which is under the direction of the Navy Department, consists of several small islands and has an advisory legislative body called the Fono, in which the native chiefs take part.

Our flag still waves over the Philippines, and will continue to do so until 1945, at least.

There are 7,000 islands in the group, 1,000 of which are capable of sustaining human life. The population is about 14,000,000. The islands extend a thousand miles north and south off the coast of Asia; the most northerly is a hundred miles from Japan (Formosa), the most southerly a short distance from British Borneo and the Dutch East Indies. Their situation places them between great powers contending for the trade of the Orient, and across the lanes of commerce that supply the needs of more than half the people of the world.

The country is rich in natural resources. It has valuable deposits of gold, silver, copper, lead, zinc, chromium, coal, and salt. Oil has recently been discovered. Already as much gold has been produced in 1 year as Alaska produced in 1935. One deposit of iron runs to 52 percent, with 500,000,000 tons of ore in sight. Here also exist the most extensive deposits of war materials in the world in the form of chromium.

The story of the growth of our trade with the Philippines is a remarkable one. In 1900 our share of import and export trade was 11 percent; in 1933, 78 percent. In 1901 we supplied 12 percent of the Philippine imports; in 1932, 64 percent.

As a market for American goods the Philippines have occupied the following ranks in recent years: Eighth for metals and manufactures, excepting machinery and vehicles; sixth for chemicals and related products (exceeded only by Canada, the United Kingdom, France, Germany, and Japan); second for wheat flour, canned fish, and cotton fabrics by the pound; first for cotton cloth, colored, bleached, and unbleached; and first for galvanized iron, steel sheets, and ready-made paints.

We promised the Filipinos independence, and in redeeming that promise we have recently established a commonwealth government with a 10-year adjustment period to give them an opportunity to demonstrate that they can govern themselves. I anticipate, however, that within that period they may ask a modification of the independence act so that they can remain an integral part of this Nation.

I do not wish to trespass in Delegate KING's field in regard to Hawaii, or Delegate DIMOND's in regard to Alaska, or Commissioner IGLESIAS as to Puerto Rico. They are here and will speak for their respective Territories.

Alaska, our first outlying territorial venture, was purchased from Russia in 1867 for $7,200,000. Organized as a Territory, it enjoys many of the advantages of statehood, electing its own officials, except the Governor, who is appointed by the President.

It was 30 years before we again increased our domain beyond the seas, when we brought Hawaii under the flag.

Like Alaska, the Territory of Hawaii has its own government, elects all officials with the exception of the Governor and secretary, who are appointed by the President.

On the Atlantic side we have the Canal Zone, a strip of land extending 5 miles on each side of the Panama Canal from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It must be recognized that our paramount duty not only to our country but to all the world naturally places the administration of the zone under the War Department. It should rest there.

The Virgin Islands were purchased during the World War from Denmark as a protection to the Panama Canal. They consist of several islands, the largest of which are St. Croix and St. Thomas. They are especially attractive to the travelers of the world. The people are well educated, only 16 percent being illiterate. Certain disagreements recently arose concerning the government and it was necessary to conduct sweeping investigations, with the result that in this congressional session the fundamental law is being rewritten, granting a greater degree of self-government and extending the right of suffrage.

Puerto Rico, of marvelous scenic beauty, came to us as a result of the Spanish-American War, and is rich in agricultural products. Recent outbreaks indicate that the Congress must give special attention to the situation thereby created and extend to the people a greater measure of self-government. We should see to it that the people suffer no injustice at the hands of the United States.

Now, to turn to the bill which I have introduced in the Senate. This bill recognizes the need of combining the administration of the civil government of all our Territories and possessions which must have the attention of the Government at Washington. The fact is we have been too little interested in our outlying lands, and in our responsibility to their people. For nearly 25 years the Territories and insular possessions have sought greater recognition and a more unified administration in Washington. The governmental supervision of our domain is divided and subdivided among bureaus, divisions, and offices.

The War Department, in its Bureau of Insular Affairs, controls such civil duties as are still exercised over the Philippine Islands, and another office handles the affairs pertaining to the Canal Zone. The Navy Department has charge of the affairs of the islands of American Samoa, Guam, Wake, Palmyra, the Midway group, Jarvis, Howland, Christmas, and Baker—all islands of the Pacific. The remainder of our Territories and possessions are under control of a division of the Interior Department. This group consists of Hawaii, Alaska, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. The work of supervising the civil needs and development of a territory of nearly 600,000 square miles, with a population of over 2,000,000 that falls to the Interior Department is performed by an office force of 21 and a small field force. I have nothing but praise for the executive efficiency of this personnel.

Thus the work of governing our Territories and insular possessions is divided between four offices—a situation which the bill I have introduced corrects by placing all under one head, adding unity and prestige and bringing about a coordinated policy which is now lacking.

The civil personnel of these offices which assists in governing our Territories and insular possessions would be transferred to the new department. Provision is made for the attachment of Army and Navy officers now employed in carrying on the various civil governments, and other officers as needed. All records would be transferred to the central office. In the transaction of business concerning any particular possession or territory there would be no question as to which office to contact, as is now the case.

This bill would not restrict the statehood ambition of any Territory or possession. In fact, the department would be in a position of greater prestige and better fitted to assist in statehood aspirations. It would surely place our possessions on a more self-respecting basis.

Such a department would have inestimable value in the training of employees, selected from the various Territories and island possessions, to carry on its work and become appointees to the outlying parts of the United States from which they come. It would change the custom of political appointments to a practice ground for career men.

I believe as the people come to know more of the ideas behind the creation of this department that they will give it hearty endorsement.

Former President Coolidge once said, "Men do not make laws; they do but discover them." The proposal is presented at this time so that the situation may be studied, and the right way to handle the governmental affairs of our outlands may be discovered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills and joint resolution of the Senate:

S. 37. An act authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to settle and adjust the claims of subcontractors and materialmen for material and labor furnished in the construction of a post-office and courthouse building at Rutland, Vt.;

S. 1307. An act to establish the Homestead National Monument of America in Gage County, Nebr.;

S. 1453. An act to create a board of shorthand reporting, and for other purposes;

S. 1470. An act to provide a preliminary examination of Spokane River and its tributaries in the State of Idaho, with a view to the control of their floods;

S. 3281. An act to amend the act of February 16, 1929, entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Public Health Service', approved June 10, 1922, as amended";

S. 3453. An act limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to certain counsel; and

S. J. Res. 165. Joint resolution directing the Architect of the Capitol to accept a copy of the painting Liev Eriksson Discovers America.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2603) to authorize the Attorney General to determine and pay certain claims against the Government for damage to person or property in sum not exceeding $500 in any one case, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 2625. An act to extend the facilities of the Public Health Service to seamen on Government vessels not in the Military or Naval Establishments;

S. 2664. An act to aid in defraying the expenses of the Third Triennial Meeting of the Associated Country Women of the World, to be held in this country in June 1936; and

S. 3071. An act providing for the placing of improvements on the areas between the shore and bulkhead lines in rivers and harbors.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10919) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. LUDLOW, Mr. BOYLAN, Mr. GRANFIELD, Mr. O'NEAL, Mr. TABER, and Mr. McLEOD were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 1398. An act to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station at or near Crescent City, Calif.;

H. R. 2737. An act extending and continuing to January 12, 1938, the provisions of the act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to determine and confirm by patent in the nature of a deed of quitclaim the title to lots in the city of Pensacola, Fla.", approved January 12, 1925;

H. R. 3369. An act for the relief of the State of Alabama;

H. R. 3629. An act to authorize the acquisition of additional land for the use of Walter Reed General Hospital;

H. R. 4688. An act to authorize the operation of stands in Federal buildings by blind persons, to enlarge the economic opportunities of the blind, and for other purposes;

H. R. 4886. An act providing for the employment of skilled shorthand reporters in the executive branch of the Government;

H. R. 5722. An act to provide for the addition or additions of certain lands to the Colonial National Monument in the State of Virginia;

H. R. 6773. An act to deepen the irrigation channel between Clear Lake and Lost River, in the State of California, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8370. An act to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station at Port Washington, Wis.;

H. R. 8414. An act to provide a preliminary examination of the Yakima River and its tributaries and the Walla Walla River and its tributaries in the State of Washington with a view to the control of their floods;

H. R. 8431. An act to provide for the establishment of the Fort Frederica National Monument at St. Simon Island, Ga., and for other purposes;

H. R. 8694. An act to provide a preliminary examination of Chickasawha River and its tributaries in the State of Mississippi with a view to the control of their floods;

H. R. 8759. An act to amend the act known as the "Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930", approved June 10, 1930, as amended;

H. R. 9235. An act to provide for a preliminary examination of the Cosatot River in Sevier County, Ark., to determine the feasibility of cleaning out the channel and leveeing the river and the cost of such improvements with a view to the controlling of floods;

H. R. 9236. An act to authorize a preliminary examination of the Red and Little Rivers, Ark., insofar as Red River affects Little River County, Ark., and insofar as Little River affects Little River and Sevier Counties, Ark., to determine the feasibility of leveeing Little River and the cost of such improvement, and also the estimated cost of repairing and strengthening the levee on Red River in Little River County with a view to the controlling of floods;

H. R. 9249. An act to provide for a preliminary examination of the Little Missouri River in Pike County, Ark., to determine the feasibility of cleaning out the channel and leveeing the river and the cost of such improvements with a view to the controlling of floods;

H. R. 9250. An act to provide for a preliminary examination of the Petit Jean River in Scott and Logan Counties, Ark., to determine the feasibility of cleaning out the channel and leveeing the river and the cost of such improvements with a view to the controlling of floods;

H. R. 9267. An act to provide for a preliminary examination of Big Mulberry Creek, in Crawford County, Ark., from the point where it empties into the Arkansas River up a distance of 8 miles to determine the feasibility of cleaning out the channel and repairing the banks, and the cost of such improvement, with a view to the controlling of floods;

H. R. 9472. An act for the relief of officers and soldiers of the volunteer service of the United States mustered into service for the War with Spain and who were held in service in the Philippine Islands after the ratification of the treaty of peace, April 11, 1899;

H. R. 9496. An act to protect the United States against loss in the delivery through the mails of checks in payment of benefits provided for by laws administered by the Veterans' Administration;

H. R. 9671. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of material to the sea-scout service of the Boy Scouts of America;

H. R. 9673. An act to authorize the recoinage of 50-cent pieces in connection with the California-Pacific International Exposition to be held in San Diego, Calif., in 1936;

H. R. 9874. An act authorizing a preliminary examination of Cadron Creek, Ark., a tributary of the Arkansas River;

H. R. 9991. An act to extend the time for applying for and receiving benefits under the act entitled "An act to provide means by which certain Filipinos can emigrate from the United States", approved July 10, 1935;

H. R. 10094. An act to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration; to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development; to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range; and for other purposes", approved June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269);

H. R. 10135. An act to authorize the construction of a model-basin establishment, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10182. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to acquire the timber rights on the Gigling Military Reservation (now designated as Camp Ord) in California;

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11035) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

The amendment of Mr. FLETCHER is as follows:

On page 68, line 15, after the word "navigation", to insert the following: "and to include waterway improvements investigated by the War Department under specific authorization from Congress and subsequently undertaken pursuant to the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935", so as to make the clause read:

For the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works, and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore authorized as may be most desirable in the interests of commerce and navigation, and to include waterway improvements investigated by the War Department under specific authorization from Congress and subsequently undertaken pursuant to the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935.

And on page 69, line 23, to strike out "$138,677,899" and insert in lieu thereof "$208,677,899."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it seems important to explain the meaning of the amendment now proposed, to throw some light on the merits of the enterprise involved, and to correct some misunderstandings and misrepresentations, at least, that have appeared in magazine articles, on the floor, and elsewhere in the discussion of the subject.

It was stated by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] in his presentation of the matter yesterday that this is an extraordinary proceeding; that no river and harbor project has ever been treated in this way; that there is no merit or justification for this project; that it is here without proper authorization, without the proper consideration by the committees of Congress, and that it appears altogether irregularly at this time. These are broad general statements, which, I contend, are not founded upon the record in this case or upon the facts, and I think I will be able to prove my contention by the record.

Of course, the regular procedure in the case of river and harbor projects, the habitual practice in connection with ordinary river and harbor projects, has been to have a direction by Congress in the river and harbor bill for a survey of the project. That direction goes to the Chief of Engineers, who orders the district engineer to proceed with a survey. The district engineer reports to the division engineer; the division engineer reports to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors; that Board reports to the Chief of Engineers; the Chief of Engineers reports to the Secretary of War; and the Secretary of War reports to the House of Representatives, where the report is referred to the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and final action by Congress is taken.

I concede that that is the usual and customary practice with reference to river and harbor projects. I concede that the authorization of this river and harbor project is at variance with that practice.

But the legislation of 1935 is extraordinary in its character. These are extraordinary times. We are in the midst of problems today with which we were never before confronted. In the beginning of 1933 we had 13,000,000 people unemployed. Other conditions prevailed which made it necessary to enact legislation to remedy and cure the situation so far as we could. We have enacted legislation which is out of the ordinary. I grant that. But the legislation was needed and was necessary at the time and has been found to have cured and to have saved a situation which otherwise would have brought on chaos and disaster.

I admit the Legislative Act of 1935 is unusual. I admit that the authority there granted is unusual. I admit that the power vested in the President is unusual. I concede all that, but that does not answer the question here. That is not an argument against the project we propose now. That might have been an argument against the bill itself. It is no argument against anything except as it might have been used against the bill when it was introduced, considered, and became a law in 1935.

There are those who voted against the bill, among them the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. He had a perfect right to vote that way. In the Senate there were 66 votes in favor of the legislation and 13 against it. The legislation is on the statute books. It may have been a foolish thing to do at the time, as some claimed, but it is the law, and acting under that law we are now presenting the situation to the Senate.

The amendment provides for an increase of $20,000,000 in the amount carried in the War Department appropriation bill. There were submitted to the Congress by the War Department and by the Budget Bureau estimates for $129,000,000 for river and harbor works. The committee in the House eliminated $29,000,000 of that amount and provided for only $100,000,000 of the recommendation and estimate. The ground for eliminating the $29,000,000 is stated in the hearings before the House committee.

At page 15 of those hearings will be found listed five projects. They are the Passamaquoddy tidal power project in Maine; the Atlantic-Gulf ship canal in Florida; the Conchas Dam in New Mexico; the Bluestone Reservoir in West Virginia; and the Sardis Reservoir in Mississippi.

Those were the five projects which called for the $29,000,000 which the House eliminated from the bill. The reason for that omission is explained in the House hearings at page 23, from which I quote:

Mr. BOLTON. I want this point distinctly understood, that, as a member of the Appropriations Committee of Congress, I believe we are supposed to provide funds for carrying out activities which have been authorized by Congress, but I think it is entirely wrong to suggest to this committee the appropriation of funds for activities which have never been authorized by Congress. I think that would be entirely beyond the scope of our authority.

Mr. PARKS. I think it has been held that any project that actually has been begun and on which money has been expended stands on the same level with projects authorized by Congress. Of course, that does not mean we have to do it, but, so far as the authorization is concerned, it is there.

Mr. PARKS was chairman of the subcommittee. That was the issue. It was finally decided to omit the five projects from the bill, reducing the total appropriation by $29,000,000.

I propose in my amendment to comply with the Budget recommendations and estimates so far as $20,000,000 of the amount is concerned. The amendment itself provides that that amount shall apply to projects which have been examined by the Army engineers in accordance with acts of Congress. The Passamaquoddy item, I understand, was never examined by the Army engineers, so that passes out of consideration.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator is mistaken in saying the Army engineers have not examined the Passamaquoddy project. I think they have not made a report on the project.

So far as I am concerned—and I think the same applies to my colleague, the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]—I am in favor of the Passamaquoddy project, but I do not feel it has a place in the pending bill. I believe the Passamaquoddy project is a relief project, and that it can and should be taken care of out of relief funds such as have been provided by Congress. I am entirely satisfied to have that item left out of the bill, as the Senator has left it out of his amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understood the Senators from Maine were entirely agreeable to leaving that item out of the pending bill. No matter whether it is favored or not, it was certainly represented before the committee that the Senators from Maine did not desire it included, so the Passamaquoddy project in Maine is not before us. The question before us is the $20,000,000 which would take care of the appropriation for the four projects authorized by the President and for which funds were allotted and upon which work has been begun.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator should state that in the recommendation by the Budget Bureau $9,000,000 was included for the Passamaquoddy project. The omission of that amount accounts for the reduction of the appropriation to $20,000,000 which is provided for in the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is quite true; and that is what I intended to say. Of the $20,000,000 proposed in my amendment, $12,000,000, according to the break-down, will go to the Atlantic-Gulf canal. The other $8,000,000 will be divided in three sums of about $2,330,000 each to the projects in New Mexico, Mississippi, and West Virginia. These projects were authorized by the President in pursuance of a law enacted and approved in April 1935.

Congress empowered the President to make this authorization. Congress empowered the President and invested him with discretion to allot funds to the works which he should select. I do not believe it can be objected that in that act there was a delegation of legislative power to the President. An agency was created by the Congress and power vested in the President to do precisely what he has done.

The President accepted that responsibility imposed upon him by Congress, and with that rare vision and splendid judgment which has made him famous and with that patriotism and statesmanship which characterized him he proceeded to act.

He designated these projects as worthy of public improvement. He allotted funds to them. He has started the work upon them. Now he comes to Congress and tells what he has done, and recommends to Congress that they take over these projects and treat them as Federal projects, in accordance with other river and harbor activities, and under the usual river and harbor procedure.

That has been done. These projects are now Federal projects under the law. They are authorized by the President. He had the power to authorize them. They are in process of being completed, and they are to be treated precisely as duly authorized Federal projects.

I read from the testimony of General Markham upon that subject, so that there may be no doubt about it, although I believe that is not questioned. In the hearings before the subcommittee of the Commerce Committee, I asked him this question:

Is it not true that projects classed as rivers and harbors projects and not authorized by Congress directly but authorized by the President, under authority delegated to him in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, and placed under the direction of the Chief of Engineers, as follows: Sardis Reservoir, located in Mississippi; Conchas Dam, located in New Mexico; Bluestone Reservoir, located in West Virginia; Passamaquoddy project, located in Maine; and the Florida canal, located in Florida, that those were the projects authorized by the President?

General MARKHAM. That is correct, sir.

Senator FLETCHER. Isn't that true?

General MARKHAM. That is true.

Senator FLETCHER. Each of those projects were authorized by the President and the work initiated under an allotment which amounted, in many instances, to only a fraction of the cost?

General MARKHAM. That is correct.

Senator FLETCHER. Each of these is regarded by the Chief of Engineers as an authorized project, he proposes to carry them in his budget from year to year until completed, unless it is otherwise disposed of?

General MARKHAM. That is correct.

We will proceed in what we conceive to be an orderly fashion from the beginning of that authorization and first allotment to whatever would be the Executive or congressional conclusion.

Senator FLETCHER. It is the same way with all these projects. The Florida canal does not stand distinct and separate from other projects. It is among the group of projects which have been authorized by the President and adopted by the President.

General MARKHAM. That is correct, sir.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] gives the impression that the project with which we are now dealing has had only superficial examination; that it has not been thoroughly considered, and has not been properly examined by the engineers and its merits disclosed. I read this from General Markham's testimony in reference to the work that has been done in pursuance of the act of Congress calling upon the Army Engineers to make examination and survey; and I am going to contend, and I think I shall be able to show, that no river and harbor project has ever been authorized by Congress which has had a more thorough and more complete examination and consideration and study than this project has had.

Mr. President, I venture to say that for 27 years I have been a member of the Commerce Committee of the Senate. That committee has to do with river and harbor legislation. In all my experience I do not know of a single project which has ever been considered and approved or adopted by Congress which has had back of it a more complete and thorough and exhaustive investigation and study than this project—not one—and I shall show directly a comparison of the benefits arising from this project with the benefits arising from other projects which have been adopted by Congress.

General Markham, in his communication to me on this subject, said as follows—I read from page 56 of the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate:

MY DEAR SENATOR: In your letter of January 23, 1936, you referred to Senate Resolution No. 210, with respect to the Atlantic-Gulf waterway and asked to be furnished with certain specific information.

I take pleasure in furnishing this information herewith:

1. You state that paragraph 1 of the resolution proposes an inquiry into "the nature and extent of expenditures to be made from emergency relief funds and subsequent expenditures for construction and maintenance to be made from regular funds", and ask whether or not, in my opinion, there has been sufficient competent survey, examination, and study of this project to determine its construction and maintenance cost with the same degree of accuracy as in the case of other river and harbor improvements in general heretofore approved and constructed. The investigations undertaken by this Department with respect to the Atlantic-Gulf waterway have been as exhaustive and detailed as those normally undertaken in connection with the preliminary examinations and surveys of river and harbor projects. This Department has realized from the inception of this examination that the magnitude of the project required a comprehensive study and its investigations undertaken over a period of 6 years were conducted in scope and detail sufficient to establish construction costs with reasonable accuracy. The estimated cost of maintenance, which must be based in large part on the experience gained from the maintenance of the many river and harbor projects throughout the country, would also appear to be dependable.

That is the statement of the Chief of Engineers. General Markham, the Chief of Engineers, will supervise this construction work. It is under his charge, not as a hireling of the P. W. A., as stated yesterday. He is in charge of this work by direction of the President, in accordance with and in pursuance of river and harbor practice, and in accordance with his official duties as Chief of Engineers of the War Department of the United States.

The P. W. A. has nothing to do with this construction. It is being done by the Army, as other river and harbor projects are being done; and the Chief of Engineers of the Army will have entire charge of this work from beginning to end.

The Chief of Engineers is an expert, trained, capable engineer. His standing in his profession, as Emerson said of Aristotle, is that of "master of those who know." He will have charge of this work as Chief of Engineers.

Now, as to the intimation which has been made that there has not been sufficient and thorough examination and survey and study of this particular project.

In the first place, the act of Congress of 1927 directed a survey for a canal across Florida. In pursuance of that act of Congress the engineers were directed to proceed to make that examination and survey. The task was not delegated to a district engineer and in turn delegated by the district engineer to individual engineers, as is the practice in the ordinary run of river and harbor projects. The Chief of Engineers appointed a special board of engineers, a special board of survey, to make this study and this investigation. They were engaged in that work for 18 months. They brought into cooperation with them experts from the Commerce Department simply with reference to the economic and commercial justification of the canal. That Special Board of Survey of the Army Engineers went exhaustively into every question which is considered by engineers in passing upon the merits of river and harbor projects—the economic and commercial data, the route, the plans and specifications. They went into every question that determines the matter of recommendation with reference to river and harbor projects. They were 18 months at that work.

In the meantime, there were further developments. The act of 1934 was passed authorizing loans and grants for public projects.

The National Gulf-Atlantic Ship Canal Association, a corporation not organized for profit, and subsequently a public agency of the State of Florida, made application to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan and grant with which to build this canal. So much time was elapsing between reports and conclusions that the national association thought they would make application to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan and grant. The application was transferred by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the P. W. A., becoming the application of the Ship Canal Authority of the State of Florida, especially created by the State legislature for that purpose. The P. W. A. engineers made a thorough survey and examination, in accordance with the law, to determine the possibility and prospect of this being a self-liquidating proposition as a toll canal. Under the application they had to consider the question of the security for such a loan. The engineers of the P. W. A. made a thorough examination of the whole project from beginning to end; they studied the question for months and months, and they reported favorably on the application as follows. I quote from their report of October 19, 1933, as it appears on page 43 of the hearings before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Commerce:

It is concluded that the project covered herein constitutes a public necessity and is of real social value. The project will afford much employment to many classes of skilled and unskilled labor; that the design is in accord with sound engineering practice; and that the project is economically sound. It is recommended that the loan with or without the grant be made.

Subsequently, however, the Secretary of the Interior turned it down, after the board of review had reported that ships would probably pay a cash toll equivalent to only 45 percent of the savings realized, or about 8 cents per net registered ton, believing that it would not be self-liquidating within the P. W. A. requirements.

Of course, the question primarily was as to the amount of revenue that would be derived from the tolls which might be imposed, and the rate of the tolls and the amount of tonnage were determining factors. It depends on whether there is a rate of 8 cents per net ton in the way of tolls, or the Panama toll of a dollar a ton. They figured on a toll of 8 cents per net ton of cargo. The Secretary finally decided that he did not consider this security sufficient for the loan applied for.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. Does the Senator know why they selected the figure of 8 cents per net ton?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is just an arbitrary figure they used. They could fix it at any figure up to the total savings, about 18 cents per ton. It was estimated by the board of review that only 45 percent of the benefits to the ship could be collected for tolls, the ship taking the other 55 percent as its net benefit from using the Canal. That is purely an arbitrary adjustment. At any rate, on the basis on which they figured, the P. W. A. were not satisfied that the Canal would yield revenue sufficient to make it self-liquidating within their requirements.

The report of the engineers, however, is valuable as a collection of data and as a basis for further study of the project.

The report of the Special Board of Survey of the Army Engineers dealt with a canal which was to be a lock canal, with three locks. The report of the P. W. A. engineers dealt with a canal with two locks.

There was a variation between the estimates of cost. There was a difference in other respects, as to some specifications and unit costs, and there was a considerable spread between the cost estimates of the P. W. A. and the estimates of the special board of rivers and harbors, although they both estimated the direct benefits to shipping at somewhat above $8,000,000 per year.

Every Senator from the Gulf States joined in asking the President to appoint a board of review in order to consider and, if possible, reconcile the cost estimates of the different engineers and make its own study and investigation. The President did appoint such a board. He called on the Secretary of War to name two engineers for that board of review. The Secretary of War named Colonel Hannum and Major Somervell, of the Corps of Engineers, both experienced, capable, high-class engineers of high standing. He called on the Secretary of the Interior to name two engineers, and he named Mr. McDonough, chief engineer of the P. W. A., and his assistant, Mr. Fowler. These four were directed to select a fifth as chairman. They selected Mr. Douglas, of New York, a civil engineer of international reputation, who had had charge of the Cape Cod Canal, of the Detroit tunnel, and other great enterprises in this country and some abroad. He stands among those at the top in his profession. No one questions his ability, his high character, his genius, his training, his experience, or his capacity.

This board of five members, as fine and splendid engineers as can be found in this or any other country, was selected by the President to examine into all the details of this entire proposed project, and to examine also all the data and material which had been gathered by the Army engineers' special board of survey, and all the data and material which had been gathered by the P. W. A. engineers, and then to make their own investigation and study. I submit that no board of engineers ever exceeded in ability and in training and in experience this special board of review.

The board set to work on this problem. They did go into all the material which had been gathered by the special board on survey of the Army engineers, they did go into all the material which had been gathered by the P. W. A. engineers, and they did make their own examination and their own study of this matter. Every factor entering into it was considered, and after exhaustive study this board reported and recommended to the President a sea-level canal instead of a lock canal. Making it a sea-level canal, of course, would bring down the cost. Such locks as are proposed cost millions of dollars; after they are put in they have to be maintained, and the cost of operating the locks is considerable. The new plan would save all that. The board favored a sea-level canal. It would save in the cost and it would result in a more useful canal, because it would save the delay incident to ships' passing through locks in the canal, and it would save a very considerable amount in annual maintenance.

This board not merely submitted its report to the President, but it made recommendations. I will read from the report of the hearings before the Senate Committee on Appropriations at page 175. This board of review, as fine and capable a body of engineers and experts as was ever established or set up in any country, made recommendations to the President.

We hear talk about this project not having been properly examined or studied, and its consideration being hurried by the President, the intimation being not only that the President had no authority, but that he did not properly exercise what authority he had, indicating to the public that the President has wasted $5,400,000 of public funds on this project without proper investigation and study.

The mere fact that a committee of Congress has not given consideration to the report is not important. Under the law the report was to be made to the President, not to Congress. The application was pending before the President, under the act of 1935. The report had to be made to him. It was not made to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, or to Congress; it was made to the President. He was charged with the responsibility of determining the merits of this proposed project, and whether he would allocate money to its development.

I read from page 175 of the hearings before the Senate Committee on Appropriations as to what the board recommended.

This board * * * recommends for your consideration a 30-foot sea-level canal at a cost of $143,000,000, exclusive of interest during the period of construction. This board further recommends the deepening of this canal to 35 feet when traffic may justify it.

They favored the sea-level canal—

Because of slightly lower first cost and much lower operating and maintenance cost.

Because it has greater ship capacity.

Because of the lesser difficulties in construction.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. CAREY. I find in the report of the Board of Review the following language in the last paragraph:

This Board was not instructed to estimate the benefits accruing from the construction and operation of this canal. However, if it be assumed that the economic study made by the Special Board of Army Engineers for a lock canal is sound and considering the lower maintenance and operating costs of a sea-level canal the cost of a canal which would be justified, at 4-percent interest, would be—

Then the cost is given.

As the Senator from Florida will recall, I tried to bring out in the hearing before the Appropriations Committee the fact that an economic study of this proposed canal had never been made; that no study had been made as to whether such a canal was necessary or whether it was worth while, and I could not get any evidence in the committee that such a report ever was made. Has any such report ever been made?

Mr. FLETCHER. The economic survey and the report were made by the special board of survey appointed by the Chief of Engineers. That report was filed with the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. CAREY. Was that a report on the economic benefits and public necessity for the canal?

Mr. FLETCHER. Absolutely. That special board brought in experts from Government departments to assist it in that study. That special board's report is on file in the War Department, and it covers the economic and commercial survey, giving ship by ship, as I shall point out on the map in a moment, that would use the canal. That is the report which the board of review accepted after taking it up and considering it, after ascertaining the basis upon which the calculations were made, because they held that the estimates in that report and the findings applied to a lock canal, which would obviously be much more favorable when applied to a sea-level canal. The board of review adopted that report as applicable to lock-canal requirements, and accepted it for the sea-level canal.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACHMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. CAREY. I find in the report of the hearings on the bill before the House committee that Mr. Howard asked General Pillsbury:

Mr. POWERS. Do I understand, then, that the Florida ship canal has never been approved by any board of the Army Engineers or anyone else?

General PILLSBURY. I do not recollect any.

Captain CLAY. There was a special board, and they did point out that, although it lacked complete economic justification with a part of its cost charged to relief, it would be suitable as a relief project.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know anything about that board, but I think there is some confusion there. A special board did consider the economic problem as this board of review mentions. The board of review says:

However, if it be assumed that the economic study made by the Special Board of Army Engineers for a lock canal is sound and considering the lower maintenance and operating costs of a sea-level canal the cost of a canal which would be justified at 4-percent interest, would be:

Sea-level canal..... $160,000,000

This board found that the canal would be justified; it accepted the estimates made by the special board with reference to a lock canal as applicable to a sea-level canal at a cost of $160,000,000, and then they further found that the cost would be $142,700,000, or, roughly, $143,000,000.

Mr. CAREY. Has the Senator from Florida seen a copy of the report of the War Department Engineers in which they set forth the economic benefits of this canal? Is such a report available?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have only seen portions of it. I have not seen a full copy of it.

Mr. CAREY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. The board of review reported that it had accepted the report of the estimates and findings as to economic justification by the special Board of Survey of the Army Engineers, as applied to a lock canal. Of course, there would be less cost in connection with building a sea-level canal; it would be less expensive to operate, and so forth. The figure it gave would be a conservative figure for such a canal. The board of review, as I said, estimated the cost to be justified at $160,000,000. But this proposed project will not cost $160,000,000. It figures down to $143,000,000. The right-of-way, of course, is to be furnished by the State, and the State has furnished that right-of-way. I will come to that point in a moment.

Gentlemen, what higher authority could be called upon and what more complete study and investigation could be made of any project than has been made of this project? Six years has been spent on it by engineers, and finally the culmination and the accumulation and the coordination of all the work which has been done was submitted to the board of review, which reported to the President and recommended this project as being thoroughly justified, and that it ought to be undertaken. What higher authority could we have?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator several times has mentioned that a sea-level canal would cost less than a lock canal. While I do not know that it is material to this discussion whether the canal shall be a lock canal or a sea-level canal, I am, however, very curious to know in the first place why the Senator makes that statement. Secondly, in reaching the conclusion, as some of the boards did, that the canal ought to be a lock canal, how high did they decide that the locks are to be, and where will they get the water to supply the locks; and if the canal is made a sea-level canal how much deeper will they have to make such a canal than they would have to make it if it were a lock canal?

Mr. FLETCHER. My understanding is, Mr. President—I am not an expert engineer—that the depth will be the same, 30 feet in either case, a lock canal or a sea-level canal. I think that was the estimate made as to the depth of either canal. The first board of survey, the Special Board of Survey of the Army Engineers, considered three locks in the canal. The P. W. A. engineers considered two locks.

Mr. NORRIS. If the sea-level canal and the lock canal are to be of the same depth, what is the necessity for any locks?

Mr. FLETCHER. There is usually a choice between the two types. The decision is determined by many factors. The final decision in this case is for a sea-level canal.

Mr. NORRIS. I cannot understand that yet. As I said, it may not be material in considering this subject, because we are not passing on the question of whether it should be a lock canal or a sea-level canal. I know, however, that when we built the Panama Canal there was great controversy, which was national in its scope, as to whether that canal should be a lock canal or a sea-level canal, and President Roosevelt—Roosevelt the First—appointed an eminent corps of engineers, some of them foreigners, some of the greatest engineers in the world, to study that question and to report to him. I am speaking entirely from memory now, but as I remember, that board of engineers recommended, and I believe unanimously, though there may have been a dissenting vote, that the canal should be a sea-level canal. President Roosevelt set aside their recommendations entirely and decided on a lock canal. Some other engineers had recommended that the canal be a lock canal, although they were in the minority. We built a lock canal. One of the greatest arguments against a sea-level canal was the enormous additional cost that would be made necessary by a sea-level canal.

I cannot understand how a sea-level canal can be built for less money than a lock canal can be built, and I cannot understand why any locks are necessary unless the intervening ground between the ocean and the Gulf is so high that the cost of digging a canal at sea level would be prohibitive.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that most of this route is practically level. There is 75 miles of cutting. I think the highest elevation would be about 70 feet.

Mr. NORRIS. That is one of the things I wanted to find out. Of course, if we have a lock canal, then the water must be supplied from a river or some other place that is higher than sea level.

Mr. FLETCHER. I read further from the report of the board of review:

The board of review, after further investigation, is of the opinion that these conditions are not controlling and for the following additional reasons, prefers the sea-level canal.

- (1) Because of the slightly lower first and much lower operating and maintenance cost.
- (2) Because it has greater ship capacity.
- (3) Because of the lesser difficulties in construction.

Those are the reasons they give for preferring a sea-level canal.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what aroused my curiosity. They say that a sea-level canal will be less expensive than a lock canal. I cannot understand how that can be possible.

Mr. FLETCHER. The conditions at the locality in Florida are somewhat different from the conditions at the Panama Canal, where there is quite a variation between the level of the Pacific and the Atlantic Oceans. The nature of the material is also very different. Evidently the excavation of the larger amount of soft material will cost less than the locks.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes. If we had had a sea-level canal at Panama some locks would have been necessary on account of the difference in the tide on the Pacific side and the Atlantic side. I am wondering if that explains the conclusion that is reached in the report, because if the water on the Gulf side is higher or lower than the water on the Atlantic side, made so by the tides, it might be necessary to have locks anyway, even if a sea-level canal were constructed.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is very little variation there. Anyway, the lock question is out of the picture, because the President adopted the report of the board and acted upon it and provided in the first allotment of $5,000,000 for a sea-level canal.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to be plain, but in the recommendations the Senator has just read there is contained the statement, in effect, that a sea-level canal will cost less money than a lock canal. If the report shows how that can be possible, I should like to have the Senator read it. I do not see how that can be.

Mr. FLETCHER. The report does not go into details about that. The board just makes that statement. It may be that attached to their report are some details which I have not at hand. I am simply relying upon that report; and the President relied upon it and based his action upon it.

The President had before him this report for nearly a year and had it under serious consideration all that time. He was not hurried into this venture at all; he took his time about it; he studied the whole problem thoroughly and exhaustively; he had this report and these data before him for a year before he issued the order to the Treasury. That order, by the way, was issued not on September 3, as stated yesterday, but on August 30, 1935.

With reference to hazards, while the Senator from Michigan stressed that there was almost no loss of life and no loss of property by reason of the hazards in the Florida Straits, it happened that last year—and I do not brag about those hazards; they are too close to Florida; and I mention this as a fact that cannot be questioned—on September 2 the Dixie, a fine passenger ship costing six or eight million dollars and voyaging from New Orleans to New York, while passing through the Florida Straits was blown by a hurricane upon the reef opposite the Florida Keys. Three hundred and twenty-nine passengers and 110 officers and members of the crew of the vessel were in desperate peril of their lives for 3 days on that reef. It happened that there was no loss of life, for, after a while, the waters became sufficiently smooth to permit the rescue of those on the ship. But I venture to say that none of them would like to undergo that experience again. It also happened that the ship was not lost. After the lapse of 4 or 5 days more they were able to salvage the ship and take her off the reef. I do not know the percentage of damage to the vessel, but all during that time the lives of four or five hundred persons were in imminent danger of being lost, as was the ship itself. That is one instance. Another hurricane came in the early part of November last year, in that same region, which was just as severe. So there are hazards in that region. The trans-Florida canal will relieve shipping of those hazards in passing through the Florida Straits at certain seasons of the year. If the canal had been constructed, and the Dixie had been in it, she would have been perfectly safe in going from New Orleans to New York.

Let me pass on to the statement that there is no justification for the construction of the canal and that there are no benefits practically shown by the engineers. The estimate of the Army engineers is that the benefits to commerce from the enterprise will be approximately $8,300,000 a year. The P. W. A. engineers did not go into the question of the hazards or the question of the value of the canal to national defense or the question of promoting commerce; that was not their function; but the Army engineers on river and harbor projects do consider those questions. They estimated that the benefits to commerce alone annually arising from the use of the canal will be approximately $8,300,000; and the engineers approving river and harbor projects usually consider all the elements of cost, such as the interest, maintenance, actual outlay for construction, and every other element entering into the cost. They total the figures, and if the annual benefits amount to 3 percent of the cost plus operation and maintenance they recommend the project. And their figures show that this project much more than meets these requirements for justification.

Now I desire to call attention to some testimony on that subject of the benefits of the canal. The Board of Review was instructed to study and examine the report of the special board of survey of the Army engineers and the report of the P. W. A. engineers, and to make such further examination and study as it might deem appropriate.

On June 28, 1934, the Board made a report to the President, recommending the construction of a sea-level canal, and estimated its cost at $142,700,000, exclusive of land or right-of-way and interest during construction.

The board of review further recommended the deepening of the canal to 35 feet when the traffic will justify it.

It further found that, based upon the economic survey of the special board of survey of the Corps of Engineers, such a sea-level canal would be economically justified on even a 4-percent basis up to a cost of $160,000,000. That is what this competent board found; and there is no higher or better evidence that could be produced to the President and no more authoritative statement could be made than was furnished him in this connection.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. What is the attitude of the people of Florida toward this enterprise?

Mr. FLETCHER. There are some people in Florida who are opposed to the canal. Some propaganda has been spread abroad; some publications have been printed with reference to the objections which they make. I will indicate, I think in a way, what the sentiment is. The State was required to furnish the right-of-way. The canal is to run through six counties. The six counties undertook to furnish the right-of-way by issuing bonds. They provided for the issuance of a million five hundred thousand dollars of bonds.

The law requires that freeholders must vote on the question of issuing bonds and that a majority of them must participate in the election. This question was presented to the people there and the bonds were voted by a vote of 27 to 1. Ninety percent of the freeholders registered and went to the polls to vote upon that question. Ninety-seven percent of them voted for the bond issue. I think that indicates somewhat how the people stand on the question of the canal. About 3 percent of them were against the bond issue.

Mr. COUZENS. I assume it is safe to conclude that those voters were closer to the canal than other people in the State and more interested in it because their land was going to be cut through?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think perhaps that is true. Those bonds were issued, let me say to the Senator, and the proceeds are being used to secure the right-of-way.

Mr. NORRIS. What proportion of the right-of-way has been purchased?

Mr. FLETCHER. I cannot say exactly as to that, but quite a large portion of the right-of-way has been acquired. There are some condemnation proceedings now pending, which are necessary because the authorities cannot reach an agreement with the landowners.

There are other people—and I think I can give some reasons for their attitude—who are against the canal. As a general proposition, the Senator knows that the railroads are not favorable to waterway improvements. I state that as a general proposition, and the record here shows it to be so in this case. The railroads opposed this canal before the special board of survey. That is the record. I am not stating this case except by the record. The representatives of the railroads appeared there and opposed this canal. They do not like the idea of readjustment of freight rates. Perhaps there may be other reasons why they do not favor the canal, but there will be some effect on freight rates undoubtedly. The tendency will be to reduce freight rates. That is not quite agreeable to the railroads. Perhaps they do not like the idea of having to build a bridge or two here and there. I do not know what their argument is, but, as a general proposition, they are against waterway improvements; and that opposition has spread over the State. They have had their representatives in chambers of commerce and elsewhere, and probably here in Washington, for aught I know to the contrary.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. What is the attitude of the Committee on Commerce, which usually passes first on appropriations of this kind?

Mr. FLETCHER. With reference to what?

Mr. COUZENS. With reference to the project. What is the attitude of the Committee on Commerce with respect to the Florida project?

Mr. FLETCHER. This project has not been before the Committee on Commerce. A subcommittee of that committee had a hearing on a resolution involving the matter, but has not yet made its report. The subcommittee will report to the full committee.

Mr. COUZENS. May I suggest that it might be a better program to put this additional appropriation in a deficiency bill after this report shall have been made, rather than to attempt to push it through prior to the time a senatorial committee has passed upon the question?

Mr. FLETCHER. I submit that a senatorial committee has nothing to do with it; that the act of 1935 vested the authority and power in the President, and the President is to consider matters which ordinarily a Senate committee would consider as to their merits. The President has obtained information through the Army engineers and the P. W. A. engineers and the special board of review who have examined the project. That is the same information which would be laid before a committee. It was not necessary to lay it before a committee. It had to be presented to the President. The reports were made to the President.

With reference to the benefits, I invite attention to a comparison between the benefits to be derived from this project and the benefits in relation to cost of other river and harbor projects in the United States which have been adopted by Congress.

The benefits in relation to cost in this instance, taking only direct benefits to shipping, stand at about 1 to 1.6. The ordinary ratio of cost to benefits of river and harbor projects throughout the country is much less than this. This project stands in the front rank of river and harbor projects in the country. All things considered, the ratio of cost to benefits of this project will be higher than that of any other project now in existence that I know of or of which we have any record.

That comparison is all covered in the hearings, and I shall not take the time to go into it. It appears at page 61 of the hearings before the subcommittee where comparisons are made with various other projects, such as the Delaware River to Philadelphia and Trenton, the New York-New Jersey channel, the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, the Beaver-Mahoning Canal, and the Cape Cod Canal. In the three latter cases the ratio is as 1 to 1. In the case of the Florida canal the ratio is 1 to 1.6, according to the figures given by the experts who have examined the whole matter.

Let me now take up the exhibits and maps on the wall. Some comment has been made rather facetiously about the map and what it is intended to show. I call attention to the fact that each and every ship located on the map is indicated by a red marker, placed there by the Department of Commerce. The red markers indicate the location of the ships on the 10th day of December 1932, at noon. The map shows the location of the ships on the seas at that hour, at noon on the 10th day of December 1932. The ships which would ordinarily use the canal are so indicated. The English Channel is shown, with ships coming from Holland, France, and Germany. On the other side of the map are shown the ships along the Atlantic coast, ships from New York and Baltimore.

The actual location of ships at that hour on that day is shown with reference to those ships which would use this canal. The entrance to the canal on the Gulf side and on the Atlantic side is shown. At noon on the 10th day of December 1932 the ships were actually located as shown on the map. There is no guesswork about it. That information is furnished from the records of the Commerce Department. Each red marker on the map represents an actual ship in its actual location at noon on the 10th day of December 1932. It was necessary to greatly magnify the size of the ships to make them appreciable on the map.

About 900 ships are shown. An additional 100 or more could not be shown, because they were in portions of the world not covered by the map. Those ships make more than 10,000 transits per year through the straits of Florida. Every ship shown upon the map was bound through the Straits of Florida and would have used the canal if it had been open. No other ships are shown. There is no attempt to show any other ships on the sea except those which are now using the Straits of Florida to the Gulf, and which would have used this canal if it had been constructed.

The location of the ships, as indicated on this map, was furnished by the Department of Commerce. The name of each ship can be obtained from the official marine register of that date.

The average savings in time which the canal would afford to these ships, so far as coastwise traffic is concerned, would be approximately 2 days on each round trip. A ship clearing from New York to New Orleans would save 2 days by passing through the canal on the round trip. A ship from Baltimore to Galveston would save about 2 days' time by using the canal on the round trip. Ships of foreign traffic would save approximately 1½ days. Only about 30 percent of the commerce which would be carried through the canal goes foreign. Seventy percent would be coastwise, the engineers estimate. This is a steadily increasing traffic. If the map were brought up to date it would show more than 50 additional ships.

This is the greatest stream of ocean-borne traffic in the world, and is equivalent to one ship passing through the canal every 47 minutes, day and night, throughout the year. This is the actual traffic as it exists today available to the canal. It does not include any of the traffic passing through the straits of Florida which probably would not use the canal. The traffic available to the canal at the present time amounts to 90,000,000 deadweight tons per year. This is nearly double the traffic on the Suez Canal and almost one-half again as great as that on the Panama Canal.

All of the figures and statistics which I have quoted were supplied by the Corps of Engineers or the Department of Commerce.

Mr. President, is it possible that Senators will oppose a mighty stride of progress, the greatest undertaking in this generation on the part of this Government? Is it possible that Senators will block the way of the greatest accomplishment achieved by the Government in this century?

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] says that shipowners and ship operators do not appear to favor the proposed canal. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read a number of letters; but I submit that the commercial value, the economic justification of a project, cannot be determined by asking individual shipowners or operators their opinion about it. Their opinion ordinarily is obtained for what it is worth. It may be valuable merely as supplementary or corroborative, but it does not determine the matter. The engineers have to consider commerce as a whole. This is a great national enterprise. The question is not whether this shipowner or that interest wants the canal, but whether it is in the public interest. The President undoubtedly looked over the situation and concluded that the result of this project will be for the benefit of the whole country; that it is a national undertaking; that it will add to the national wealth; that there are in this country thousands of persons who are unemployed, and here is a project which will give employment to those persons. The Chief of Engineers estimates that when the canal is in full process of construction, it will afford employment to 20,000 workers annually—20,000 annually! That is one consideration. The President has, therefore, after considering these facts, authorized the project.

I say now, with reference to the individual letters which have been received, that the writers of the letters contradict each other and themselves. They say one thing to the special board of survey when they send out a questionnaire, and they say another thing to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. The writers cannot be depended upon as furnishing reliable testimony, and they are practically worthless when it comes to expressing their views, because, as I say, they contradict themselves and change their minds from time to time. They represent merely their respective individual interests.

I wish to read an extract from a letter written by a man whose letter the Senator from Michigan read yesterday, addressed to him. Here is one addressed to the Army Engineers' Special Board of Survey from the Sinclair Navigation Co., 45 Nassau Street, New York City, under date of May 15, 1933, signed by J. G. Johnson, vice president. It says:

Reviewing our company operations and allowing 36 hours for one transit of canal, the estimated time saved via canal as compared to present route would be approximately 3,000 hours per annum for all vessels. On present freight rates this would represent to our company a saving of about $74,000 per year. This is based on about 130 trips equal to 260 transits.

The only reliable testimony submitted on the question of the time required for making a transit of the canal comes from the Army engineers and the Bureau of Navigation, which are qualified and equipped to make such calculations. The Bureau gives us the time of transit as 24 hours from the lightship on the Atlantic at one entrance of the canal to the lightship on the Gulf of Mexico at the other entrance of the canal. These ship people are figuring on 36 hours. I presume perhaps they had in view a lock canal; but even with that, they show a benefit of $74,000 per year. They say further—I quote from the same letter:

As to the necessity for, or desirability of, this project in the interest of navigation and marine commerce, the estimated savings, in our opinion, would not permit of the canal being operated on a toll basis as a self-liquidating project. If the canal were constructed by the War Department as a regular river and harbor project and operated toll free, there would be a saving to marine commerce.

That, of course, is natural.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BENSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. COSTIGAN. What the Senator from Florida is saying is of such general interest that I should like, at this moment, to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Keyes	Overton
Austin	Copeland	King	Pittman
Bachman	Costigan	La Follette	Pope
Bailey	Couzens	Lewis	Radcliffe
Barkley	Davis	Logan	Reynolds
Benson	Donahay	Loneragan	Robinson
Bilbo	Duffy	Long	Russell
Black	Fletcher	McAdoo	Schwellenbach
Bone	Frazier	McGill	Sheppard
Borah	George	McKellar	Shipstead
Brown	Gerry	McNary	Smith
Bulkley	Gibson	Maloney	Stetson
Bulow	Glass	Metcalf	Thomas, Utah
Burke	Guffey	Minton	Townsend
Byrd	Hale	Moore	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Harrison	Murphy	Van Nuys
Capper	Hatch	Murray	Wagner
Caraway	Hayden	Neely	Walsh
Carey	Holt	Norbeck	Wheeler
Clark	Johnson	Norris	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

(At this point Mr. FLETCHER yielded to Mr. REYNOLDS, who spoke on the subject of the deportation of aliens. Mr. REYNOLDS' speech appears on p. 3843 in today's RECORD.)

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I hope to conclude my remarks in a very short time. Many hours could be spent going into details in connection with this project, but if what I have said has not been convincing, nothing I might say further would be.

There is one point which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] mentioned on yesterday which occurs to me now. His argument was that the cost of the project would probably run up to $200,000,000, or some other indefinite sum, and that the regular business operations in connection with an enterprise like this would be interfered with by reason of employing relief labor.

The testimony of General Markham was that he expected to complete the project within the estimates furnished, notwithstanding some increases in connection with some requirements of the W. P. A. The estimates made by the engineers and by the board of review were to the effect that the total cost of the canal would be $143,000,000. There is no foundation for any argument to the effect that it would exceed that figure. If there were an increase in the cost, of, say, 25 percent, by reason of employment of labor on the relief rolls, that would not extend over the whole period of 5 or 6 years.

Senators might apply that to 1 year if they wish, and suppose we say that by reason of conditions now imposed or by reason of restrictions which are suggested, that the cost would be 25 percent higher for the next year than it would be if the engineers had a free hand to let contracts and attend to this work just as they would in connection with an ordinary proposition; that would mean an increase of $3,000,000; it would not mean an increase of 25 percent of the total cost, but an increase in cost of 1 year's work, the total of which is estimated to be $12,000,000. I merely mention that.

There are other things suggested in the Senator's remarks which I should like to take up, but I will not take time to do so.

I desire to call attention to the exhibits on my left, the photographs on the wall. These photographs show excavation in the cut section of the canal. This cut section is really the canal proper, and is only 29 miles long. All the rest of the so-called canal is merely a canalization of existing rivers. Senators will hear talk of the great length of the canal. As a matter of fact that canal itself, the actual cut, is only 29 miles long. I hope Senators will bear that in mind.

These pictures show the excavation of approximately 17,000,000 cubic yards so far. These excavating operations at the present time extend over a line 20 miles long. In other words this "hole in the ground", as it is sometimes described, is about 20 miles long, with some gaps.

The average labor at the present time employed is about 5,000 men.

As the pictures will show, the work is being done by efficient machines and by hand labor where appropriate.

The dimensions of the canal are as follows:

Depth, 30 feet.

Bottom width: A. Sea approaches, 1,000 feet. B. In rivers, 400 feet. C. In cut, 250 feet.

Mr. President, it is sometimes called the Florida canal. It gets that name because of its passage across the State of Florida. Its proper title is Atlantic to Gulf Canal. It affords a connection between the Atlantic and the Gulf.

Florida, of course, is interested in the canal. The Florida Legislature unanimously petitions for the construction of the canal. Florida has authorized its construction across the State. Florida people are greatly interested because, in the first place, they have been given to understand this canal would be constructed, that the Government would proceed with it, and they have trusted in that assurance. They have voted for a million and a half of bonds which have been issued to provide the right-of-way.

I do not know how much of the original grant of funds under the act of 1935 remains in the hands of the President. I am not familiar with that. I only know that the President has come to Congress and laid this proposal and recommendation before Congress: That the Director of the Budget has recommended this appropriation of $12,000,000 for the next year's work on that canal. These are projects which the President has recommended, which he has authorized, pursuant to law, which have been undertaken and which are under construction, and he brings them to Congress and recommends specific appropriation of money for them.

It has been said that the President has ample authority to continue to allot funds to these projects under the Emergency Appropriation Act of 1935, and possibly from any additional relief appropriations which Congress may make, and this is unquestionably true. But that is no valid reason why we should not make specific appropriations for them in this bill. They are undoubtedly qualified for appropriations as river and harbor items.

I have not dwelt upon other features such as the importance of the construction of the canal to the national defense. It would afford another route to the Panama Canal and to the Gulf of Mexico, if the Straits of Florida should be blockaded or interfered with. Its value as a factor in national defense cannot be estimated in dollars and cents. This project is the mightiest force now available in making the Gulf of Mexico the Mediterranean of the western world.

I submit the matter to the Senate.

Mr. President, I ask to have printed, as a part of my remarks, a statement by Mr. Henry H. Buckman, consulting engineer, giving the facts and the history in connection with the Florida canal project; and a telegram which I have received from Col. Gilbert A. Youngberg, a retired former United States district engineer.

There being no objection, the statement and the telegram were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY HENRY H. BUCKMAN, CONSULTING ENGINEER

The proposal to construct a waterway across Florida which would obviate the expense and danger attendant upon navigation of the route through the straits of Florida has been considered now and again for more than a century. President Jackson urged the construction of such a canal, and since that time it has been from time to time the subject of examinations and inquiry by the Federal Government. Until recent years the project assumed the form of a barge canal. Until the growth of ocean shipping into and out of the Gulf of Mexico increased to a point which appeared to justify the cost of a ship canal such surveys and discussions were limited to a waterway of the barge-canal type because of the smaller dimensions of a barge canal and other engineering considerations. The possible location covered a much wider area than is the case with a ship canal, and the earlier surveys made by the Corps of Engineers included the examination of routes whose eastern termini ranged from the east central coast of Florida to points on the coast of Georgia. The results of these surveys indicated that several routes were feasible for a barge canal, but in no case has the potential barge traffic been sufficient to warrant the cost of a canal which would transit only barges. Some time prior to 1925 the development of ocean-going traffic through the straits of Florida had reached a point to where the apparent savings to shipping and ocean-borne commerce indicated the justification of the more expensive ship canal, which would also serve for barge traffic. However, engineering considerations governing the construction of a waterway of ship-canal dimensions confined the location of the project to the Peninsula of Florida and eliminated the possibility of a route through both Georgia and Florida.

Under the River and Harbor Acts of 1927 and 1930 the Corps of Engineers initiated and completed examinations and physical surveys of this project. The surveys were conducted by a special board of Army engineer officers detailed to that work by the Chief of Engineers.

In 1932 there was organized in New Orleans a National Gulf-Atlantic Ship Canal Association, the stated purpose of which was to procure construction by the Federal Government of this project in order that the resulting benefits might accrue to industry, agriculture, and commerce of the Nation.

The above-named association, a corporation not for profit, made a pro-forma application to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan for the construction of the canal as a self-liquidating project. This pro-forma application proposed that the loan be made to such appropriate public corporation or agency as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation might direct.

By an act of the Legislature of the State of Florida, approved May 12, 1933, there was created the Ship Canal Authority of the State of Florida with powers and duties appropriate to cooperation with the Federal Government in the construction of such a waterway. This authority then became the applicant for the loan before the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, replacing the national association.

In June 1933 the special board of survey of the Corps of Engineers made a preliminary report to the Chief of Engineers. At this date the board had completed the gathering of the greater part of its physical data upon which the cost of the project might be developed.

No action on the application was taken by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; and in or about August 1933 the application, together with all other applications of this class, was transferred by Executive order to the Public Works Administration.

The engineering division of the Public Works Administration made a thorough examination of the project, assuming the basic physical data obtained by the Special Board of Survey of the Corps of Engineers, but developing its own plans, specifications, and unit construction costs, and supplementing by its own examination the economic survey which was being carried out by the special board. Under date of October 19, 1933, a report on the project was made by the Public Works Administration engineers. This report found that the estimated cost of a lock canal, according to the plans of the Public Works Administration engineers, would be $115,000,000, and that the direct benefits resulting from a canal would be upward of $8,524,000 per year; that in addition to the direct benefits there would be additional benefits of $2,004,000 per year; and that the cash tolls which might reasonably be expected to be collected would be $6,500,000 per year. The conclusions reached in that report are quoted as follows:

"It is concluded that the project covered herein constitutes a public necessity and is of real social value. The project will afford much employment to many classes of skilled and unskilled labor; that the design is in accord with sound engineering practice, and that the project is economically sound. It is recommended that the loan with or without the grant be made."

On December 30, 1933, the Special Board of Survey of the Corps of Engineers completed its work and made its final report. The examination made by the special board included an exhaustive economic survey made by the Department of Commerce at the request of the Chief of Engineers. That report was based upon examination of the project as a river and harbor project, without reference to its self-liquidating possibilities. Its findings with regard to traffic which might be served by the canal, and the general benefits to commerce were in substantial agreement with the findings of the engineers of the Public Works Administration; but owing to different design and specifications and unit costs, the lock canal covered by that report showed an estimated cost at considerable variance with the costs developed by the engineers of the Public Works Administration.

In the first part of 1934, in response to a request made by all the Senators of the States of Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, and Florida, the President constituted and appointed a board of review, which consisted of two Army engineers designated by the Secretary of War, two engineers designated by the Administrator of Public Works, and one engineer from civil life designated by the other four. The personnel of this board was as follows:

For the War Department: Lt. Col. Warren T. Hannum, Corps of Engineers; Maj. Brehon B. Somervell, Corps of Engineers.

For the Public Works Administration: Clarence McDonough, chief engineer; Frederick Fowler, consulting engineer.

Fifth member of the board and chairman: Walter J. Douglas, of New York City.

This board of review was instructed to study and examine the reports of the special board of survey and the Public Works Administration, and to make such further examination and study as it might deem appropriate.

On June 28, 1934, this board made a report to the President, recommending the construction of a sea-level canal and estimated its cost at $142,700,000, exclusive of land for right-of-way and interest during construction. The board further recommended the deepening of the canal to 35 feet when the traffic shall justify it. The board further found that, based upon the economic survey of the special board of survey of the Corps of Engineers, such a sea-level canal would be economically justified, on a 4-per-cent basis, up to a cost of $160,000,000.

Subsequent to this report, the President directed the board of review to make an examination of the project with a view to determining whether it could be constructed as a self-liquidating project upon the basis of tolls which might be collected from shipping.

Under date of September 15, 1934, the board reported adversely on this aspect of the project.

On January 29, 1935, acting upon a memorandum of the Chief Engineer of the Public Works Administration, citing the recommendation for a sea-level canal made by the board of review and the estimated cost of $142,700,000, the Administrator of Public Works disapproved the application for a loan to the Ship Canal Authority of the State of Florida for a lock canal. This disapproval was without reference to the economic justification of the project as determined by the criteria ordinarily applied to river and harbor projects, and without reference to the recommendation of the board of review and its findings that a 30-foot sea-level canal is economically justified up to a cost of $160,000,000, that recommendation remaining as the final and approving official finding with reference to the canal as a river and harbor project.

I quote from a letter under date of February 12, 1936, from Senator FLETCHER to Lt. Col. Brehon Somervell, member and recorder of the board of review, and Colonel Somervell's reply under date of February 12, 1936.

FEBRUARY 10, 1936.

Lt. Col. BREHON B. SOMERVELL,
Member and Recorder, Board of Review,
War Department, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLONEL SOMERVELL: I have before me copy of the report of the board of review for the Florida canal under date of June 28, 1934. My understanding of this report is that the board recommended to the President a sea-level canal of 30-foot depth, and found that the cost of such a canal will be approximately $143,000,000, exclusive of land and interest during construction, and that the board found further that the project is justified by the criteria ordinarily applied to river and harbor projects at a cost of $160,000,000 or more.

I have also before me a supplementary report of this board which is responsive to a directive from the President that the project be examined with a view to its self-liquidating possibilities, and finding adversely on this aspect. I understand further that this latter finding has no reference to the board's first finding that the canal is justified on the total benefits when judged by the criteria ordinarily applied to river and harbor projects.

I am advised that you served as a member of this Board and were its recorder. As a member of the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Commerce, which is examining Senate Resolution 210, providing for an inquiry into certain matters relating to this project, I shall appreciate your advising me as to whether my understanding of these reports as set forth above is a correct interpretation of the action of the board.

Sincerely yours,

DUNCAN U. FLETCHER.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., February 12, 1936.

HON. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your letter of February 10, 1936, in which you state that it is your understanding that the Board of Review appointed by the President to consider the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal found that the canal would be justified by the criteria ordinarily applied to river and harbor projects at a cost of $160,000,000. You also state that it is your understanding that the second report of the Board had no reference to the Board's first finding in this regard.

You undoubtedly have reference to the following statement in the first report of the Board:

"This Board was not instructed to estimate the benefits accruing from the construction and operation of this canal. However, if it be assumed that the economic study made by the special Board of Army Engineers for a lock canal is sound, and considering the lower maintenance and operating costs of a sea-level canal, the cost of a canal which would be justified at 4 percent interest would be:

"Sea-level canal, 30-foot depth, $160,000,000."

The second report of the Board had to do with an investigation of tolls and had no reference to justification on the basis of total benefits.

Sincerely yours,

BREHON SOMERVELL,
Lieutenant Colonel, Corps of Engineers, Recorder.

On August 30, 1935, by virtue of authority vested in him under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, approved April 8, 1935, the President authorized the project and directed the Secretary of the Treasury to transfer to the War Department, Corps of Engineers, $5,000,000 of the funds provided in the above act, for the initiation of work.

On September 3, 1935, construction was begun under the direction of the Chief of Engineers, and is continuing at this time, with an average employment of approximately 5,000 men.

In his annual report for 1935 the Chief of Engineers made the following recommendation for this project. I quote from pages 620 and 621 of that report:

"Proposed operations: It is expected that work under contract on excavation of the high ground in the central sections of the canal will commence on or before October 28, 1935. Funds allotted will be applied as follows:

Clearing right-of-way	$500,000
Housing, shops, and minor structures	500,000
Excavation in central areas	3,500,000
Bridge foundations	500,000
Total	5,000,000

The additional sum of $31,000,000 can be profitably expended during the fiscal year 1936 as follows:

Equipment	$16,360,000
Housing, shops, and minor structures	750,000
Excavation	10,390,000
Bridges	1,500,000
Surveys	1,000,000
Contingencies	1,000,000
Total	31,000,000

It is further estimated that the sum of $26,000,000 can be profitably expended during the fiscal year 1937 as follows:

Excavation, wet and dry	$20,000,000
Bridges	2,500,000
Flood-control works	500,000
Gulf breakwater	1,000,000
Engineering and contingencies	2,000,000
Total	26,000,000

On October 22, 1935, in conformity with the conditions imposed by Federal authority, the six counties comprising the Florida ship canal navigation district voted by a majority of 27 to 1 a bond issue of $1,500,000 for the purchase of all necessary land for right-of-way for the canal. On January 23, 1936, the first block of $300,000 of these bonds was sold, and the proceeds employed to deliver to the Federal Government right-of-way for excavation in the central or cut section of the canal.

The foregoing is, in briefest form, the official record of the project. Before proceeding further, it appears appropriate to direct attention to the exhaustive nature and broad scope of the examinations and studies made of this project by the Federal agencies. I quote from a letter from the Chief of Engineers to Senator FLETCHER under date of January 28, 1936:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, January 28, 1936.

HON. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In your letter of January 23, 1926, you referred to Senate Resolution No. 210, with respect to the Atlantic-Gulf waterway and asked to be furnished with certain specific information.

I take pleasure in furnishing this information herewith:

1. You state that paragraph 1 of the resolution proposes an inquiry into "the nature and extent of expenditures to be made from emergency relief funds, and subsequent expenditures for construction and maintenance to be made from regular funds", and ask whether or not, in my opinion, there has been sufficient competent survey, examination, and study of this project to determine its construction and maintenance cost with the same degree of accuracy as in the case of other river and harbor improvements in general heretofore approved and constructed. The investigations undertaken by this Department with respect to the Atlantic-Gulf waterway have been as exhaustive and detailed as those normally undertaken in connection with the preliminary examinations and surveys of river and harbor projects. This Department has realized from the inception of this examination that the magnitude of the project required a comprehensive study, and its investigations undertaken over a period of 6 years were conducted in scope and detail sufficient to establish construction costs with reasonable accuracy. The estimated cost of maintenance, which must be based in large part on the experience gained from the maintenance of the many river and harbor projects throughout the country, would also appear to be dependable.

2. You refer to paragraph 2 of the resolution, which proposes an inquiry into "the sufficiency of plans and information to determine whether the canal should be a sea level or a lock canal, and whether it should be 30 or 35 feet in depth", and asked if I believe that there has been gathered a sufficiency of such plans and information to determine whether the canal should be a sea level or a lock canal, and whether it should be 30 or 35 feet in depth. The data before the Department indicate rather clearly that the effects of the sea-level canal on the underground water supply of the State will not be of a widespread and serious nature. Consequently, there is no necessity for the construction of a lock canal at an increase in construction cost and in operating time over a sea-level canal. The information gathered by the Department shows that a depth of 30 feet will suffice for practically all vessels now engaged in the Gulf trade, or likely to be engaged in that trade for some time in the future.

3. You refer to paragraph 3 of the resolution, which proposes an inquiry into "the sufficiency of authentic information to determine whether the canal will contaminate the ground water supply of the adjacent areas", and asked if, in my opinion, a sufficiency of information with respect to underground water supply has been gathered to make a determination of the effect of the canal on such supply. This Department, in its investigations of the canal, has utilized the services of expert geologists and water engineers. A special board of review, formed pursuant to instructions from the President, also had the services of a competent water engineer. The preliminary data gathered by the Department indicated that there was some possibility of adverse effects on the underground water supply. The more detailed information which is now available clearly indicates that the adverse effects are largely local and not of a serious nature. When the project was placed under way as a part of the relief program, I had the district engineer at Ocala, Fla., assemble a board of selected experts to consider the data gathered by the two boards, the State geological department and the Geological Survey, and to undertake additional and exhaustive field investigations. These experts have recently submitted their interim report, which definitely concludes that the effects of the sea-level canal on the underground water supply will not be serious but local in nature and capable of control with reasonable expenditures for remedial works. The authentic information available permits the conclusion that the sea-level canal will not contaminate the underground water supply of adjacent areas.

4. You refer to paragraph 4 of the resolution which proposes an inquiry into "the nature and extent of the available traffic to warrant the ultimate expenditure of between $140,000,000 and $200,000,000", and asked if a sufficient investigation and examination has been made and data compiled to enable a decision as to the amount of cost of the project which available traffic will justify. The Special Board of Engineers had available data compiled by the Department of Commerce. In addition, they made a detailed study to determine the economic benefits to transportation which would result from the construction of the canal. While this information and data have not been reviewed in detail by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, it is most complete and adequate for a full determination of the estimated value of the benefits to navigation which will result from its construction.

5. You refer to my appearance before the subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce on January 17, in which certain questions were asked with respect to the replies received from shipping concerns to a questionnaire sent out by the Special Board of this Department in connection with their investigation, and asked if these letters were used to establish the economic justification of the project, and further as to the usual factors which are studied in determining economic justification. This Department has not stated that the replies to these questionnaires represented the economic justification for the canal project, nor are such letters generally used for the establishment of economic justification. The Special Board of Army Engineers made an extensive economic survey, and was aided in the preparation of its report by an independent survey undertaken by the Department of Commerce at the request of the Chief of Engineers.

The determinations of the special board with respect to the economic benefits of the project were based in large part on these surveys. The letters to which you refer are some of the replies to questionnaires addressed by the special board to shipping concerns, so that it might be informed as to their opinions with respect to the effect of the project on the individual interests of the companies concerned. In determining the economic justification of a proposed river and harbor improvement, the investigating officers ascertain the definite savings in time and distance which will be made available to navigation without increased hazards as a result of the improvement in question. These savings in time and distance converted into monetary savings and such other incidental benefits as clearly accrue to water-borne commerce and the general public interest, such as a reduction in the hazards of navigation, form the basis for the determination of the economic justification of a project. The views of navigation and commercial interests as to the effect which the proposed improvement may have on their operations are an aid to the board in weighing the public value of the savings and benefits as determined by the board.

I trust that the information contained herein answers the specific questions propounded in your letter. I shall be pleased to furnish any further information desired on request.

Very truly yours,

E. M. MARKHAM,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

Attention is invited to a recapitulation of the record as regards the findings of the several examining agencies, with regard to cost and economic justification. In the first place, it should be borne in mind that the engineers of the Public Works Administration and the special board of survey of the Corps of Engineers developed their cost estimates from plans and specifications for a lock canal which varied in many important details. For instance, the engineers of the Public Works Administration planned a canal with two locks while the special board of survey considered a canal with three locks. Other important differences in plan and specifications make the estimates of total costs of these two examining agencies incommensurate. Again, the board of review developed its cost estimate from plans and specifications for a sea-level canal. As these board of review plans and specifications and cost estimate of $142,700,000 have been approved by the Chief of Engineers, these elements of the project may be considered as definitely determined. It remains to consider the benefits found by the examining agencies, and to apply these benefits to the cost of the project. The method for determining the economic justification of a river and harbor project established and followed by the Corps of Engineers is as follows:

The direct benefits to commerce are determined as accurately as possible in terms of dollars and cents per year. From these direct benefits are deducted the annual cost of maintenance and operation of the improvement, and, in the case of a certain class of structures which are subject to depreciation, an additional annual amount is deducted to amortize such structures over a reasonable period of time. The net remainder of benefits, when capitalized at 3 percent, should exceed the estimated cost of the project, if it is economically justified. Sometimes, when the whole project is subject to depreciation, the net annual benefits are capitalized at 4 percent in lieu of charging amortization. In the case of the canal under discussion, the only structures which are subject to depreciation are two small water-control works and certain bridges, the cost of which is less than 2½ percent of the total cost of the project. With this explanation, the essential conclusions which may be drawn from the findings and figures of the board of review are the following:

(1) On the basis of the methods customarily used by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors to determine the economic justification of a project, the Florida ship canal is justified by a wide margin. These methods are analogous to those used in commercial practice for work of a similar character.

(2) Not only would the benefits to shipping exceed by a wide margin maintenance and operating costs and interest at the current rates as required by the Board of Engineers but in approximately 32 years they would, in addition, more than amortize the original cost of the work plus interest during construction.

(3) The return from tolls considered by the board of review is no longer an issue as the route is being opened as a free canal, as are the other waterways of the United States.

On work of the nature of the canal, which includes but a small percentage of items subject to depreciation (less than 2½ percent), the Board of Engineers requires that estimated annual benefits exceed by a safe margin estimated maintenance and operating charges and interest at current rates. These rates are now less than 3 percent.

In the case of the Florida ship canal, the board of review's report of June 28, 1935, finds with the Army special board of survey annual benefits of approximately $8,200,000, which, even on a 4-percent basis, allowing for amortization, the board found would justify a cost up to $160,000,000, or $17,000,000 above the actual estimated cost. It will be recalled that the engineers of the Public Works Administration reported annual benefits above $10,500,000. The figure of the special board of survey of the Army is therefore the more conservative.

Following the method of the Board for Rivers and Harbors of the Corps of Engineers, we have, then, the following basis of justification for the Florida canal, using the benefits determined by the Army special board of survey and the cost estimate approved by the Chief of Engineers.

Annual benefits.....	$8,200,000
Cost, without interest during construction.....	$143,000,000
Interest during construction, at 3 percent.....	12,870,000
Total first cost.....	155,870,000
Annual interest charges on $155,870,000, at 3 percent.....	4,676,000
Annual maintenance and operation expense.....	601,000
Total annual costs.....	5,277,000
Net annual benefits.....	2,923,000

This amount, at 3 percent, will amortize the entire cost of the project in approximately 32 years. If capitalized at 3 percent, it shows a margin over the cost of construction of $99,000,000. In other words, on the basis used by the Board for Rivers and Harbors of the Corps of Engineers, the project shows that it will pay in direct benefits sufficient to meet all interest, operation, and maintenance charges, and repay its entire cost, including interest during construction, in approximately 32 years. It is therefore not only economically justified, but is in a highly preferred class of projects. This becomes even more apparent when the ratio of cost to benefits of the project is compared with the ratios of cost and benefits of other meritorious authorized projects. The following is a list of the most outstanding of these:

Name of project	Ratio of cost to benefits	Rank according to ratio
Florida Canal.....	1 to 1.6.....	First.
Delaware River to Philadelphia and to Trenton.....	1 to 1.3.....	Second.
New York-New Jersey channels.....	1 to 1.2.....	Third.
Chesapeake and Delaware Canal.....	1 to 1.....	Fourth.
Beaver-Mahoning Canal.....	do.....	Do.
Cape Cod Canal.....	do.....	Do.

The soundness of the above conclusions is enhanced by the fact that the figures do not include any benefits resulting from stimulation of commerce and shipping; adjustment of freight rates and mail subsidies; reduction in hazards to shipping during hurricane season; increased earning power of ships due to the shorter time required to make the voyage; and the very real value of the project as a factor in the national defense.

It seems appropriate to direct attention to both the support and the opposition which have been offered to this project. The record shows that it is formally opposed by the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad, the Florida East Coast Railway, the Seaboard Air Line Railway, and the Southern Railway. The record also shows that it is opposed by the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Tampa, the city of Orlando, and by certain other civic organizations in the State of Florida. The record further shows that both the city of Tampa and the city of Orlando have petitioned the Corps of Engineers to make a survey with a view to constructing a canal along a route which would lie adjacent to those two cities, respectively.

In support of the project, there are in the official record resolutions of the Mississippi Valley Association, the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, the Texas and Louisiana Intracoastal Waterway Association; the Legislature of the State of Florida, and numerous commercial and civic organizations from various parts of the country.

I quote from a resolution of the Mississippi Valley Association in convention at St. Louis, November 27, 1935:

"We recommend . . . the Gulf-Atlantic Ship Canal now under construction, and its completion, under the schedules laid down by the Chief of Engineers."

Again, I quote from a resolution of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association in convention at Boston, October 7, 1935:

"This association has for many years urged the construction of a canal across Florida, and we are gratified that the Federal Government, through the Army Engineers, has begun work on a ship canal which will not only serve ocean commerce but will provide a connecting link between the Intracoastal Waterways of the Atlantic and the Gulf of Mexico. We recommend the further allocation of funds for the completion of this project, the benefits of which will be Nation-wide."

Again, I quote a letter under date of February 12, 1935, to Senator FLETCHER, from the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, signed by its president, Frank Reid:

NATIONAL RIVERS AND HARBORS CONGRESS,
Washington, D. C., February 12, 1936.

HON. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: At its thirtieth annual convention held in Washington, D. C., May 2-3, 1935, the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, upon the recommendation of its projects committee, voted unanimously to endorse the Gulf-Atlantic Ship Canal across Florida as being sound, needful, and sufficiently advanced in status, and a project that should be promptly constructed in the public interest.

The projects committee of the Congress is composed of an outstanding waterway leader from each of the 10 engineering divisions of the United States, and gave careful consideration to this project at open hearings. The committee itself voted unanimously to recommend approval of the Florida canal, and its report was adopted without a dissenting vote by the convention composed of delegates from 40 States, the District of Columbia, Alaska, and Puerto Rico, representing the Federal Government, States, cities, counties, State, municipal, and local governmental agencies, chambers of commerce, waterway associations, agricultural, labor, industrial, and trade organizations throughout the Nation.

This project will strengthen the national defense, provide a permanent investment which will increase the national wealth, greatly benefit industry, agriculture, commerce, and labor, and afford protection to human life and property from the menace of the tropical hurricanes that visit the Florida Peninsula.

From my own personal examination of the project, I am convinced that it is one of the most meritorious waterway projects ever undertaken by the Government, and that the expressed fears of its ill effects are groundless. I hope the Senate Committee on Commerce will not be misled by the insidious campaign to discredit and destroy our national waterways.

Very truly yours,

FRANK R. REID,

President, National Rivers and Harbors Congress.

In addition to these, approval of the project has been formally expressed by 70 Members of the United States Senate and the Governors of 36 States, representing all of the major political parties.

Evidence has been presented in the form of letters from ship-operating concerns which indicates a lack of interest in or hostility to the project on the part of those particular companies. It seems appropriate to call attention to certain considerations which necessarily govern the evaluation of this kind of testimony.

Long-established and universally accepted custom has determined that the highest authority on questions of hazards to inland navigation, and the safe dimensions and conditions for harbors and inland waterways, is the Corps of Engineers; and the highest authority for sailing routes and for questions of time and distance is the Bureau of Navigation. When these two agencies unite in determining that a given route for navigation will be adequate and safe, and will require certain times and distances to be covered, it may be reasonably concluded that these determinations are correct. In the case of the present project, the Army Engineers and the Bureau of Navigation have determined that it will be adequate and safe for navigation, and that it will effect certain savings of time and distance. These savings in time and distance may be, and have been, translated, with reasonable accuracy, into dollars and cents. When a ship operator states that he will not avail himself of these savings, he may be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to be telling the truth. But when he denies the time and distance savings determined by these agencies, it is fair to assume that he is in error. Since the immemorial tendency of trade and navigation has been to take advantage of every factor which might increase profit, it would appear that when a ship operator states that he will not avail himself of such factors, they are probably overbalanced by other factors, not necessarily apparent, which apply to the interests of that particular operator. For these reasons, expressions, either favorable or adverse to a project of this kind, from ship-operating concerns, can only be taken as a guide to the individual interest of those concerns, respectively, and cannot be made the basis for determining whether or not commerce in general will avail itself of the improvement or, for that matter, whether all commerce would not use the improvement once it came into existence, regardless of their preference for or satisfaction with the status quo. It is of record that there was a very considerable body of adverse opinion among ship operators with regard to all the great canals of the world prior to their construction, and it is also of record that, with unimportant exceptions, commerce in general promptly availed itself of these new routes when opened.

Ship-operating concerns may be divided into a number of classes, which include the following:

(1) Those operators whose Gulf-Atlantic shipping is secondary to some other phase of their business. Many companies falling within this group have interlocking directorates and ownerships in other business which do not show on the surface and can only be determined after an elaborate analysis of the holdings of these companies.

(2) Those operators who hold mail-subsidy contracts from the United States Government. While the rate of pay by the Government varies, nevertheless the general principle is to subsidize the American-flag vessel so that it may compete with the cheaper-operated foreign vessel in the same trade. Today's subsidy to the mail vessels in the Gulf trade is approximately $2.50 per outbound mile. Further, the contract stipulates that the vessel is paid on the shortest available route. Therefore, it is obvious that by construction of the Florida canal the route would be shortened and the pay to these ships would be reduced by $2.50 per mile for each outbound mile so shortened. In the case of some operators this item becomes considerable because of the many ships operated by them. However, it must be remembered that the reduction of this mail pay by shortening the route is a direct saving to the United States, and the canal should be credited with this saving. At the same time, no injustice will be done to the ship operator, providing the original theory of determining the mail pay on a mileage basis is correct, because the reduced pay for reduced mileage will still leave the American and foreign ship on the same parity. However, it may be that the mail ship prefers to collect from the Government and run the extra mileage at Government expense.

(3) Those operators whose business it is to charter their ships: These companies operate mainly in the tanker trade and own no product to carry in their own bottoms. They are, therefore, dependent upon a shortage of vessels to create a demand for their ships. They, therefore, cannot view any facility which tends to bring the Atlantic seaboard and the Gulf coast closer together as a benefit to their business.

Further than this, there is an almost universal feeling among operators in the Gulf-Atlantic run that they are in a trading position. In other words, if the canal is constructed, they desire to have accrue to them the largest possible share of the benefits. This thought may be reflected in three ways: First, by a desire that the canal be toll-free, in order that the entire savings will accrue to them; second, by a desire not to see the principle of tolls established for the use of any waterway within the United States; third, by a desire that if tolls are charged they be as low as possible, in order that their share of the increased savings will be a maximum.

Again, some operators feel that competition will force most of the savings to be passed on to the producers and consumers of the Nation. While this is really an argument in favor of the canal, it nevertheless results in a trading attitude on the part of the operators.

This becomes increasingly clear when the exact wording of the original questionnaire sent out by the War Department is considered. I quote from that letter to all shipping concerns, under date of May 9, 1933:

"It will be appreciated if you will review the data presented herewith and express your views as to the necessity for or desirability of this project in the interests of navigation and marine commerce, presenting any information of unusual importance that may be in your possession and stating briefly the manner in which it would affect your individual interests, assuming that the construction of the canal would be handled by the War Department as a regular river and harbor project, approved by Congress, and operated (a) toll free after completion, and (b) on a toll basis, as a self-liquidating project."

It appears entirely probable that, knowing whatever benefits it might admit could be used against itself, should it wish to contest the toll rate established on the canal, every company so addressed would tend to minimize those benefits which may be translated into dollars and cents.

However, there are in the record, in addition to the letters from ship operators mentioned as being uninterested in or hostile to the project, certain other letters which are interested in and favorable to the project. I quote from a number of such, as follows:

From the Mystic Steamship Co., Boston, Mass., under date of May 22, 1933, signed by F. B. Craven, manager, marine department:

"We are inclined to believe in a general way that the proposition would be quite interesting to us and should appreciate an opportunity at a later date to more fully express our reactions. We assume at that time that you will be in a position to give us a more detailed picture of all characteristics of the canal and particulars relating thereto."

From the Sinclair Navigation Co., 45 Nassau Street, New York City, under date of May 15, 1933, signed by J. G. Johnson, vice president:

"Reviewing our company operations and allowing 36 hours for one transit of canal, the estimated time saved via canal as compared to present route would be approximately 3,000 hours per annum for all vessels. On present freight rates this would represent to our company a saving of about $74,000 per year. This is based on about 130 trips, equal to 260 transits."

"As to the necessity for or desirability of this project in the interest of navigation and marine commerce, the estimated savings, in our opinion, would not permit of the canal being operated on a toll basis as a self-liquidating project. If the canal were constructed by the War Department as a regular river and harbor project and operated toll free, there would be a saving to marine commerce."

From the Continental Steamship Co., P. O. box 1637, Baltimore, Md., under date of May 15, 1933, signed by I. C. Stocksdale, manager:

"At the present time this company has two tankers operating from Baltimore to Aransas Pass (Corpus Christi). It is estimated that such a canal would save on each passage 19 hours' time and $350 in operating cost if the canal were operated free. If on a toll basis, the tolls would have to be less than that amount to make the use of the canal attractive."

From the Hartwellson Steamship Co., 10 Post Office Square, Boston, Mass., under date of May 20, 1933, signed by Capt. E. Boranger:

"The following are only a few facts regarding the proposed trans-Florida canal:

"Distance saved from the Atlantic side of the trans-Florida canal to Galveston would be 347 miles each way. Distances from or to any other Gulf ports accordingly. Bound toward Galveston with a 10-knot ship, bucking the Gulf stream around Florida Keys would consume approximately 38 hours' more time than through the proposed canal. Returning from Galveston to the Atlantic side of the canal via Florida Keys would consume approximately 33 hours' more time than through the canal route."

"May I state that the trans-Florida canal route, besides being a great saving of time and expense to shipowners, would be an effective means of avoiding the destructive hurricanes raging around the Florida Keys from June to October each year, with their attending loss of life and property."

"Thanks and best of luck to the United States engineers and all concerned in this splendid piece of important waterway engineering."

From the Ford Motor Co., 3674 Schaefer Road, Dearborn, Mich., under date of May 15, 1933, signed by O. A. Johnson, marine department:

"We are not at the present time nor neither do we expect to in the near future operate any service which would utilize this proposal. However, we think the project a very worthy one and feel that it would effect a very substantial saving to steamship operations between the North Atlantic ports and the Gulf. There is no doubt but what it would effect a saving of approximately 2 days' transit time on the type of ships that we operate between New York and New Orleans or Houston. It is possible that at a later date we may reenter the Gulf service, in which case this canal would prove advantageous to us."

From the Gulf Refining Co., Charles R. Buerger, vice president, 17 Battery Place, New York City, under date of May 24, 1933, signed by James Kennedy, general manager:

"Based upon a 10-knot ship and the distances appearing on the outline map accompanying your letter, there would be a net saving of about 25 hours per trip, or about 50 hours per voyage, which is equivalent to a cash-outlay saving of about $208,550 per annum, and the total saving in time becomes approximately 546 days per annum.

"We believe, however, that you have overestimated the speed at which transit can be effected and that 5 miles per hour would constitute very good progress, having in mind delays due to locks, bridges, fog, and other unforeseen circumstances, and on this basis the saving would be about 28 hours per voyage as against the 50-hour estimate based on your forecast."

From the Pennsylvania Shipping Co., 260 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, Pa., under date of May 24, 1933, signed by J. H. Pelly:

"If the above-contemplated canal across Florida is built, its use would cause a saving of approximately 1 day each way on a round voyage of a steamer from Gulf loading ports to discharging ports north of Hatteras. Estimating the round trip to require approximately 16 days' steaming, the saving on a voyage in steaming time would be 2 days, or 12½ percent of the operating cost for a round trip.

"This would be quite an item, and if the canal were free of tolls no doubt a large number of vessels would use the canal."

From the Newtex Steamship Corporation, pier 23, North River, New York City, under date of May 23, 1933, signed by D. A. Moloney, president:

"In the coastwise trade, due to the keen competition and the low freight rates, it would be necessary to either have a free canal, or at the most a nominal charge per net ton, not to exceed, say, 5 cents per net ton for one transit of the canal. This can be readily seen, when I tell you that the current revenue on cargo carried in this coastwise trade does not exceed $5 per ton, for a voyage of approximately 2,000 miles; and standard commodities such as flour, rice, paper, etc., are carried 2,000 miles for an average of $3 to $3.50 per ton.

"It would, therefore, appear that it would be an encouragement to coastwise shipping if the canal were operated as a toll-free proposition."

From the Kellogg Steamship Corporation, 17 Battery Place, New York City, under date of May 20, 1933, signed by R. A. Murphy, treasurer:

"We are very much interested in the proposed trans-Florida ship canal outlined in your letter of May 9, 1933, and the enclosed map of one of the suggested locations.

"As we see it, this canal would make possible a saving for our vessels of about 1 day's steaming time in each direction between Atlantic and Gulf ports. Our vessels do not operate regularly in this trade, but have been making a substantial number of voyages a year, which would benefit from the proposed canal.

"In our opinion, the possible saving, the value of which varies with existing conditions, is not sufficient to warrant the imposition of tolls. We would, therefore, endorse the project if the canal be made toll free after completion."

That such testimony cannot safely be, and is not, used as a guide to the economic justification of such a project is clearly stated by the Chief of Engineers as follows: I quote from exhibit F-1a, which has been introduced into the record.

"You refer to my appearance before the subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce on January 17, in which certain questions were asked with respect to the replies received from shipping concerns to a questionnaire sent out by the special board of this Department in connection with their investigation, and asked if these letters were used to establish the economic justification of the project, and further as to the usual factors which are studied in determining economic justification. This Department has not stated that the replies to these questionnaires represented the economic justification for the canal project, nor are such letters generally used for the establishment of economic justification. The Special Board of Army Engineers made an extensive economic survey, and was aided in the preparation of its report by an independent survey undertaken by the Department of Commerce at the request of the Chief of Engineers. The determinations of the special board with respect to the economic benefits of the project were based in large part on these surveys. The letters to which you refer are some of the replies to questionnaires addressed by the special board to shipping concerns, so that it might be informed as to their opinions with respect to the effect of the project on the individual interests of the companies concerned. In determining the economic justification of a proposed river and harbor improvement, the investigating officers ascertain the definite savings in time and distance which will be made available to navigation without increased hazards as a result of the improvement in question. These savings in time and distance converted into monetary savings and such other incidental benefits as clearly accrue to water-borne commerce and the general public interest, such as a reduction in the hazards of navigation, form the basis for the determination of the economic justification of a project. The views of navigation and commercial interests as to the effect which the proposed improvement may have on their operations are an aid to the Board in weighing the public value of the savings and benefits as determined by the Board."

Likewise the statement of Prof. Emory Johnson, Special Commissioner for the Panama Canal. I quote from a letter from Professor Johnson to Senator FLETCHER, under date of February 8, 1935 [reading]:

"As to the method to be followed in deciding what use will be made of a proposed canal, the only way to do is to do what was done in estimating the probable traffic of the Panama Canal and what was done by those who measured the tonnage of shipping that would use a trans-Florida canal, i. e., to make up a record of actual vessel movements for a year over routes for which the proposed waterway would provide a shorter route, to calculate the saving that the vessels so recorded could have made by using the proposed canal, and then to credit to the tonnage of probable canal traffic the tonnage that would result from shifting to the canal route such vessel movements as could be made more safely and more economically via the canal. It may be safely assumed that companies owning vessels will have them operated by the most advantageous and economical route."

In addition to the above, there is the affirmative evidence of the use of the canal by shipping contained in the formal findings of the Corps of Engineers, the Public Works Administration, the Department of Commerce, and the Board of Review.

There remains the consideration as to the possible effect which the construction of a sea-level canal along the route selected might have upon the underground fresh-water supply of Florida. Questions involved in this consideration are highly technical and highly specific. It should be borne in mind that there is no record of any specific survey or investigation of this problem by any competent individual or group, except a group of experts which have been and are conducting this inquiry under the direction of the Chief of Engineers.

There has apparently arisen in the minds of many people an impression that the Florida State Geological Survey or the Federal Geological Survey has made special surveys of this phase of the project and has rendered reports upon the same.

The facts are that a careful and comprehensive survey has been conducted by competent experts under the direction of the Chief of Engineers, but by no others, and this group of experts has rendered an opinion, approved by the Chief of Engineers, to the effect that damage to the underground water supply which may be caused by the canal will be local and will be limited to the possible lowering of water in wells adjacent to the route of the canal; and that agriculture will be entirely unaffected.

The record appears to be as follows: The Special Board of Survey of the Corps of Engineers made a careful study of this question and concluded that the data and information gathered and studied by them was inconclusive; and, according to the statement of the Chief of Engineers, they adopted a lock type of canal as a precautionary measure.

The board of review continued the studies initiated by the special board of survey and reviewed all of the evidence, including both published and unpublished data gathered by itself, the Geological Survey, and others.

In its report of June 28, 1934, the board of review found—I quote:

"Any possible damage to agriculture beyond the limits of the right-of-way to be secured for the canal would be negligible, due to the fact that the water table is now from 30 to 70 feet below the ground along the route of the canal and for miles on either side of it. The damage to water supply would be small and would consist only in lowering levels in nearby wells. The possibility of salting the water supply at high level would be eliminated."

Under date of June 15, 1935, in a letter addressed to Mr. W. F. Coachman, Jr., the Florida State geologist—this is the report, I think, to which you refer—stated that if the ground-water table in central Florida were to be lowered to a profound extent by a sea-level canal, the consequences would very seriously affect the ground-water supply of that part of Florida. It will be noted that the State geologist did not say that the construction of a sea-level canal would lower the water table profoundly, but confined his opinion as to the results upon the underground water supply if the water table should be profoundly lowered. The record does not show that at any time the State geologist has expressed a formal opinion to the effect that a sea-level canal would necessarily profoundly lower the water table in central Florida.

Under date of June 25, 1935, the State geologist, in a letter to Mr. Coachman, restates his attitude in the following words. I quote:

"It was not my purpose to condemn a sea-level canal, provided the construction plans are adequate to maintain the adjacent ground-water level at approximately 40 feet above sea."

Under date of August 26, 1935, the personal assistant to the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Harry Slatery, in a letter to Hon. J. Hardin Peterson, stated that in the opinion of the Geological Survey:

"There appears to be no reasonable doubt that serious adverse effects would be produced upon the important underground water supplies of the Ocala limestone in a wide zone extending outward from the canal line by the construction of a sea-level canal along 13-B.

"The particular dangers herein discussed apply to a sea-level canal only and not to a lock canal so constructed as to avoid deep cuts in the Ocala limestone and thus to leave undisturbed the present water level in this important water-bearing formation."

Under date of February 13, 1936, Senator FLETCHER addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Interior to which the Secretary of the Interior replied under date of February 18, 1936. I quote both letters in full.

This is a letter dated February 13, 1936, from Senator FLETCHER to the Secretary of the Interior in reference to the letter of Mr. Slattery.

FEBRUARY 13, 1936.

HON. HAROLD L. ICKES,

Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In reference to the letter of Mr. Slattery dated August 26, 1935, addressed to Representative J. HARDIN PETERSON, in which he refers to an opinion of the Geological Survey to the effect that the construction of a sea-level canal across Florida might seriously damage the underground water supply of the State, the impression seems to obtain in the minds of some people that the Geological Survey made a special survey and investigation of this specific question and has issued a report giving its findings.

So far as I am able to determine from an examination of the records of the survey, no such specific survey was ever made by the Geological Survey, nor was any final or formal report ever made by it on this question, and the opinion referred to in Mr. Slattery's letter to Mr. PETERSON was preliminary and informal and based upon the general data on the geology and water supply of Florida theretofore collected and cannot be considered as a final or formal report of the survey.

I also understand that the Geological Survey has made available to the War Department its applicable data on this subject, both published and unpublished.

I shall appreciate it if you will advise me as to whether my understanding of this matter, as set forth above, is correct.

Very respectfully and sincerely yours,

DUNCAN U. FLETCHER.

The Secretary of the Interior replied to that letter under date of February 18, 1936, as follows:

"MY DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: I have your letter of February 13 in which in effect you request an interpretation of Mr. Slattery's letter of August 26, 1935, to Representative J. HARDIN PETERSON.

"The Geological Survey's information on the geology and underground waters of the peninsula of Florida is based on a series of studies made independently or in cooperation with the Florida State Geological Survey over a period of a quarter of a century. You have been supplied with copies of the later and more significant reports resulting from these studies.

"It is entirely true that the Survey has not specifically studied the particular question of the possible effects upon ground-water conditions of the trans-Florida canal. It is equally true, of course, that detailed studies of the geology of the State and of the relation of the ground waters to the geology throughout the State cannot fail to give a broad perspective on the whole problem, which affords a sound basis for at least certain general conclusions about the effects of any proposed alteration of natural conditions. The quotation of the Survey's opinion in Mr. Slattery's letter to Mr. PETERSON had this basis only.

"It is also entirely true that the Survey has made freely available to the War Department all information it has, published and unpublished, bearing upon the problem for the solution of which the War Department is responsible. This material included a manuscript on the Artesian Water in the Florida Peninsula, as yet unpublished. This manuscript constituted one of the reports in the series of six reports recently sent you. It is also clear from a reading of the preliminary report on the geological and ground-water conditions in Florida in their relation to the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal, issued by the War Department on December 18, 1935, that in the preparation of that report extensive use was made of this manuscript and of earlier reports by the United States Geological Survey and the Florida State Geological Survey.

"It would appear then that the understanding of the Geological Survey's relation to this problem, set forth in your letter of February 13, is substantially correct, except that it perhaps does not take full cognizance of the broad background of experience with ground-water problems and of knowledge of conditions in Florida that underlay the informal Survey opinion presented in Mr. Slattery's letter.

"Sincerely yours,

"HAROLD L. ICKES,
"Secretary of the Interior."

In September 1935, by direction of the Chief of Engineers, a special board of experts was constituted and appointed to continue the study of this question.

Under date of December 18, 1935, this board, after a most exhaustive reexamination of all existing data, and development of much new data, confirmed the findings of the board of review to the effect that the damage to the underground water supply resulting from the construction of a sea-level canal would be negligible.

Under date of December 28, 1935, in a letter transmitting the above report to Senator FLETCHER, the Acting Chief of Engineers states—I quote:

"The findings of the board at this time definitely indicate that no serious adverse effects on the underground water supply need be anticipated from the construction of a sea-level canal."

Under date of January 17, 1936, the Chief of Engineers stated before this committee his opinion that the rather generally expressed fears in central and southern Florida with regard to extensive damage to the water supply are wholly without foundation.

The above is a recitation of the record. Attention is again invited to the fact that no survey or special examination of this question has ever been undertaken by the Federal Geological Survey or by the Geological Survey of Florida or by any other public body except the Special Board of Survey of the Corps of Engineers; the board of review, comprising Army engineers, engineers of the Public Works Administration, and an eminent engineer from private life; and a special board of experts designated exclusively to examine into this matter by the Chief of Engineers. There is no formal report nor any formal expression of opinion in the record from any competent source that the construction of this canal at sea level will seriously affect the ground-water supply of any portion of the State of Florida.

In fact, there is only one expression, formal or informal, to this effect, and that is an avowedly informal opinion emanating from the Geological Survey and based upon general data and not upon specific examination of this question. On the other hand, all agencies of the Federal Government which have made specific studies of the matter are unanimous in their conclusions that construction of a canal at sea level would not be attended by any extensive damage to the water supply.

It may not be inappropriate to point out that the very history of this matter, as shown in the record recited here, indicates strikingly the inability of even expert geologists and engineers to form accurate conclusions from inadequate or general data on a highly technical and entirely specific problem such as that under discussion. The only competent opinion is that of duly qualified experts who were actually engaged in the examination and study of the specific physical situation involved. It would appear significant that all such competent opinion is unanimous in concluding that the construction of the canal at sea level cannot seriously adversely affect the underground water supply.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., March 17, 1936.

HON. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,

Senate Office Building:

Re Senator VANDENBERG's assertion yesterday no scintilla evidence economic justification, would advise P. W. A. special engineering board reported project constitutes public necessity, real social value, affording much employment, many classes labor; design accords with sound engineering practice and project economically sound. This board reported potential revenues equal 100 percent construction costs for 30-foot depth; also reported many intangible benefits to shipping not susceptible evaluation or collection to apply against operating costs, fixed charges, and debt retirement. Special economic survey made by Federal Department of Commerce reported 9,573 potential ship transits 1931, with total benefits shipping exceeding $6,137,000, and additional benefits barge traffic exceeding $1,190,000. Chief of Engineers, United States Army, has been quoted that economic benefits fully justify cost $160,000,000. Presidential board review reported project physically and economically sound. With aid Government Shipping Board and Department Commerce, my firm made complete, unbiased survey commerce 1929, and found direct savings in vessel-operating costs exceeding $5,615,000, with additional potential savings in fixed charges and collateral benefits exceeding $6,000,000. Our report furnished Federal Engineer Department in 1931. Tampa, Orlando, Fort Pierce, and other Florida cities have previously endorsed project, provided route would run through their back yards. Certain shipping companies who have not definitely endorsed project and some who have opposed it route their ships through Kiel Canal, cutting Jutland Peninsula between Baltic and North Seas, in Europe, although Kiel Canal less capacious than proposed Florida Canal. Colonel Shutts' opinion, quoted by Senator VANDENBERG, south Florida may become another great American desert, completely refuted by special board of engineers and geologists employed by Government, and also by letters Florida State geologist. Ample economic justification exists for this project as regular river-harbor project under formulas heretofore used in justifying such projects.

GILBERT A. YOUNGBERG.

DEPORTATION OF ALIENS

During the delivery of Mr. FLETCHER's speech,

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I do not desire to interfere with the subject now engaging the attention of the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], but at the same time I should like to take this opportunity to present a resolution in which I am greatly interested, and if the Senator will be good enough to bear with me for a few minutes, I will present the resolution.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the Senator merely desire to submit the resolution?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should like to have the opportunity of reading the resolution while a number of the Members of the Senate are present, because I want them to hear it. The resolution (S. Res. 258) which I propose is as follows:

Whereas there are in excess of 2,600 aliens in the United States who are known to and allowed by the Department of Labor to remain in the United States, although subject to deportation; and

Whereas the Department of Labor is interested in and desires the enactment of legislation setting up an agency, composed of representatives of the Departments of Labor, State, and Justice, with authority to permit such aliens to remain in the United States; and

Whereas request has been made of the officials of the Department of Labor for the names of and available information relating to such deportable aliens; and

Whereas the said officials have refused to furnish such information; and

Whereas it is fitting, proper, and necessary that such information be furnished to the Members of the United States Senate in order that such legislation may be considered properly: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor is requested to transmit to the Senate, as soon as practicable, a list containing the names of and available information relating to such aliens subject to deportation and permitted to remain in the United States.

Mr. President, I present this resolution because there is pending now before the Committee on Immigration of the Senate a bill referred to as the Kerr-Coolidge bill, which deals with the question of immigration and the deportation of aliens. A few days ago it was developed in testimony before the committee that there are now in the United States, under the direct supervision, so to speak, of the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, Department of Labor, 2,862 aliens; and at that time the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization very frankly admitted that at least a great majority of the aliens thus in this country, a large portion of whom are being supported by the taxpayers of this country, had entered the country illegally. For more than 2 years and 8 months the Department of Labor, without any authority whatsoever, has kept these aliens in this country, although they should have been deported many months ago, and the number has grown from something over a thousand a year ago to 2,862 at present.

I know that when this bill comes to the floor of the Senate for discussion by the Members of this body a bone of contention, and a very serious one, will be the question what to do with the 2,862 aliens. The point I make, by way of this resolution, is that the Members of the United States Senate will at that time be entitled to know the names and something about those 2,862 aliens who are subject to be deported now under the laws of our country. I ask that the Secretary of Labor be called upon to provide the Members of this body with a description of them.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. I have understood that among the number of persons referred to by the Senator the Department of Labor has cited several meritorious cases in which, they say, possible hardship would justify the Department in not deporting the aliens, and I had understood that that information had been submitted to the committee of the House. Is that true or not?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I may state to the Senator, in answer to his question, that the Department has not submitted the original files of those cases to the committee of the House, but has merely submitted a brief outline of each case. I had a partial investigation made very hurriedly, and I was informed that in a great many of the cases the names of the individuals had not been given.

I wish to say to the Senator further, in answer to his inquiry in reference to the employment of the words "hardship cases", that there are many of them about which I have information and as to which I cannot possibly agree with those who submitted a report to the effect that they are hardship cases, or that they ought to be dealt with as hardship cases.

I merely desire to have the information presented to the Members of this body, in order that they may at least give some consideration to some of the cases, if not to all of them. I know, of course, that that would be impossible, in view of the great amount of work we have to do.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, may I make a further inquiry of the Senator?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if this discussion is to continue, I shall have to demand the floor. How long will the discussion take? I had the floor.

Mr. WALSH. I had supposed the Senator from North Carolina had the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I yielded to enable the Senator to present a resolution.

Mr. WALSH. This is a very important subject, and I should like to interrogate the Senator from North Carolina further, if possible.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall object to the consideration of the resolution at this time, but shall not object to its going to the Committee on Immigration. I do not think it is a proper resolution to be discussed at this time by the Senate. If the Senator will move to have it referred to the Committee on Immigration, I promise, although the chairman of the committee is not in the Chamber at the present time, that the committee will meet at any time convenient to the Senator.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I shall be glad to answer any inquiry the Senator from Massachusetts may have to make.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator from Florida feels that the matter is trespassing unduly upon his time, I will not now interrupt.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Florida for his courtesy in permitting me to take the floor for the purpose of presenting my resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution (S. Res. 258) submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] will be referred to the Committee on Immigration.

After the conclusion of Mr. FLETCHER's speech,

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. GLASS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9863) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, and agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12.

CARTER GLASS,
JAMES F. BYRNES,
FREDERICK HALE,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

C. A. WOODRUM,
JED JOHNSON,
EDWARD C. MORAN, Jr.,
JAMES M. FITZPATRICK,
R. B. WIGGLESWORTH,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GLASS. I move that the Senate agree to the conference report.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia permit an inquiry?

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. What were the matters in controversy?

Mr. GLASS. There were no matters in controversy. The important matters were the appropriation of something over a billion dollars to pay the bonus and one of $440,000,000 to pay the farmers for soil conservation.

Mr. KING. Of course, the Senate conferees disagreed to those amendments?

Mr. GLASS. No; the Senate adopted the amendments, and therefore the Senate conferees agreed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BENSON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENTS BETWEEN THE SHORE AND BULKHEAD LINES

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3071) providing for the placing of improvements on the areas between the shore and bulkhead lines in rivers and harbors.

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. COPELAND, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. McNARY conferees on the part of the Senate.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10919) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GLASS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. GLASS, Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. STEIWER, and Mr. NORBECK conferees on the part of the Senate.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11035) making appropriations for the military and non-military activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask if there are other Senators who wish to discuss the amendment? If not, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Keyes	Pittman
Austin	Copeland	King	Pope
Bachman	Costigan	La Follette	Radcliffe
Bailey	Couzens	Lewis	Reynolds
Barkley	Davis	Logan	Robinson
Benson	Donahey	Loneragan	Russell
Bilbo	Duffy	McAdoo	Schwellenbach
Black	Fletcher	McGill	Sheppard
Bone	Frazier	McKellar	Shipstead
Borah	George	McNary	Smith
Brown	Gerry	Maloney	Steiwer
Bulkeley	Gibson	Metcalf	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Glass	Minton	Townsend
Burke	Guffey	Moore	Vandenberg
Byrd	Hale	Murphy	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Harrison	Murray	Wagner
Capper	Hatch	Neely	Walsh
Caraway	Hayden	Norbeck	Wheeler
Carey	Holt	Norris	White
Clark	Johnson	Overton

Mr. LEWIS. I reannounce the absence of certain Senators and the causes therefor as given on a previous roll call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. COPELAND. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to make but a brief observation before the vote is taken. There are three minor projects attached to the amendment which have not been discussed and which are of relatively minor concern. There is an ample way for those three lesser projects to be cared for in the course of the session. On the one hand, they could be cared for, as a matter of fact, by a continuing Executive order and could be completed out of emergency funds. On the other hand, they could be cared for by the method recommended in the House committee report which passed specifically upon them.

The House committee report recognized the fact that the Sardis Reservoir and the Bluestone Reservoir have been favorably recommended by the Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers, but the House committee insisted, and I am quoting now from their report, that—

If for no other reason, the committee feels that the total ultimate cost involved is too great for it to recommend an approprition for further prosecution of work upon such projects until they have run the usual gantlet of scrutiny by the Corps of Engineers, the legislative committees having jurisdiction of such matters, and the legislative bodies themselves.

The House committee then proceeded to say:

The committee's action does not mean in any sense that these five unauthorized projects are to be abandoned. Two of them, as has been previously stated, already have been favorably recommended by the Chief of Engineers. It is entirely possible that all will be. There would seem to be ample time for the appropriate legislative committees to study the projects in order that the House may at least have the views of such committees before being called upon for the first time to appropriate money for carrying them forward, which, of course, could be done later in the session in a deficiency measure.

I am simply pointing out the status of the minor projects, and I am urging that their status should in no sense affect the major decision which the Senate now must make.

Referring finally to the major decision, I feel compelled to present one or two very brief exhibits, and then I am done.

Some question was raised yesterday respecting the editorial attitude of the Miami Daily News, which is owned by ex-Governor Cox, of Ohio. It was suggested that, if the Miami Daily News had taken a position upon the proposition, its position would have been announced by editorial comment. I send to the desk a brief excerpt from an editorial of the Miami Daily News of March 11, 1935, which I ask to have read by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

[From the Miami Daily News of Mar. 11, 1935]

There are reports, and more reports, on this huge enterprise, not two of which agree, and there remain many serious questions to be answered. The findings of Dr. Henry S. Sharp, geologist of Columbia University, appearing in the News' columns today, renew the challenge to Congress to answer these questions before authorizing construction or appropriating another dollar for the canal. Dr. Sharp asserts that it will jeopardize Florida's water supply over a wide area. "a matter of considerable economic importance." It is the consensus of all geologists that there will be some damage, he reports, "while a considerable number believe that it will prove to be a textbook example of large-scale destruction of water resources by artificial interference with underground flow." Such a statement from a scientist who has no sectional or partisan interest in the matter, renewing the warning given earlier by Florida's State geologist, must be definitely proved false or the canal project must be abandoned. Promoters have yet to produce sufficient evidence to prove that the canal would pay for itself if built. The majority of Gulf-Atlantic shipping lines seem uninterested in it. But this Nation could, if necessary, withstand the loss of $150,000,000 in the construction of the waterway. It would be extreme folly indeed at a time when economy is sorely needed. But $150,000,000 would be a relatively small amount compared to the damage if Florida's water resources were ruined, with all the agriculture dependent upon them. That is a disaster neither Florida nor the Nation can risk. So long as this threat remains the canal must not be built.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I have just been handed a telegram from Mr. W. Keith Phillips, president of the Miami Chamber of Commerce. I read only the latter portion of the telegram, because the first portion deals with personal matters.

The president of the Miami Chamber of Commerce states the following:

The people most affected by this canal are thousands of small farmers, truck gardeners, and citrus growers scattered over the southern two-thirds of this State, who are unorganized and unable to make a proper defense of their rights. We beg of you to stand by us in this hour of need, and, if possible, defeat this dangerous project. There is no demand for this canal from the shipping interests; and personal contact with numerous shipping men convinces me that the canal will not be used, and that negotiating it during the winter will be very difficult on account of fogs and in the fall of the year on account of high cross winds.

Just one other telegram, from Mr. E. C. Rolph, who I understand is president of the First National Bank of Miami, and I understand is one of the leading businessmen of the South. His message to me this morning is as follows:

I think I speak the prevailing sentiment of this entire south Florida area when I say that, in our judgment, the cross-State canal, if completed, will be a calamity. Many reasons have been advanced why it should not be perpetrated, all of which you know; but it should be suggested to the Senate that there are more people living and more active business south of the proposed canal than north of it, and that the southern portion is almost unanimously opposed to it. If this project were left for decision to the people of Florida, I think it would be overwhelmingly defeated.

Mr. President, everything that has been said respecting the merits of the matter suffices, so far as I am concerned, to leave the decision to the conscience of the Senate. I simply remind the Senate, in conclusion, that it is now being asked to approve an enormous appropriation which has been rejected by P. W. A., which has been recommended against by the Department of the Interior, which has been recommended against in the reports of the Department of Commerce, which has been rejected by the House Appropriations Committee, which has been rejected by the House itself, which has had an adverse report by the Senate Appropriations Committee; and now the final decision impends.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not care to prolong the discussion, but I think it is fair for me to say, in response to what has been suggested by the Senator from Michigan, that any number of telegrams may be furnished in support of this project. Every waterway association in the country—the Mississippi Valley Association, the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, the National Rivers and Harbors Congress—all favor this project and have passed resolutions to that effect. I shall not go into details about that; but, with reference to the water supply, I simply wish to call the attention of the Senate to Senate Document 147, which deals with the subject. It is a report made recently by a board of experts, dated December 18, 1935. Clarence E. Boesch, Sidney Paige, Frank C. Carey, E. B. Burwell, and Malcolm Pirnie were the members of a board of experts on water questions, geology, and so forth, set up by Colonel Somervell, of the Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers, and instructed to make special examination into this question of the water supply and the effect of the construction of the canal upon it.

That report is a Senate document, and I ask Senators to read it. It is mentioned by General Markham in his testimony, in which he said, regarding it:

The Board unanimously regards the effects of the sea-level canal as being, using a term, relatively inconsequential.

Senator VANDENBERG. You think that the rather generally expressed fears in general and southern Florida are without foundation?

General MARKHAM. I think they are wholly without foundation.

I will not prolong the discussion. I submit that for the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. On that amendment the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRAZIER (when Mr. NYE's name was called). On this question my colleague [Mr. NYE], who is unavoidably absent, has a pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. If the Senator from Florida were present, I understand he would vote "yea", and if my colleague were present he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BARKLEY. On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mrs. LONG], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BILBO. I have a general pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I transfer my pair to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HAYDEN. My colleague the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. HATCH. My colleague the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is necessarily detained from the Senate and out of the city. If present and voting, he would vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is detained from the Senate on account of illness, and that the Senator from Washington [Mr.

BONE], the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are detained in important committee meetings.

I also announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Louisiana [Mrs. LONG], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are unavoidably detained.

I further announce that the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] has a pair on this question with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE]. If present and voting, the Senator from California would vote "yea", and the Senator from Massachusetts would vote "nay."

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is paired on this question with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]. If present and voting, the Senator from Wyoming would vote "yea", and the Senator from Pennsylvania would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the necessary absence of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR]. He has a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—34

So Mr. FLETCHER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, it had been my intention to offer another amendment, but, after consultation with other Senators interested, it is understood, I believe, that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] has framed the same amendment which I had intended to offer, and I yield at this time to the Senator from West Virginia to offer the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Are not committee amendments given precedence over other amendments?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Committee amendments are first to be considered.

Mr. CONNALLY. What has happened to the Senate committee amendment on page 69? That has not been acted upon, and I think it ought to be acted upon before we consider other amendments.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate agree to the amendment referred to by the Senator from Texas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further amendments to be offered to the committee amendment on page 69, the question is on agreeing to the amendment, which the clerk will state.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 69, line 23, under the heading "Rivers and harbors", it is proposed to strike out "$138,677,899" and to insert in lieu thereof "$188,677,899", so as to read:

CORPS OF ENGINEERS
RIVERS AND HARBORS

To be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers:

For the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works, and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore authorized as may be most desirable in the interests of commerce and navigation; for survey of northern and northwestern lakes and other boundary and connecting waters as heretofore authorized, including the preparation, correction, printing, and issuing of charts and bulletins and the investigation of lake levels; for prevention of obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City; for expenses of the California Débris Commission in carrying on the work authorized by the act approved March 1, 1893 (U. S. C., title 33, sec. 661); for removing sunken vessels or craft obstructing or endangering navigation, as authorized by law; for operating and maintaining, keeping in repair, and continuing in use without interruption any lock, canal (except the Panama Canal), canalized river, or other public works for the use and benefit of navigation belonging to the United States; for payment annually of tuition fees of not to exceed 35 student officers of the Corps of Engineers at civil technical institutions under the provisions of section 127a of the National Defense Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 10, sec. 535); for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors; and for printing, including illustrations, as may be authorized by the Committee on Printing of the House of Representatives, either during a recess or session of Congress, of surveys under House Document No. 308, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, and section 10 of the Flood Control Act, approved May 15, 1928 (U. S. C., title 33, sec. 702j), and such surveys as may be printed during a recess of Congress shall be printed, with illustrations, as documents of the next succeeding session of Congress, and for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and motor boats, for official use, not to exceed $146,050: Provided, That no funds shall be expended for any preliminary examination, survey, project, or estimate not authorized by law, $188,677,899.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] desired to present an amendment, and the Senator from New Mexico yielded to the Senator from West Virginia so that he might offer the amendment.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, in behalf of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], and myself, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 70, after line 21, it is proposed to insert the following:

For continuing work on the following projects which are being undertaken with funds allotted from the appropriations made by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935: Sardis Reservoir on the Little Tallahatchie River, Miss., $2,500,000; Conchas Reservoir on the South Canadian River, N. Mex., $3,500,000; Bluestone Reservoir on the New River, W. Va., $2,000,000; in all, $8,000,000.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, these items were all included in the estimate of the Director of the Budget. I wish to say just a word in behalf of the West Virginia project. Those who are more intimately acquainted with the other projects will probably speak for them later on.

Last year the Chief of Engineers recommended to Congress the construction of the Bluestone Reservoir in what is known as House Document 308, Sixty-ninth Congress. His recommendation was in response to legislation in the Rivers and Harbors Acts of 1927 and 1928, calling upon the Chief of Engineers to make a survey of the Mississippi River and its tributaries for the purpose of locating, reporting to Congress, and recommending the construction of flood-control dams on the Mississippi and its tributaries.

The Bluestone Reservoir was vigorously recommended by the Chief of Engineers as the first dam to be constructed. It is located on the New River, which is the most important tributary of the Great Kanawha River, which in turn is one of the largest tributaries of the Mississippi. The New River has a tremendous rainfall at its headwaters, approximately 70 inches a year. It is subject to destructive floods, which on the average do damage of over $350,000 a year.

The project was endorsed not only by the Chief of Engineers but also by the Board of Engineers of the Mississippi River. It will be a combination flood-control, navigation, and power project. Its value in improving navigation will be sufficient to justify it, but in addition it will save a tremendous annual loss in damage by flood and will create a sufficient amount of power to make it self-liquidating.

The President by Executive order commanded the Chief of Engineers to proceed with the construction at once, and appropriated from public-works funds $1,000,000 for this purpose. The Army engineers have about 400 men employed in drilling cores, locating the dam site, and doing the engineering work preparatory to the construction of the reservoir. Three C. C. C. camps are occupied in clearing the floor of the reservoir, and the Government has been purchasing land for this purpose.

The construction of this reservoir can be differentiated from other projects rejected by the House, on the following grounds: (a) That this is a carrying out of river and harbor legislation dating back to 1927 and 1928; (b) that it has the strongest possible recommendation from the Chief of Engineers and the Board of Engineers of the Mississippi River; (c) that it is a part of a great program long planned and recommended for the purpose of controlling the flood waters of the Mississippi and its tributaries.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I inquire of the Chair the parliamentary status of the project referred to by the Senator from West Virginia. Does it come within the general authorization given by Congress to the President? Has it received the sanction of the Bureau of the Budget? Has it received the affirmation of a standing committee of the Senate? What is its relationship to the parliamentary situation?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The parliamentary situation with reference to the proposed amendment is the same as it was with reference to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida. These projects have been estimated for, and, according to the vote of the Senate, they are in order.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I say, in further answer to the Senator from Oregon, that all these projects have been passed on by the Chief of Engineers? The Budget Bureau has made its recommendation for the items, and I very much hope that the Senator having the bill in charge and the distinguished Senators who have opposed some of the other projects will permit this amendment to be agreed to. The arguments which applied against the other amendment cannot apply against this. May I ask the Senator from Michigan whether he does not think these items ought to be adopted?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, it seems to me that these items differ from the item covered by the amendment submitted by the Senator from Florida in just two respects. The first respect is that they do not involve any such enormous sums of money; but that is a matter of degree, and does affect the principle.

The second difference is that apparently two of the projects have conclusive, affirmative reports from the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors. To that extent the projects differ from the one which the Senate has just rejected. But since the Senator has asked me for my opinion, I give it to him. The projects included in the pending amendment do not qualify under the traditional practice of the Congress in dealing with projects of this character. They were rejected by the House committee and by the House itself under precisely the same rule that the item for the Florida canal was rejected. It seems to me that the orderly process for the Senator and his colleagues to pursue would be to obtain an authorization for the projects by Congress in the regular traditional fashion, and subsequently to secure the necessary appropriations in the deficiency bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senator that the committee of which he is a member included in the Overton bill the Mississippi item in which I am interested.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But the Overton bill has not been passed by the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. It has not, but it has been favorably reported by the committee and is now on the calendar.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It has not been passed, and there would be some controversy about it on the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. I was simply hoping that we might save time in the discussion.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In saving time we might waste some money.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I desire to detain the Senate for a very brief time to explain the situation in connection with the project which is located in my State. It is referred to in the report which was made and in the discussions which have been had upon it as the Conchas Dam. The Conchas Dam project differs in degree and extent and I think in other ways from the Florida canal project which has been discussed by the Senate for the past 2 days.

While a study of this project has been made by different departments of the Government, I am quite sure I am correct when I say it has not been rejected by any department.

I have before me at this time a long report written by the Chief of Engineers, General Markham, on the Arkansas River and its tributaries. The Conchas Dam is located on the Canadian River in New Mexico. The Canadian River is a tributary of the Arkansas River. Flood waters annually go down the Canadian River into the Arkansas and on into the Mississippi. This project is designed primarily as a flood-control project. It is desired by all officials, I think, who have been interested in the study of the problems of the Mississippi River flood control and also the flood control of the Arkansas River.

In his statement written to the Secretary of War on July 26 last year, General Markham, reporting on the Arkansas River and its tributaries, said:

I submit for transmission to Congress my report with accompanying papers and illustrations on Arkansas River and tributaries made under the provisions of (a) the act of Congress approved May 31, 1924, which call for preliminary examinations of the following streams with a view to the control of their floods in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of the act approved March 1, 1917: Canadian River, N. Mex., Tex., and Okla.—

And other rivers named.

2. Description: The Arkansas River has its sources in the Rocky Mountains in central Colorado and flows 1,450 miles generally southeasterly through Colorado, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas to the Mississippi River. From the source to Pueblo, Colo., 171 miles, it is a typical mountain stream. At Pueblo it enters the Great Plains and flows over a sandy bed with low banks to Hutchinson, Kans., a distance of 460 miles, with an average slope of nearly 7 feet to the mile. The flow in this section is erratic. While destructive floods occur, portions of the stream bed run dry for considerable periods. Large areas adjacent to this section are under irrigation. * * *

3. The total drainage area of the Arkansas is 160,500 square miles. * * * The largest tributary, the Canadian River, drains 47,500 square miles.

Much other data is assembled in this report, and I desire to ask that it be printed in full in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, July 26, 1935.

7249 (Arkansas River).

Subject: Report on Arkansas River and tributaries.

To: The Secretary of War.

1. I submit for transmission to Congress my report, with accompanying papers and illustrations, on Arkansas River and tributaries, made under the provisions of (a), the act of Congress approved May 31, 1924, which called for preliminary examinations of the following streams with a view to the control of their floods in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of the act approved March 1, 1917: Canadian River, N. Mex., Tex., and Okla.; North Fork Canadian, Tex. and Okla.; Deep Fork, Verdigris, and Little River, Okla.; Cimarron River, N. Mex. and Okla.; Arkansas River in Kansas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas; (b) section 4 of the River and Harbor Act of January 21, 1927, which authorized a preliminary examination and survey of the river; (c) House Document No. 308, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, which was enacted into law, with modifications, in section 1 of the River and Harbor Act of January 21, 1927; and (d) section 10 of the Flood Control Act of May 15, 1928, which calls for preparation of projects for flood control on all tributary streams of the Mississippi River system subject to destructive floods.

2. Description: The Arkansas River has its sources in the Rocky Mountains in central Colorado and flows 1,450 miles generally southeasterly through Colorado, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas to the Mississippi River. From the source to Pueblo, Colo., 171 miles, it is a typical mountain stream. At Pueblo it enters the Great Plains and flows over a sandy bed with low banks to Hutchinson, Kans., a distance of 460 miles, with an average slope of nearly 7 feet to the mile. The flow in this section is erratic. While destructive floods occur, portions of the stream bed run dry for considerable periods. Large areas adjacent to this section are under irrigation. From Hutchinson to Little Rock, Ark., a distance of 641 miles, the river flows through the rolling prairies of Kansas and Oklahoma and the rugged section of western Arkansas. The average slope through this section is about 2 feet to the mile. Below Little Rock the valley is broad and merges into that of the Mississippi River. The river length is 178 miles and the average slope 0.6 foot per mile.

3. The total drainage area of the Arkansas is 160,500 square miles, which is 12.8 percent of the entire Mississippi River watershed. The largest tributary, the Canadian River, drains 47,500 square miles. Other large tributaries are the Cimarron, the Grand, the Verdigris, and Salt Fork. The average annual rainfall is about 12 inches in the western part of the basin, about 23 inches in the central part, and 50 inches in the eastern part. The channel capacity of the main stream and also of the tributaries is generally insufficient to carry the storm run-off. Flood flows in the arid region are usually sharp crested and soon lost in river channel storage and absorption, so that the least flow of the main river is in the vicinity of Hutchinson. The run-off at Little Rock fluctuates from 1,000 to 830,000 second-feet and averages about 41,000 second-feet.

4. The population of the basin is about 3,700,000. The largest cities are Oklahoma City, Okla., 185,400; Tulsa, Okla., 141,300; Wichita, Kans., 111,100; Little Rock, Ark., 81,700; Pueblo, Colo., 50,100; Amarillo, Tex., 43,100; Joplin, Mo., 33,500; Muskogee, Okla., 32,000; and Fort Smith, Ark., 31,400. Agriculture is the chief industry. The basin has valuable mineral resources, including petroleum and natural gas. Transportation is provided by nine railroad systems and numerous improved highways and secondary roads cover the watershed.

5. In general, improvement for navigation is advocated only on the main river below Tulsa; practical power sites are found only in eastern Oklahoma; destructive floods occur in practically all the valleys except those in the mountain section, the damage depending on the extent of development, and irrigation is needed only west of the ninety-ninth meridian.

6. Navigation: The bed and banks of the Arkansas River are generally unstable, and at low water the river channel is shifting and tortuous and obstructed by sand and gravel bars, snags, and wrack heaps. The controlling depth at low water ranges from 2 feet in the lower reaches to 6 inches or less in the upper reaches. The currents in flood are exceptionally swift. The annual fluctuations of flow are not sufficiently regular to afford dependable seasonal navigation. Before the construction of railroads through the basin, steamboats operated to Fort Gibson at the mouth of Grand (Neosho) River in eastern Oklahoma, 475 miles above the mouth, and some sporadic attempts were made to operate steamboats above that point. River traffic reached its maximum in 1871 and 1872, and subsequently fell off as railroad service was extended through the region. The Supreme Court, in a decision rendered in 1922, has held the river is not a navigable stream above the mouth of Grand River.

7. Considerable sums have been appropriated by Congress and expended in an effort to improve the river for navigation by dredging and snagging and revetments to hold caving banks. In 1910 the construction and operation of two dredges was authorized by Congress to determine the practicability of maintaining a low-water channel 3½ feet deep to Ozark in western Arkansas. It was found, however, that the dredged channels were obliterated after each freshet and operations were discontinued in 1916. Present operations are limited to snagging the portion of the river used by navigation and the maintenance of revetments at Little Rock and Pine Bluff. The total expenditures to June 30, 1933, have been $4,253,692.84. Commerce is now limited to local movements of sand and gravel and a small amount of logs. During the past 10 years it has ranged from a maximum of 577,000 tons in 1931 to a minimum of 57,000 tons in 1932.

8. The navigation improvement now strongly advocated by local interests is a 9-foot channel to Tulsa, Okla., or the vicinity. The district engineer finds that because of the slope and unstable bed of the stream, the river flow, even if fully conserved by storage reservoirs, is inadequate to provide a dependable 9-foot channel without locks and dams. He presents a comprehensive plan for improvement to provide a 9-foot channel to the vicinity of Tulsa by the construction of locks and dams. The waterway would leave the Mississippi at the mouth of White River, some miles upstream from the mouth of the Arkansas, and would enter the Arkansas through a cross connection in the lowlands at the mouth of the two rivers. It would follow the Arkansas to the confluence of the Verdigris River, just above the mouth of the Grand, and thence up the Verdigris to Catoosa, which is about 15 miles from Tulsa, but at nearly 100 feet lower elevation. The waterway would be 537 miles in length and have 40 locks and dams, each with a lift of about 11 feet. The dams in the Arkansas would be movable dams of the type used on the Ohio, with locks having chambers of standard Ohio River dimensions, 110 feet in width and 600 feet in length. The four dams required on the Verdigris would be fixed dams, with lock chambers 62 feet in width and 480 feet in length, the decreased dimensions being made necessary by the restricted width of the stream. A storage reservoir would be necessary to assure the requisite water for lockage. Dredging would be necessary to provide and maintain a suitable channel. To afford stability to the improved channel extensive bank protection works are considered necessary. The total estimated cost is in round numbers, $204,000,000. Interest during construction would be in addition a little more than $20,000,000. The estimated annual charges would be $18,712,000. If the improvement were extended up the main river to Tulsa instead of up the Verdigris to Catoosa, 14 more locks and dams would be required, and the estimated cost would be increased to nearly $270,000,000. If, on the other hand, the size of all locks were reduced to the dimensions proposed for those in the Verdigris River, the estimated cost of the channel to Catoosa would be reduced to $192,000,000, exclusive of interest during construction.

9. The district engineer made a detailed study of the prospective tonnage and revenue and savings resulting therefrom. The tributary area which would be benefited by rail-water or rail-water rail rates on freight routed over the waterway as determined by him in accordance with the established rulings of the Interstate Commerce Commission includes a large part of Arkansas, all of Oklahoma, nearly one-half of Kansas, the southeastern portion of Colorado, the eastern half of New Mexico, and the Texas Panhandle. He finds that about 7,460,000 tons, or about 10 percent of the total 1929 rail tonnage, could have moved on the river if a 9-foot channel were available, with a saving in transportation costs of about $10,220,240, based on an estimated average water rate of 4.7 mills per ton-mile. Since the benefits fall far short of the annual charges of the improvement, he concludes that such improvement is not justified.

10. At the request of local interests further investigation was made to determine the cost of a 6-foot channel to Tulsa. It was found that it might be possible to provide such a channel by regulating works and open-channel improvements as far up as the mouth of Grand River, provided that a large increase in the low-water flow were effected by water conservation by storage reservoirs. Above the mouth of the Grand, the construction of locks and dams would be necessary. The estimated cost of providing a 6-foot channel to Catoosa by this plan is found to be in excess of $126,000,000, and to Tulsa $185,000,000. The annual carrying charges are $15,600,000 and $20,900,000 respectively. The cost of providing a more assured 6-foot channel by a complete installation of locks and dams is, in round numbers, $187,000,000 to Catoosa, and $247,000,000 to Tulsa, with annual carrying charges of $17,900,000 and $23,300,000 respectively. It is clear that the relatively small reduction in cost under either plan does not warrant the consideration of a 6-foot channel, and at a hearing before the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors the representatives of local interests expressed the view that such a channel should not be considered.

11. Power: Power is now developed at 25 water-power plants in the Arkansas Basin, with a total installed capacity of 7,000 horsepower. None of these is on the main stem, and 22 are on the Grand River. The limited development has been due to the prior rights of irrigation to the use of water in the western portion, the irregular stream flow which requires large reservoirs for regulation, and the cheap steam power resulting from the abundance and proximity of coal, oil, and gas. The district engineer investigated a number of sites for possible developments both on the main stream and on the tributaries, and presents full information upon them in his report. The three most favorable sites were found on the Grand River, where an aggregate installation of 186,500 kilowatts could be made at an estimated cost of \$28,000,000 in round numbers. The cost of producing power at these installations is estimated at $5\frac{1}{2}$ mills per kilowatt-hour. The plans include a storage reservoir with a capacity of nearly a million acre-feet at the upstream site. The reservoir system could be operated for flood control although this method of operation would decrease the efficiency of the hydroelectric development. However, in the event a comprehensive flood-control plan of the Arkansas River is undertaken under Federal auspices, this method of operation would entitle the proposed development to some consideration on this basis. The operation of the reservoir for power production would increase the navigable depths in the lower Arkansas by from 6 to 9 inches, but such an increase would still afford depths far short of those required to afford an artery of commerce. The State of Oklahoma has enacted legislation creating a Grand River Authority for the development of hydroelectric power on the Grand River. Some 9 other sites were found on the tributaries and the main stream, suitable for installations ranging from 4,000 to 20,000 kilowatts each, but the cost of production in each case was found to be well in excess of 1 cent a kilowatt-hour. A large-scale development with an installation of 280,000 kilowatts could be made on the main river just above Little Rock, at an estimated cost of \$120,000,000; but the cost of power would be nearly 2 cents per kilowatt-hour. The district engineer is of the opinion that none of the projects investigated would be commercially sound at the present time.

12. Irrigation: About 750,000 acres of land were under irrigation in the basin west of the ninety-ninth meridian in 1929. The greater part of this area lies along the main river and its tributaries in Colorado and Kansas above Garden City, Kans., which is 205 miles above Hutchinson. The area in Colorado amounted to 557,000 acres. The water is diverted at 23 diversion dams in the main river, and flood and winter flows conserved in some 64 tributary and off-channel reservoirs. More land is under irrigation than can be reliably served with the available water supply, and conflicting claims to water rights are still under litigation.

13. State agencies in Colorado, New Mexico, and Oklahoma have investigated numerous reservoir sites for the further conservation of water for irrigation and flood control. The district engineer has supplemented these investigations. The best available site on the main river is at Caddo, just below the mouth of the Purgatoire, and 122 miles above Garden City. For purposes of irrigation only the most advisable project is the construction of an earth-fill dam, about 100 feet in height, with a concrete spillway, and with a storage capacity of 400,000 acre-feet at an estimated cost of $8,250,000. The estimated supplemental water supply made available is 170,000 acre-feet, and better use could be made of an additional 135,000 acre-feet of water covered by prior rights. The district engineer considers that the economic justification for the work depends upon the payments that the holders of prior rights would consent to make for the benefits. By increasing the height of the Caddo Dam to 120 feet to afford a reservoir of 680,000 acre-feet capacity, at a total cost of $10,000,000, flood-control benefits estimated at $2,666,400 could be secured in addition to the benefits to irrigation, leaving a net charge of $7,333,600 against irrigation benefits. The district engineer regards the higher dam as the most efficient project for the development of water resources and flood control in eastern Colorado and western Kansas.

14. A less comprehensive plan lies in the construction of a dam about 118 feet in height on the Purgatoire River about 24 miles above its confluence with the Arkansas, to conserve the unused water from this tributary. This reservoir would afford a supplemental water supply of 48,500 acre-feet to the Arkansas River. The cost of the reservoir is estimated at $1,663,000, and the cost per acre-foot of net annual supply is $34. A second project for water conservation, supplementary to but independent of the Purgatoire Reservoir, is the construction of a diversion dam about 7.5 miles above Hartland, Kans., and about 104 miles below the Caddo Dam site, to divert water to an off-channel reservoir on Bear Valley, an adjacent tributary. The estimated cost of the project is $700,000, of which $60,000 is the cost of the diversion dam. It is estimated to furnish a supplemental supply of 40,000 acre-feet to 20,000 acres of land at a cost of $17.50 per acre-foot. While these two projects appear to be economically sound, the district engineer regards the comprehensive plan afforded by the Caddo Reservoir as the most desirable.

15. The district engineer presents also data for reservoirs on the tributaries of the Arkansas for the conservation of water for irrigation, but finds that they are not economically justified at the present time.

16. An area of 125,000 acres in Arkansas on the north bank of the river below Little Rock is irrigated for rice culture by pumping from deep wells. This area is between the Arkansas and White Rivers, and the district engineer states that it is more susceptible of direct-flow irrigation from the White than from the Arkansas. Plans for a gravity irrigation system were included in a report on the White River printed in House Document 102, Seventy-third Congress, first session.

17. Floods: The Arkansas River and its tributaries are in general subject to destructive floods. The total area liable to inundation amounts to nearly 4,000,000 acres, of which about 1,500,000 acres are on the main stem of the river and 2,500,000 on the tributaries. The average annual flood losses, including damages to towns and cities, are estimated at somewhat in excess of $4,500,000. The nature and extent of the floods vary widely in the different parts of this long river. From Pueblo, where the river enters the Great Plains, to the Colorado-Kansas State line, storms of cloudburst intensity result in occasional floods, which often do damage, principally to irrigation headworks, and at infrequent intervals do large damage. Through western Kansas no important tributaries enter, and the watershed, because of its sandy character, does not produce floods of importance. The quick-rising short floods from the upper section diminish in volume as they pass down the river, and are so reduced when they have reached the vicinity of Hutchinson, in central Kansas, that the flood losses are negligible. The tributaries entering the river in central Kansas again contribute flood flows greatly exceeding the capacity of the stream in the remainder of its course through that State. Several important cities and towns lie in part within the flood plain of the river in this section. The flood-discharge capacity increases after entering Oklahoma, and damaging floods are rare until the mouth of the Verdigris is reached. From the mouth of the Verdigris down to the backwater of the Mississippi, a distance of 369 miles, a number of large tributaries contribute flood flows and the flood damages are the maximum. The area subject to overflow is 730,900 acres, exclusive of that on the south bank protected by the project for the flood control of the alluvial valley of the Mississippi, and a number of the towns and cities are also subject to flood damage. The backwater area north of the Arkansas amounts to 313,000 acres, much of which is, however, unimproved.

18. Flood-protection works have been constructed by the cities of Pueblo, Colo., and Wichita and Arkansas City, Kans., and extensive levees have been constructed to protect the bottom lands below Fort Smith, 379 miles above the mouth. The control and protection works at Pueblo, constructed at a cost of $4,000,000 after the disastrous flood of 1921, are designed to meet a flood from two to three times that of record. The works at Wichita, constructed at a cost of about $1,000,000, afford protection to the maximum flood of record. Other works are considered effective against moderate floods only. Levees on the south bank below Pine Bluff, 61 miles below Little Rock, have been constructed by the Federal Government as a part of the project for the flood control of the alluvial valley of the Mississippi, and are designed to protect the alluvial lands south of the Arkansas from the largest flood to be anticipated. Local drainage districts have constructed levees, ditches, and channel rectification on Grand River, Verdigris River, on tributaries of North and South Canadian Rivers, and other tributary streams, at an aggregate cost of several million dollars. These works are, in general, effective only against moderate floods.

19. The district engineer made a comprehensive study of the feasibility of the reservoir control of floods on the main stem and principal tributaries. His investigations show that the cost of any comprehensive plan of reservoir control greatly exceeds the benefits; but that the construction of the Caddoa Reservoir near Lamar, Colo., for the joint use for irrigation and flood control, at an estimated cost of $10,000,000, is economically justified, provided that the irrigation interests benefited pay a part of the cost. This reservoir would greatly reduce flood losses along the main stem of the river in western Kansas and the adjacent area in eastern Colorado, but would have no sensible effect on floods further downstream. A reservoir of 400,000 acre-feet capacity on the North Canadian River at Fort Reno, 55 miles above Oklahoma City, formed by an earth-fill dam 45 feet in height, would afford local flood protection to the city and 160,000 acres of land and water supply to the city at an estimated total first cost of about $8,000,000, but is considered economically justified only if $1,280,000 is allocated to domestic water supply. The Fort Reno Reservoir supplemented by two smaller reservoirs located at Fort Supply and Optima would provide complete flood control for the North Canadian River as well as contribute materially to flood control on the Arkansas River. The Fort Supply Reservoir on Wolf Creek, with a capacity of 150,000 acre-feet, would be formed by an earth dam 53 feet in height and 10,200 feet in length, at an estimated first cost of $2,360,000. The Optima Reservoir, on the North Canadian River, with a capacity of 77,500 acre-feet, would be formed by an earth dam 65 feet in height and 4,200 feet in length, at an estimated first cost of $1,350,000. The three reservoirs would prevent annual flood damages estimated to average $418,000, and also provide a dependable additional water supply for Oklahoma City. The Great Salt Plains Reservoir, located on Salt Fork River, with a capacity of 332,000 acre-feet, would be formed by an earth dam 40 feet in height and 4,120 feet in length, at an estimated first cost of $1,122,000, and would prevent annual average flood damages of $52,320. Much of the land necessary for the construction of this reservoir is now owned by the Biological Survey, which has endorsed its construction in the interests of wildlife. The Conchas Reservoir, located on the South Canadian River, with a capacity of 800,000 acre-feet, would be formed by an earth-filled dam 230 feet in height and 26,600 feet in length, at an estimated first cost of $8,691,000. This reservoir would prevent annual flood damages estimated to average $175,000, and in addition has a potential value for irrigation and water-supply purposes estimated at $422,000 annually. Considering its value to irrigation and water conservation, the construction of this reservoir would appear economically justified. However, utilization of the irrigation storage would require the construction of a distributing system at an additional cost estimated at $4,000,000.

20. A detailed investigation was made of the economic justification for providing flood protection by levees. Except for a few relatively small areas, aggregating 11,770 acres, so located that protection can be afforded at small cost by floodgates and minor levee construction, it was found that protection of agricultural lands is not warranted at the present time. The construction or improvement of levees for the protection of Arkansas City, Kans., on the main stem of the river, at an estimated cost of $104,000; Kaw, Okla., at an estimated cost of $37,000; and Tulsa, Okla., at an estimated cost of $349,000; Augusta, Kans., on Walnut River, at an estimated cost of $86,000; Winfield, Kans., on the same river, at an estimated cost of $121,000; Clarksville, Ark., on Spadra Creek, at an estimated cost of $78,000; and Blackwell, Okla., on Chickaskia River, at an estimated cost of $62,000, are considered to be economically justified or advisable for the protection of life and property.

21. Reservoirs for control of Mississippi River floods: The large floods from the Arkansas River during Mississippi River flood periods come from the eastern portion of the watershed, mainly from the Verdigris, Grand, Illinois, Poteau, Petit Jean, and Fourche La Pave Rivers, and the lower portions of the Cimarron and Canadian Rivers. The district engineer selects a group of 21 reservoirs on these tributaries with a capacity of 11,312,000 acre-feet as the best for the control of these floods. The estimated cost, including operation and maintenance, is $116,195,000, or an average of $10.25 per acre-foot. These reservoirs would have reduced the maximum stage of the Arkansas River in the great flood of 1927 by 1.4 feet at Pine Bluff, and of the Mississippi at Arkansas City by 3.34 feet. The most effective plan for Mississippi River flood control would entail the construction of a reservoir just above Little Rock with a capacity of 29,000,000 acre-feet, at an estimated project cost of $267,000,000, or $9.20 per acre-foot of capacity. The operation of this reservoir would have reduced the crest stage of the Mississippi River flood in 1927 if confined by levees by 7.25 feet, and under the adopted project for Mississippi River flood control with the Boeuf floodway in operation would reduce the flow down the floodway from 1,250,000 cubic feet per second to 650,000 cubic feet per second. The 21 tributary reservoirs with a smaller reservoir at Little Rock would give the same reduction as the large Little Rock reservoir alone, but the aggregate cost would be greater. The Mississippi River Commission, under the provisions of section 10 of the Flood Control Act of May 15, 1928, has completed a comprehensive study of the use of reservoirs located on the tributaries as a means of controlling floods on the lower Mississippi River. The report of the Commission includes 13 reservoirs on the Arkansas River and its tributaries in the system of reservoirs selected as the best general plan toward which future flood-control reservoir construction should be directed.

22. The district engineer discusses the related questions whose consideration is directed by section 10 of the Flood Control Act of May 15, 1928. He concludes that the benefit of return waters in irrigated areas would accrue to irrigation rather than to navigation; that the benefits from reduction in soil erosion and by flood-control works or otherwise would be incidental and too inconsequential to allocate to those factors any appreciable portion of the cost of reservoir construction. The prospective sale for reservoir flood waters for use of power and irrigation is considered in the discussion of projects for these developments.

23. The division engineer concurs in general with the views of the district engineer but expresses the view that the maintenance of a 9-foot channel on the Arkansas River by means of locks and dams is most doubtful, if not actually impracticable except at a cost far in excess of the estimates, and that the experience in the development of navigation on similar streams does not warrant the assumption that a commerce of 7,500,000 tons would develop on this river if a 9-foot channel were provided. He is further of the opinion that the flood-control projects presented by the district engineer are not economically justified, and recommends that the United States do not participate in plans for flood control, irrigation, power, or navigation on the Arkansas River Basin except as already authorized by law.

24. The Mississippi River Commission, to which the reports were referred as required by law, states that the construction of storage reservoirs in the basin of the Arkansas River, either for the purpose of prevention of flood losses in that basin or in connection with the control of floods in the Mississippi River would cost more than equal relief from present flood conditions by the use of other approved methods of flood control.

25. The reports of the district and division engineers and of the Mississippi River Commission have been referred, as required by law, to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and its report, concurring in general in the conclusions of the division engineer, is submitted herewith.

26. After due consideration of these reports, I concur in general with the views and recommendations of the Board. Because of its considerable slope and the heavy movement of sand in its bed, the improvement of the river to the vicinity of Tulsa to afford a 9-foot channel of width suitable for modern long-haul barge service is of doubtful feasibility, even through the construction of locks and dams at great cost. The figures presented by the district engineer show that the cost would not be justified even if a commerce of 7,500,000 tons annually should develop. Gaged from the through commerce that has actually developed on the Ohio, where an ample channel is maintained, and where an enormous potential commerce is available, it does not appear that a commerce of such volume is reasonably to be anticipated on the Arkansas. Because of its physical characteristics, the execution of effective plans for the improvement of the Arkansas River for navigation is not, therefore, economically justified. It is not feasible to combine such improvement with the development of potential water power, the control of floods, or the needs of irrigation. The outflow of the Arkansas is a serious factor contributing to disastrous floods on the Mississippi. While the construction of a dam above Little Rock to impound these waters in a great reservoir would be of substantial benefit in controlling the floods of the Mississippi, yet the great cost of this dam and the flowage of fertile and productive lands and communities not now subject to flood damage renders its construction unjustifiable. The possibilities for the economic generation of power, independent of navigation, are quite limited in the basin. The survey shows the feasibility of constructing large reservoirs at Caddoa on the main stem at an estimated cost of $10,000,000; Conchas on the South Canadian at an estimated cost of $8,691,000; and Fort Reno on the North Canadian at an estimated cost of $8,000,000 for the conservation of water either for navigation or domestic water supply combined with control of local floods. It also shows the feasibility of constructing smaller flood-control reservoirs in the North Canadian Basin, one at Fort Supply at an estimated cost of $2,360,000, and one at Optima at an estimated cost of $1,350,000, which, combined with the Fort Reno Reservoir, will give almost complete flood control in the basin of that tributary. The Great Salt Plains reservoir on Salt Fork at an estimated cost of $1,122,000 also appears feasible for flood control and as a wild-bird refuge. The survey develops also a number of relatively minor works for the local protection of cities. Subject to the consummation of agreements as to the distribution of the benefits and reasonable payments therefor, these projects appear to warrant a place in any broad plan for water conservation.

E. M. MARKHAM,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

Mr. HATCH. I particularly desire to call attention to the following statement which appears on page 8, and I particularly direct the attention of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] to this statement. I read from General Markham's letter to the Secretary of War, written for transmission to Congress.

The Conchas Reservoir, located on the South Canadian River, with a capacity of 800,000 acre-feet, would be formed by an earth-filled dam, 230 feet in height and 26,600 feet in length, at an estimated first cost of $8,691,000.

That is the exact sum which is still estimated for that project.

This reservoir would prevent annual flood damages estimated to average $175,000, and in addition, has a potential value for irrigation and water-supply purposes estimated at $422,000 annually. Considering its value to irrigation and water conservation, the construction of this reservoir would appear economically justified.

Then General Markham says, discussing several other projects included in this survey:

The survey shows the feasibility of constructing large reservoirs on the main stem at an estimated cost of $10,000,000;—

That is not involved—

Conchas on the South Canadian at an estimated cost of $8,691,000.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. DUFFY. Is that word "Conscious" or "Conscience"?

Mr. HATCH. The word is Conchas, C-o-n-c-h-a-s. It means seashells.

The War Department in May of this year made an application for the allotment of funds under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 to build the Conchas Reservoir and Dam, and in the application the costs and benefits accruing from it are set forth in detail. I ask, Mr. President, that this application be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The application is as follows:

REVISED APPLICATION—FEDERAL PROJECTS

Application for allotment of funds under Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935

Department project no. 201.

Official project no. 13-209.

Amount requested..... $2,500,000

Amount approved..... 2,500,000

Department or independent office: War.

Bureau: Corps of Engineers.

Location of project: State, New Mexico; county, San Miguel; city or town, General location, if other than above: On South Canadian River in northeastern New Mexico.

1. Description of project and character of work: Conchas Reservoir: Earth-fill dam; length, 26,600 feet; height, 230 feet; involving approximately 550,000 cubic yards of rock and earth excavation, 6,500,000 cubic yards of earth fill, 250,000 cubic yards of riprap, and 70,000 cubic yards of plain and reinforced concrete. The reservoir capacity is 800,000 acre-feet. The area submerged is 17,000 acres.

(a) Relative priority of this project in comparison with all projects embraced within the program of the Bureau: One.

2. Total estimated cost of project:

(b) Amount of allotment requested in this application..... $2,500,000

(c) Additional amount required to complete..... 6,191,000

(d) Total..... 8,691,000

3. Give sources of funds, if any, under 2 (a): None.

4. Estimated division of allotment:

	(1) Amount	(2) Percent of subtotal	(3) Percent of total allotment	(4) Daily average number to be employed
(a) Labor:
(1) Unskilled.....	$676,000	55	27	1,133
(2) Skilled.....	428,000	35	17	453
(3) Technical and clerical.....	120,000	10	5	57
(4) Subtotal.....	1,224,000		49	1,643
(b) Superintendence.....	200,000		8	57
(c) Other expenses on project:
(1) Supplies, materials, equipment.....	914,000	85	37
(2) Contingent expense.....	162,000	15	6
(3) Land.....
(4) Subtotal, other expenses.....	1,076,000		43
(d) Total (should correspond with amount shown in 2(b)).....	2,500,000			1,700

5. Estimated expenditure per man-year of employment: $1,260; 173 hours per month. Wage scale as prescribed in Executive order of May 20, 1935, for 90 percent of labor force. Remaining 10 percent of labor force on prevailing wage scale.

6. Estimated total man-hours: 4,120,000.

7. Estimated period of preparation before work at site can be started: 45 days.

8. Estimated daily average number of employees each month during execution of project: 1, 180; 2, 220; 3, 500; 4, 1,000; 5, 1,700; 6, 2,700; 7, 2,700; 8, 2,700; 9, 2,700; 10, 2,700; 11, 2,700; 12, 2,700; 13, 1,000; 14, 300.

9. Estimated elapsed time from beginning work to completion: 14 months.

10. (a) What part of labor on project would usually be handled by contract? 0 percent; (b) what part of labor on project would usually be day labor? 100 percent.

11. If this project is in fulfillment of some specific statutory authorization give date of such law and statute reference. None.

12. Is any part of this project in conflict with previous congressional action? No.

13. Under what provision or classification of projects specified in section 1, Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, may allotment be made legally? Flood control (h).

14. Has validity of proposed allotment been approved by legal staff of department or independent office? Yes.

15. From what other Federal agency, if any, has an allotment for this project been requested? None.

16. Status of plans: (a) Surveys? Complete; (c) sketch plans? Complete.

17. Status of land or sites: (d) Negotiations not begun? Not begun.

18. Is project wholly or partially self-liquidating under present laws? (See 21 below.)

19. To what extent will this allotment increase or decrease the annual expense of physical upkeep and operating cost to the Federal Government? (a) Increase, $54,000. By what agency to be borne? By local interests.

20. Extent of participation, if any, by other agencies: State of New Mexico or legal subdivision thereof to contribute rights-of-way and to assume responsibility for maintenance and operation of completed structure and for any damages to private property during construction. Estimated cost of right-of-way, $234,000.

21. Justification (a short, concise statement giving reason or necessity for the proposed allotment, including any comments or further statement about the nature of the work. An additional sheet may be inserted if necessary): The project would prevent annual flood losses estimated at $175,000. In addition, it has a potential value to irrigation of $366,000 and to the water supply for the city of Tucumcari of $56,000, giving annual benefits estimated at $597,000. The irrigation benefits cannot be obtained, however, until a distribution-canal system is provided at an additional estimated cost of $4,000,000. The estimated annual cost, including capital charges on the reservoir project alone, is estimated at $411,000.

Allotment of funds for this project requested by:

WAR, CORPS OF ENGINEERS,
For the Chief of Engineers.
LUCIUS D. CLAY,
Captain, Corps of Engineers.

Mr. HATCH. I invite the attention of Senators to this very significant statement appearing in the application filed under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, with the Emergency Appropriation Board of the Works Progress: The question is:

(a) Relative priority of this program in comparison with all projects embraced within the program of the Bureau.

And General Markham says in answer that it ranks no. 1. Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I ask the Senator if he is relying upon the final sentence of General Markham's letter of July 26, 1935, for his statement that this project was approved by General Markham?

Mr. HATCH. I have read to the Senate the statements in the letter. I do not recall the last sentence in General Markham's letter. I think he uses the expression, "Probably they are justified."

Mr. VANDENBERG. The last sentence reads as follows:

Subject to the consummation of agreements as to the distribution of the benefits and reasonable payments therefor, these projects appear to warrant a place in any broad plan for water conservation.

I would hardly call that the kind of a recommendation upon which Congress relies traditionally in making its decisions upon projects of this character. Does the Senator disagree with that statement?

Mr. HATCH. That sentence standing alone would certainly bear the interpretation the Senator from Michigan has placed upon it, and it would not justify the statement that it was a recommendation or an approval.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Well, is there any other statement, because I have been conscientiously looking for it?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; I called the attention of the Senator from Michigan to the express statement in two different places in the report that the Conchas Reservoir is economically justified. That is a flat statement made by General Markham in the report. I can conceive of no greater recommendation than could be made, and I cannot conceive of any greater recommendation than that made by the Board of Engineers when they filed their application with the Works Progress Administration and set forth the Conchas Reservoir as project no. 1.

I have another letter in which the Senator from Michigan, if I may invite his attention to it, will be interested, and which shows what General Markham thinks of this project, along with others of a similar nature. This letter was written to Representative FERGUSON, of Oklahoma, in response to a request concerning projects in Oklahoma of the same general nature and kind. In this letter General Markham says:

In your recent telephonic request you asked to be advised as to the flood-control reservoirs recommended by this Department for inclusion in the emergency relief program.

This Department has received a number of applications from interested parties for the inclusion of flood-control reservoirs in the emergency relief program. These parties have been advised that only those projects will be considered which are sponsored by duly established public agencies—

I want the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] to listen to the condition he lays down—prepared to furnish rights-of-way without cost to the United States, to accept responsibility for the maintenance and operation of the completed structures, and for any damages to private property incident to construction. In addition, the applications are carefully analyzed by this office with a view to determining their eligibility for inclusion in the relief program. If the cost per man-year is considerably in excess of the figure established for the projects to be included in the relief program, the applicants are advised accordingly and an application is not submitted for the project.

At the present time only six reservoirs have met the conditions established. These reservoirs are located at Fort Supply, Okla.; Optima, Okla.; Conchas, N. Mex.; Caddo Lake, La.; Great Salt Plains, Okla.; and Wallace Lake, La. The project for Caddo Lake, La., is for the raising of the existing dam.

This Department has also recommended the inclusion of seven reservoir projects in the Yazoo Basin, for which local interests have not agreed to furnish the necessary rights-of-way. However, this recommendation was based on a report submitted to Congress by the Chief of Engineers recommending this work as a modification of the authorized Mississippi flood-control plan.

This Department has also received a number of applications for miscellaneous flood-control projects, consisting in the construction of levees and cut-offs. These projects have been analyzed in the same way as the reservoir projects, and only those projects which would appear to meet the requirements of the emergency-relief program have been recommended for inclusion in that program.

I shall be pleased to furnish you with any additional information desired.

Very truly yours,

E. M. MARKHAM,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.

The latter part of the letter is not material to the present discussion, but I have inserted the letter in its entirety.

I also desire to have included in the RECORD a statement of the Interstate Water Commission for New Mexico, prepared by Mr. Arch Hurley, setting forth some of the benefits which will accrue from the building of the Conchas Reservoir.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Re: Application No. 192, NEC, Conchas Dam, South Canadian River, $4,500,000. Brief of Arch Hurley, Interstate Water Commissioner for New Mexico.

I wish to submit the following in support of the above-mentioned application, which is now pending before the Advisory Committee on Allotment, for the information of Maj. Gen. Edward M. Markham, Chief of Engineers:

1. The construction of this project, from the flood-control standpoint alone, would seem to be entirely justifiable. It is believed the construction of this dam would result in an actual saving of approximately $350,000 by eliminating damage by reason of disastrous floods in the South Canadian River. A careful analysis of damages caused by floods in this river for the past many years indicates that the estimated saving of $350,000 per year is a conservative estimate. In this connection, your attention is respectfully directed to the report filed by the Arkansas Basin Committee to the Public Works Administration. The findings set forth in this report are based on a conscientious and careful investigation by the committee covering a long period of time, in collaboration with officials of the States of New Mexico, Texas, and Oklahoma.

2. It is conservatively estimated that this construction would result in the employment of approximately 4,000 laborers directly employed at the site, in addition to probably considerably in excess of that number who would receive employment indirectly through the building trades, manufacturing concerns, stimulation of railroad business, and general improvement throughout the area involved.

3. The conservation of water throughout this area has long been recognized as of primary importance and this project would be most beneficial from this standpoint also. The construction of this reservoir would also result in furnishing an adequate water supply for domestic purposes, for adjacent towns and cities of New Mexico and the Panhandle of Texas, including Amarillo, Tex., a city of some 50,000 population, as well as other west Texas cities in this general area. Records covering a period of some 25 years indicate a steady lowering of the water level throughout this general area, constituting a serious menace to the future water supply of this section of New Mexico and the adjoining west Texas area. It is believed the construction of this reservoir is absolutely essential to obviate a present deficiency in the water supply for the communities within the area mentioned.

4. It is believed the records in the office of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration will indicate that the relief situation in San Miguel County, N. Mex., the county in which this reservoir is proposed to be constructed, and the surrounding counties in both New Mexico and Texas, is such as to readily absorb the labor necessities of this project and that without construction of the magnitude contemplated by this project, the relief-roll situation could not be adequately provided for.

5. In addition to the foregoing, this project will make possible the irrigation of a considerable area, which is largely devoted to stock farming and cultivation of crops by dry-farming methods. In other words, the irrigation of these lands would merely mean the substitution of farming through irrigation for the present farming by dry-farming methods. This area is not adapted to the raising of cotton or other crops which would come into competition with general agricultural commodities. It is principally adapted to the raising of alfalfa and other feed for range livestock, a local market for which is readily available in New Mexico and west Texas. The lands proposed to be irrigated from this reservoir would be ideally suited to resettlement projects. They would afford homes and means of livelihood to those in need of rehabilitation. The lands of this project would not be subject to droughts or other hazards pertaining in the cultivated areas depending upon rainfall alone, but with the adequate water supply afforded by the proposed reservoir the raising of a crop each and every year would be assured.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senate to another situation with reference to the Conchas Reservoir which makes it somewhat different, I think, from other projects. The House of Representatives at the last session passed an omnibus flood-control measure. Included in that bill is the Conchas Reservoir. That bill was favorably reported by the Commerce Committee of this body to the Senate at the last session. Therefore, at the last session of the Congress this project had the approval not only of the Army engineers and the House of Representatives, which by its vote passed the bill authorizing the project, but it had the approval of this body by the recommendation of a standing committee of the Senate. I think clearly it is well within the technical objections raised yesterday as to rule XVI.

There is another reason, Mr. President, which to me is of vast importance and of vast interest, why this project should be authorized and why the amendment should be adopted. We have discussed the authorization given to the President of the United States under the general relief appropriation of $4,000,000,000 at the last session. I went to the President of the United States, as other Senators from the Western States went to him, and advocated and insisted that the Emergency Relief funds be spent on worth-while projects, of permanent, lasting benefit. I further insisted to the President of the United States that the building of the Conchas Reservoir was such a project; that it would add material value to my State from the standpoint of wealth and, in addition to that, would give employment to many hundreds of residents of New Mexico. It is estimated that 3,000 workers will be employed on this project. The Works Progress Administration, through its engineering department, I am advised, approve the Conchas Dam as being the best work-relief project of its nature and kind which has been submitted. More than $2,000,000 have been or will be spent upon the project by the 1st of July this year. I am informed there is a possibility that work will have to be abandoned unless this appropriation shall be made. To me it is of great concern and it is of grave importance to the people of New Mexico that this project be continued, not only for the material wealth which it will add to the State of New Mexico, not only for the prevention of the damage done yearly, according to all reports by all the engineers, by floods along the Canadian River in the States of Oklahoma and Texas, but also because it will provide employment in my State for three or four thousand people at useful work and result in a permanent and lasting improvement.

Mr. President, I wish to say further that this project has another long-range advantage and possibility. It is located in what might be termed the "dust bowl" of the western area. A great many citizens of the United States along the border lines of Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, and New Mexico for many years have sought to make a living by dry-land farming in that area. That they have not been successful goes without saying. Perhaps the building of this reservoir will add a hundred thousand acres of land which can be placed under irrigation, and the people who have been trying to make a living there on submarginal lands, as they are sometimes called, can be provided with a place where they can establish permanent homes and make their own living, as decent American citizens have a right to do.

Finally, I submit, Mr. President, that this project is of too much importance to be objected to upon any technical grounds or considerations. I trust that the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] on behalf of himself, the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. COPELAND obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator from Mississippi wish to speak on the amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark	Holt	Neely
Austin	Connally	Johnson	Norbeck
Bachman	Copeland	Keyes	Overton
Barkley	Couzens	King	Pittman
Benson	Davis	Lewis	Radcliffe
Bilbo	Duffy	Logan	Robinson
Black	Fletcher	Lonergan	Sheppard
Bone	Frazier	McAdoo	Shipstead
Brown	George	McGill	Smith
Bulkley	Gerry	McKellar	Steiwer
Bulow	Gibson	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Burke	Glass	Maloney	Townsend
Byrd	Hale	Metcalf	Vandenberg
Capper	Harrison	Minton	Van Nuys
Caraway	Hatch	Murphy	Wheeler
Carey	Hayden	Murray	White

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, as I know Senators are anxious to vote on the pending question I will be very brief.

I hope no Senator will get the very wrong impression that the pending amendment is like the amendment which was rejected a while ago. It is now divorced from the Florida project; it is divorced from the Maine project, and stands upon its own footing. The Board of Army Engineers recommended the three projects. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] was uncertain about the New Mexico project, but he heard the speech of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] and, of course, is now convinced.

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; I am now more uncertain than ever.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from New Mexico convinced me that the Board had recommended that project because he read from the report of the Chief of the Board of Army Engineers.

I am glad the Senator from Michigan has raised no point with reference to the Mississippi project because it has been studied not only by the committees of the Senate, but by the Board of Army Engineers. The Commerce Committee made a favorable report upon the project and the Board of Army Engineers has recommended it very strongly. Indeed, every requirement for the project has been met and complied with. The people have provided the land at most reasonable figures, and are all ready to proceed with the work upon this great reservoir.

The reservoir will be constructed in the Mississippi Delta and in that section of the Delta which for years and years has paid taxes to provide levees against overflow from the Mississippi River. I have no doubt that in the past the flood waters from the Mississippi have cost that section of my State hundreds of millions of dollars. Even though this reservoir is to be constructed at a point 50 miles east of the Mississippi River, yet the people in that section of the Delta are taxed to pay for levees along the Mississippi River. Fifty million dollars has been raised for that purpose, of which the people in the Yazoo Delta, in which this reservoir will be constructed, have contributed $20,000,000. They will provide for the upkeep of the reservoir. I am sure the project will appeal to the wisdom and conscience of Senators.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator tell me the present status of the project? Has construction been entered upon at all or is it still in contemplation?

Mr. HARRISON. The project was approved by the President with the condition that options must be obtained upon lands to be covered by the reservoir. Those options have been acquired at most reasonable figures, which have been approved by the Board of Army Engineers. In other words, the people of the locality have complied with every condition that must be met prior to the beginning of construction of the project.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It will be some time, will it not, before actual work of construction is begun?

Mr. HARRISON. If we should get this little $2,500,000 this week—and the Senator will note I say "little"—work would probably be started within 10 days. When the construction of the reservoir shall have been completed, several million dollars will be saved to the property owners of that rich and fertile section of Mississippi, to say nothing of the saving of the lives of many of my people.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is to be the final cost of the project?

Mr. HARRISON. I believe some $9,000,000. No great, ambitious scheme is contemplated in the construction of this particular reservoir.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment, because it is not out of order and the project has been recommended by the Board of Army Engineers.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, of course, in view of the action of the Senate yesterday, I cannot interpose a point of order against the amendment. Nevertheless, I think it is clearly out of order. The projects covered by the amendment may be slightly better, so far as that is concerned, than the Florida project; but still they are not authorized according to law as I understand the law.

I should like to say to my colleagues that a flood-control bill will come before the Senate next week. We hope to have a report on the bill from the Commerce Committee in a few days. If those who advocate these projects could secure final reports from the Army Engineers and bring them to the Commerce Committee, I am sure they would be given very kindly consideration.

As the Senator in charge of the bill, I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] on behalf of himself, the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRAZIER (when Mr. NYE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. NYE] is unavoidably absent. He is paired on this question with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay"; and I understand that if the junior Senator from Florida were present he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BILBO. I have a general pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BARKLEY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mrs. LONG], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HATCH. My colleague [Mr. CHAVEZ] is unavoidably detained from the Senate and out of the city. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH], if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER. I announce that my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL] is absent on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] is necessarily absent. He has a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. HAYDEN. I announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is unavoidably detained.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is detained on account of illness; and that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained in important committee meetings.

I also announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mrs. LONG], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and my colleague the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] are unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] is detained on important departmental matters.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—37

Adams	Duffy	Logan	Robinson
Bachman	Fletcher	McAdoo	Sheppard
Barkley	George	McGill	Shipstead
Benson	Gerry	Minton	Smith
Bilbo	Harrison	Murphy	Thomas, Utah
Black	Hatch	Murray	Van Nuys
Bone	Hayden	Neely	Wheeler
Byrd	Holt	Overton
Caraway	Johnson	Pittman
Connally	Lewis	Radcliffe

NAYS—27

Chavez	Hastings	Pope	Wagner
Coolidge	La Follette	Reynolds	Walsh

So the amendment offered by Mr. NEELY on behalf of himself, Mr. HARRISON, Mr. BILBO, and Mr. HATCH was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this amendment having been adopted, I ask the Senate to turn to page 69, line 23. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amount was made $188,677,899, and change it to $196,677,899, so that it will include these items in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote will be reconsidered; and, without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to correct the total will be agreed to.

PAYMENT OF CERTAIN ENLISTED MEN NEW HAMPSHIRE NATIONAL GUARD

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3173) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay men formerly enlisted as members of Battery D, One Hundred and Ninety-seventh Coast Artillery (Antiaircraft), New Hampshire National Guard, for armory training during the period from November 1, 1932, to July 1, 1933, which was, on page 1, line 8, after "Guard", to insert "in full settlement of their claims against the United States"; on page 2, line 4, after "promulgated", to insert: "Provided, That the Secretary of War shall have first determined the persons who are entitled to pay under this act: Provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claims. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claims, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000"; and to amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of certain formerly enlisted members of Battery D, One Hundred and Ninety-seventh Coast Artillery (Antiaircraft), New Hampshire National Guard."

Mr. BROWN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

THIRD TRIENNIAL MEETING OF THE ASSOCIATED COUNTRY WOMEN OF THE WORLD

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2664) to aid in defraying the expenses of the Third Triennial Meeting of the Associated Country Women of the World, to be held in this country in June 1936, which was, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$10,000."

Mr. CAPPER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 37. A bill authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to settle and adjust the claims of subcontractors and materialmen for material and labor furnished in the construction of a post-office and courthouse building at Rutland, Vt.;

S. 1307. An act to establish the Homestead National Monument of America in Gage County, Nebr.;

S. 1453. An act to create a board of shorthand reporting, and for other purposes;

S. 1470. An act to provide a preliminary examination of Spokane River and its tributaries in the State of Idaho with a view to the control of their floods;

S. 3281. An act to amend the act of February 16, 1929, entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Public Health Service', approved June 10, 1922, as amended";

S. 3453. An act limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to certain counsel; and

S. J. Res. 165. Joint resolution directing the Architect of the Capitol to accept a copy of the painting Lief Eiriksson Discovers America.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11035) making appropriations for the military and non-military activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I desire to speak about a feature of the bill which was considered by the Senate upon yesterday in connection with the appropriations for seacoast defenses.

The Senate agreed to the amendments proposed by the committee, and struck from the bill certain items which had been included by the House of Representatives. These items consisted of $3,000,000 for the Pacific coast seacoast defenses, $3,000,000 for those in Hawaii, and I think $725,000 for the defenses of the Panama Canal. The total of the reductions to which the Senate yesterday gave its assent is $1,793,944. Of this amount, the War Department advises me that $1,177,621 is necessary for the maintenance of the existing fortifications. As a result of the action which we took yesterday, there is left only $540,000—to be exact, $543,347—for the improvement of all these defenses upon the Pacific coast, in the Territory of Hawaii, and in the Canal Zone.

This sum of $540,000 will be divided in something like an equal division as between the three different areas to be defended. This, of course, means that there will be something like $200,000, or possibly less than $200,000, for each one of the areas.

I think Senators should know that the coast defenses are being constructed under a program which the War Department has most carefully considered over the years, and which it has adopted after very thorough study. The requirements of this program are something like $15,000,000. At the rate at which we shall go under the action taken yesterday, it will take approximately 75 years to complete this program of coast defense; and it is obvious to those who give the matter only a moment's thought that long before the program shall have been completed it will be obsolete, and the whole effort of the Nation to provide an adequate seacoast defense will come to nothing.

I do not wish to detain the Senate to discuss a matter of this kind, nor shall I ask for a reconsideration of the action taken by the Senate upon yesterday. There is some justification for the course we are pursuing. The chief basis in justification, as I regard the matter, is that these items in excess of $6,000,000 were not in the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget. They were, nevertheless, included by the House of Representatives at the time it considered and passed the bill.

There may be adequate reason for the elimination of the items. I do not wish to be contentious about the matter; but I do express the hope that the conferees of the Senate, in case there shall be a conference upon the bill, will give to the viewpoint of the House the consideration to which I think it is entitled.

It would appear that there is abundant argument in support of the appropriations voted by the House or at least for the inclusion in this bill of some considerable portion of those appropriations, so that this important item of national defense shall not in the name of economy be reduced to the point of a farce.

Having expressed this hope, and having called attention to the matter, I am quite content to let it rest as it is.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 60, line 14, after the word "Corps", it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used for or toward the support of any compulsory military course or military training in any civil school or college, or for the pay of any officer, enlisted man, or employee at any civil school of college where a military course or military training is compulsory; but nothing herein shall be construed as applying to essentially military schools or colleges.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered simply provides that none of the money appropriated in the War Department appropriation bill shall be used in schools and colleges where there is compulsory military training. It would not prevent military training in schools; it would only prevent the use of the money where there is compulsory military training.

There is an organization of young people, headed by what is known as the Committee on Militarism in Education, which has worked on this proposition for a number of years. Polls have been taken in the schools in various States, and also a general poll of the voters of the States, and in all instances the vote has been recorded in favor of an amendment of the kind I have offered; that is, against compulsory military training in our educational institutions.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Are there institutions which require compulsory military training?

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, yes.

Mr. WALSH. What are they, and where are they located?

Mr. FRAZIER. The Massachusetts Institute of Technology is one of them. I have forgotten the exact number, but I have a list of them here somewhere.

Mr. WALSH. Is there a substantial number of such institutions?

Mr. FRAZIER. There are many of them, including land-grant colleges. In my State both the State University and the Agricultural College, separate institutions, require military training. In other words, if a boy from the farm in North Dakota goes to the agricultural college in order to obtain training in agriculture, if he is an able-bodied boy, in order to get a diploma at that agricultural college—and I may say that we have a good agricultural college in North Dakota—he must take at least 2 years of military training. The same statement applies to our State University. The same thing is true in practically every State of the Union, with the exception of Wisconsin and Minnesota. In Wisconsin the State legislature passed an act prohibiting compulsory military training in their colleges and universities. In Minnesota the State board of administration, or of education—I do not remember the exact title—adopted a provision of the same kind.

The argument is made that boys do not necessarily need to attend such colleges unless they desire to, but that is hardly a fair argument, because in most instances they must attend an institution in their own States if they are to go to college or to a university; and in North Dakota, as in many other States, if they desire to attend college and get a degree they have to take 2 years of compulsory military training.

During the past few years a number of students, because of religious scruples or some conscientious objection, have refused to take military training, and in several instances the cases have been taken to court. The courts have invariably held that the young man must take the course prescribed if he desires to go to school and get a degree.

Such a case occurred at the University of Maryland. Two young men there, one a Methodist, the other a Unitarian, refused to take the military training. The Baltimore superior court ruled against the University of Maryland. The case was taken to the State court of appeals, and there the university was sustained, and the boys were expelled from college.

In 1933 two students at the University of California who happened to be Methodists refused to take military training. The case went to court and was carried clear to the Supreme Court of the United States. I have an extract from the opinion handed down by Justice Butler in the California case, from which I desire to quote just a few words:

The conscientious objector is relieved from the obligation to bear arms in obedience to no constitutional provision, express or implied; but, because, and only because, it has accorded with the policy of Congress thus to relieve him. . . . The privilege of the native-born conscientious objector to avoid bearing arms comes not from the Constitution but from the acts of Congress. That body may grant or withhold the exemption as in its wisdom it sees fit; and if it be withheld, the native-born conscientious objector cannot successfully assert the privilege.

In other words, according to this decision of the Supreme Court, and the decisions of some of the State courts, the only way in which conscientious objectors can avoid compulsory military training is by an act of Congress, and it seems to me it is only fair to attach this amendment to the pending bill, and provide that none of the money shall be spent in colleges or universities or schools where there is compulsory military training.

There is also compulsory military training in high schools. At Bangor, Maine, a boy who was the son of a professor in the Bangor Theological Seminary, while going to high school, made up his mind that he did not wish to take the military training, and he appealed to the faculty. The faculty held that he would have to take military training. There was quite a time about it, and I have an article here from the Christian Century Magazine under date of March 11, 1936, which refers to a number of cases where it was held that boys who refused because of conscientious scruples to take military training must either forego their college education, or at least their degrees, or take the training. Some of the universities have held that they will allow a boy to attend classes, and so forth, but will not give him his degree unless he complies with the compulsory military feature. This article mentions the school in Massachusetts of which I spoke, referred to here as the "M. I. T". It was held in the case referred to here that the boy would not be allowed to graduate unless he took military training.

I shall not take much time in discussing this matter, but I feel that there is a great demand for the amendment I have offered. A vote has been taken in practically every State university and college and high school where there is compulsory military training, and the result has been an overwhelming verdict, or at least the expression of a majority, opposed to compulsory military training.

Some of our Army officers have stated that where there has been a change from compulsory military training to voluntary or elective military training, they get a better class of young men in the R. O. T. C., because where there is an elective course only those who desire to take the course pursue the military training and go through with the 4-year course. At the present time 2 years' training is compulsory, and the other 2 years is elective.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator whether the requirement of military training applies where the individual pays his tuition in order to attend the school?

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, yes; in some institutions where they pay tuition, and in other institutions, such as State institutions, where no tuition is paid.

Mr. WALSH. I suppose in State institutions no tuition is required; but I know that in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology tuition is required. I am surprised to learn that where a pupil pays tuition voluntarily he is required to take military training.

Mr. FRAZIER. Of course, the argument is made that the boy does not need to attend that particular school unless he desires to do so, and he knows that military training is part of the course. In some instances the fact is that colleges have gone so far as to allow the students to select different courses, even required courses, and to select practically their own courses; but when it comes to military training they have to take that if they desire to graduate and get a diploma.

Mr. WALSH. So it seems that in some institutions, regardless of whether the tuition is free or paid for by the individual students, they are compelled to take military training?

Mr. FRAZIER. That is correct.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. BONE. If the Senator's amendment were adopted, would its effect be to permit students entering colleges to elect whether or not they would take military training?

Mr. FRAZIER. It would be an elective course and not a compulsory course—that is, if money from the Army appropriation act is to be expended there in the employment of officers and the promotion of the training of the R. O. T. C.

Mr. BONE. In other words, the adoption of the amendment would not deprive a boy of an education because he did not want to take military training?

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, no!

Mr. BONE. It would not summarily cause him to be kicked out of school?

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, no!

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. DUFFY. The Senator states that the fact that a boy is compelled to take military training in a college or university has some bad reaction upon the boy himself. Does the Senator put his objection to it upon that ground, or upon the other ground that there might be some religious objection?

Mr. FRAZIER. I am speaking of compulsory military training as it affects the conscientious objectors, those who do not wish to take military training. I do not object to having military training in schools if the students desire to have it and to take military training; but I do object to the compulsory feature of it in our public schools and universities and colleges.

Mr. DUFFY. I have in mind—I think I have mentioned it to the Senator in a previous debate—the fact that at the time I was in the university, if I had had my own way about it, I am quite sure I should not have taken military training. I was compelled to do so; and when the war came on, and I wanted to do my part, I was very happy to have had that training. I do not think there is anything about it which is detrimental so far as the reaction upon the individual boy is concerned. I really think that during the last war a great many of the boys who served on our side were very glad they had been compelled to take that course in the schools. In our school the only way to avoid military training was to get on the athletic team. I recall getting out and making the track team one year in order to avoid military training. I did, however, have some military training there, and it stood me in very good stead. I wonder why it is not proper to leave it entirely up to the school administrations to determine whether or not they desire to have it.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the Senator's reference to his own experience in the university recalls my own experience. I took the military course for 2 years, which was compulsory; but during the fall term I was excused because I was on the football team. I think I got more actual exercise on the football team than in the military training squad.

The number of these schools has been increasing rapidly, and the amount of money being spent is being considerably increased. It is felt by a great many that military training in the schools has a tendency toward militarization of our public schools and our universities.

I know the argument is made that the State institutions, or the boards which control the State institutions, may regulate the military course if they wish to do so; that they may make it elective. There seems, however, to be a sort of a standing gentleman's agreement between the War Department and the educational boards that unless they have compulsory-military training they will not be able to get money from the War Department or secure the detail of officers from the War Department. Many of the institutions are short of money, especially during these hard times, and they keep up compulsory-military training in order to get money from the War Department. Otherwise they would necessarily, of course, be obliged to hire instructors in gymnasium work or to teach in some other line of exercise.

I appreciate the fact that the amendment under discussion has been offered in the Senate many times and voted down. When the bill was considered in the House a similar amendment was offered but was defeated. Nevertheless, I am strongly of the opinion that the amendment is only fair and absolutely right, and that it should be adopted.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] knows, I am sure, that in the University of Wisconsin, since the compulsory feature has been eliminated, they still have the elective course; and, according to some of the instructors there and some of the Army officers themselves, the boys who take the course make better officers, because they are taking military training as an elective course and not as a compulsory course. They are interested in military training, and wish to take up that line of work.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. DUFFY. I suppose the same boys who took the compulsory course would take the elective course. The only difference is that more of them would be taking it under the compulsory system than under the elective system.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is it. It also costs more money under the compulsory system, because there are so many more who take the course and then drop out at the end of the 2 years, and do not go through the 4-year course.

Mr. DUFFY. I was wondering if the Senator knew what difference in cost there would be, say between a regiment containing 300 boys and a regiment containing 600 boys who were being trained. I do not think there would be a great deal of difference in the cost to the Government. Has the Senator any figures on that subject?

Mr. FRAZIER. No; I have not the figures, but there is quite an appreciably less number where the course is elective than where it is compulsory.

A short time ago there was a contest among students on the bill known as the Nye-Kvale bill, which contains a provision similar to this amendment. That bill is now pending before the committee. I have quotations from the essay of the student who won first prize, the one who took second place, and the one who took third place. The first prize was won by Roger E. Chase, of Columbia University, New York City. The first two paragraphs of the essay are rather interesting to me. In the first, he quotes the Secretary of War as follows:

We won some things from the war that were not on the program. For example, we had a complete demonstration of the fallacy of the old tradition that preparedness prevents war.

That is a quotation from an address by George H. Dern at Riverside, Calif., in December 1931. Then this young man goes on to say:

In December 1935 Mr. Dern, as Secretary of War, is busy spending the largest peacetime military appropriation in the history of the United States, making capital of "the old tradition that preparedness prevents war" to hasten the drive toward a bigger and better war.

I have read all the statements by these young men, and they are very well written and very intelligent. I should like to have the time to read them all to the Members of the Senate. I am not going to take that time. Every one of them presents what seems to me a very logical argument against the compulsory feature of military training in our colleges and universities. So, Mr. President, I am hopeful that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I sincerely hope this amendment will not be adopted. We have the land-grant colleges, which are required by law to give military instruction.

The provision of the bill before us does not require that there shall be compulsory military service. As a Democrat, I am in favor of local self-determination. The law contemplates that each college shall determine for itself whether military service shall be compulsory or otherwise. The States in many instances determine whether or not military service in the colleges shall be compulsory.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator state in what year the law was passed setting up this system of granting Federal funds to the colleges?

Mr. COPELAND. In 1862.

Mr. WALSH. I asked the Senator purposely because I observed that it was during the middle of the Civil War. I should like to inquire of the Senator if the fact that we were at war had anything to do with the policy?

Mr. COPELAND. I venture to say it did; but it is not about that phase of the question I wish to speak. It is not the question of preparing young men for war. That is not the important thing about their training.

I am not going to reflect in the least upon the Senator from North Dakota in what I am about to say. I absolve him from any such thoughts. I know he is not associated in any sense with the groups I am about to mention. I say that in advance, so I shall not be misunderstood.

It is remarkable, Mr. President—and I observed it this year more than ever before—that in the hearings before the committee, so far as my recollection goes, there was no attack made upon the established military organization of our country. There was no criticism of what we were proposing to do with regard to the Regular Establishment, the standing Army.

But it was remarkable that the witnesses spoke particularly against the Reserve Officers' Training Corps. Why was that?

Revolutionary movements usually originate in colleges. Indoctrination of youth is a practice of those who desire to overturn government, particularly orderly government. It is well known to those groups who have subversive ideas that it is unwise, if they are going to prevail in the country, to permit the indoctrination of youthful minds with ideas of patriotism and love of country, respect for the flag, and respect for our institutions.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I submit to the Senator whether he thinks that forcing a high-school boy to take compulsory military training against his own best judgment and best wishes will make him more patriotic? Will forcing him to take military training for 2 years, when he opposes it either because of religious principles or conscientious scruples or for any reason, make him a more patriotic citizen?

Mr. COPELAND. I want to limit the discussion somewhat. I do not believe there is a single high school where there is compulsory military training.

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, yes; in Bangor, Maine, where a boy was expelled from the high school because he would not take military training. It is almost the same in the District of Columbia.

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, no; not in the District. Did the Senator mention any other point than Bangor, Maine?

Mr. FRAZIER. No; but I believe there are others.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BONE. With his indulgence, I should like to call his attention to an item taken from the Washington News of today, which I think has some very definite bearing. That is why, with the indulgence of the Senator from New York, I should like to read this item. It was a comment on the book, The Lost Generation, by Maxine Davis, which has been published by the Macmillan Co. In this comment the News had this to say:

Eight million American young people, between the ages of 16 and 25, are neither at work nor at school. Idle youngsters just like them were largely responsible for the swift success of fascism in other countries.

That is not the subversive movement the Senator from New York has in mind, and it is not the fascism which men like Hitler and Mussolini represent and promote.

The article goes on to say:

If we don't do something about this problem in a hurry, says Maxine Davis in the Lost Generation (Macmillan), out today, "some self-appointed piper may . . . lead our youth, God knows where."

This young lady, it appears, made a 10,000-mile journey around the country making a survey in this connection. The article proceeds:

If the right leader came along, they might be carried away like their contemporaries in Italy and Germany. If not, she sees the danger of their becoming an embittered, vitiated citizenry of the future. But she found enough sportsmanship, courage, high spirits, optimism, and adaptability to give her some measure of hope for the future.

A tragic aspect of the situation is the rapidity with which youth becomes "obsolete" to employers. Mature men with dependents are usually rehired when business picks up, and even when employers want youth for beginners' jobs they favor the fresh crop.

Graduates of 2 or 3 years back, with a period of bitter idleness or spotty, menial employment behind them, take a back seat. The embarrassment of a businessman with a 25-year-old messenger boy is all too real.

That, as I view it, is the danger, if there is a danger, in this great body of disillusioned young men, and not in the suggestion the Senator made—that the universities of the country are going to turn out young fellows who are going to do something subversive because of something they learn there. Disillusionment of these young men who are turned out of the colleges and universities without hope of jobs, may cause serious trouble. I know hundreds of them in my own State who are disillusioned and heartbroken and embittered by reason of the fact that they can find no place in the scheme of things. That has come home to me, as I assume it has to the Senator from New York.

I beg the Senator's pardon for intruding on his speech.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator for what he said. If he had been here 2 or 3 weeks ago when I had a colloquy with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and expatiated at some length upon the situation as regards the unemployed youth, he would know I share the sentiments expressed by this writer and the implication of the Senator who presented them. Of course, it is a menace to our country. There is no doubt about that. We must find some way to solve the economic problem in order that youth may be employed. I agree to that fully.

Mr. BONE. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. BONE. If I were a young man entering a university and sincerely in my heart I did not care to take military training, why should I be compelled to do so? No matter what my opinions are, why should I be compelled to take it when I do not want it, whatever may be the reason? My motives might be the worst or the best in the world; perhaps my impulses were wrong, but why deprive a boy of education because he does not want to have military training? I cannot see why that should be done.

Mr. BENSON rose.

Mr. COPELAND. I shall reply to the Senator from Washington in a moment, but apparently the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BENSON] wishes to ask me a question and I yield to him.

Mr. BENSON. Are we to infer from what the Senator just said that compulsory military training in our land-grant colleges is to keep down possible insurrections which may occur at some future period?

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, no; I do not think so. I do not think I ever said that.

Mr. BENSON. The Senator referred to possible insurrections.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will bear with me until I can attempt to explain what I mean, perhaps I can make clear my position.

First, in reply to the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], not every college in the United States has military training. There is not an R. O. T. C. in every college in the United States; far from it. Many of the colleges are asking for units, not to make the training compulsory, but in order to provide such training for those who wish it.

If for any reason a boy chose to go to a school where the rule for compulsory military activity prevailed, he would do so voluntarily. If he did not care to go to such a school he would not have to do so. I have had sufficient experience trying to get students to attend a school to learn that there were plenty of other schools than the one I happened to be serving.

It is not necessary for a boy to go to an institution where military attendance is required.

To go back a little further to what the Senator from Washington suggested, he spoke about the ambitious young man who wants to go to school. The boys enrolled in the R. O. T. C. get $12 a month. They not only have the training, but they have $12 a month and certain provisions for uniforms besides. They get $100 a year. In many instances that may be the reason why a boy can go to school. That helps the lad to go to school even though it may be an institution where military activity is required.

Responding to the inquiry of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BENSON], while I hesitate to take the time of the Senate, I wish to say to him that the greatest social problem confronting America today is juvenile delinquency, delinquency of youth. The average age of the criminals in all the penal institutions of America is 23 years. The largest age group is found at 19 years, and the next largest age group at 18 years. Our correctional institutions are filled with misguided boys and girls of the impressionable age, the age when, with improper care, the child may become antisocial—not alone nonsocial, but antisocial. He may become imbued with the idea that the accepted social organization ought to be destroyed.

I do not speak about this matter entirely without knowledge of it. God was good enough to grant a great boon to me. I have a boy. So far as my ability permitted, I gave him all the privileges of education possible. He was in the R. O. T. C. at his university for 4 years. He was sufficiently competent so that he became second in command, and also went to Plattsburg. I am here to say that, in my opinion, the finest thing that ever happened to that boy was his experience in the R. O. T. C.

Referring now to thousands of other boys who have been members of the R. O. T. C., there can be no doubt that they learned what it means to be Americans, what it means to belong to our country. They became not only lovers of our country but patriots, anxious to serve our country; not to fight, necessarily; not to go to war; but to make our country in peacetime the greatest country that can be conceived of by the mind of man. It gave them respect for authority; it gave them regard for our civic institutions; it gave them regard for our political institutions. It made them, in short, better citizens; and I believe with all my soul that the training these lads receive in the R. O. T. C. units is in many ways more important than all they gain in the way of scholastic achievement.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to my friend from Utah.

Mr. KING. I am not sure that my question is pertinent; but I drew the deduction from the Senator's remarks that possibly he had the idea that young men could not learn patriotism other than through military schools. I wish to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that millions of Americans who have not gone through military schools or had military drill are just as patriotic as those who have had military drill.

Mr. COPELAND. It is appropriate that a Senator from Utah should ask that question, because Utah is the one State in the Union where by law the public-school system has been given supervision of the child for 12 months in the year.

Mr. KING. But this supervision is not military training.

Mr. COPELAND. Not at all. I am not speaking for that. Utah is the foremost State of the Union in grasping this great social problem and offering a solution of it. I congratulate the Senator that he represents a State so forward-looking. It is not military training about which I am talking.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. KING. Having paid a compliment to my State, I may say to the Senator that the views of the people of that State have been and are that education must not stop with the public schools, and that, in addition to the curricula in the schools, the students should have the advantage of reasonable supervision to protect them against evil influences and to inculcate principles in regard to peace and sobriety and industry, and equip them for suitable places in the social and economic activities of life. Accordingly, during vacation this supervisory care is continued, and the State is doing everything it possibly can to prepare the young men and women for the responsibilities of life. The result has been that there has been great improvement and great social advancement; and I might add that this system of education imposes very heavy burdens upon the State—burdens which the people willingly bear.

Mr. COPELAND. In my opinion, it is money well spent. I think the State of Utah is to be congratulated. It is doing a wonderful thing for its youth; and I wish wisdom could come to every other State of the Union to do the same thing.

At some time I wish to compare notes with the Senator from Utah on this question, because I am fully informed of what his State has done. I have spoken of it a dozen times or 50 times, hoping the example of Utah might be followed elsewhere.

I desire, however, to go back to college conditions.

Every one of us who attended a college or a university knows how many temptations come to the college student; temptations relating to the appetites—many temptations. I am not here to confess nor to boast, but I am here to say that I am a competent witness by reason of my own experience as a student and by reason of 25 years as a teacher in a college or university. I have had opportunity to observe youth and to know the temptations besetting youth.

It is not possible for a young man who is associated with a military establishment, whether in the regular Military Establishment or in one of the R. O. T. C. units, to wander far from the path of rectitude. It is not long before his officers, major and minor, call him to account for his failure to observe those things which are considered high and right and in accord with the standards which prevail in these military institutions.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have just read rather casually the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota. As I understand, it is to prevent the use for compulsory military training of any of the funds appropriated in this bill.

Is there any such thing in this country? I know of no law which provides for compulsory military training. It is not done by the act of 1862; it is not done by the act of 1916; and, in my judgment, it is not done by any act, except when the country is at war. Have we ever had compulsory military training in this country except when the country was at war?

I do not understand the reason for the amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Further, I may say to the Senator, we are not now proposing that there shall be compulsory military training.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that I know a good many high-school and other students in the public schools of my State who take this course; but they are not compelled to take it. It is purely optional as to whether or not they shall take it; and there is no law now in force in this country which provides for compulsory military training.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to enable me to answer the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I have in my hand an article by Oswald Garrison Villard, published in the Atlantic Monthly for February 1936, entitled "We Militarize." In speaking of the R. O. T. C. training he says:

In 1913 there were 57 such institutions giving military training under War Department direction. By 1935 the number had risen to 399. In 1913 there were 85 officers and men on duty in such schools and colleges, and today there are no less than 1,658.

Those schools do not all make military training compulsory, but there are 118 schools and colleges in the United States which compel the student to take 2 years of military training if he is to attend the school and get a degree.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there is no Federal law that provides for compulsory military training. I was a Member of the House of Representatives in 1916, and I remember very well the law, because I had a great deal to do with preparing it, which established the R. O. T. C. Since that time that organization has grown considerably, as the article just read states; but membership in it is not compulsory anywhere at any school or college.

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, yes; it is compulsory. There are 118 colleges and schools where it is compulsory.

Mr. McKELLAR. They have no right to make it compulsory.

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, yes; they have.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, they have no right so far as our action is concerned.

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly not.

Mr. COPELAND. In a great many of the States military training is required in the State institutions. The land-grant colleges feel they are obliged to make it compulsory under the old law.

Mr. President, the desire of the Senator from North Dakota is clear. No matter what the board of trustees of the institution may wish, no matter what the State authorities may wish, or what they feel the law imposes upon them, the Senator does not wish to have any of the money used for any unit of the R. O. T. C. where the particular institution, by reason of local or State laws, feels that military training must be required of every student.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the land-grant law of 1862, commonly known as the Morrill Act, does not provide for compulsory military training, under the terms of the law, and no act of the United States Congress now provides for compulsory military training.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, the Senator from Tennessee was not on the floor when I offered the amendment and spoke about it.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I was not.

Mr. FRAZIER. The authorities have gone so far that in a number of cases students who have refused to take military training because of some religious scruple or conscientious objection have been expelled from school. The cases have been taken into court, and have gone clear to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Supreme Court of the United States has held that a school has the right to have compulsory military training if it so desires; that it may require it.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is a matter which should be fought out in the local school or local community; it certainly has nothing to do with Federal law, because the only body in this country which has a right to declare war is the Congress of the United States. There is no Federal law which provides for compulsory military training. It is not provided for in the original Morrill Act of 1862, and it is not provided for in any law now on the statute books. Why should we attempt to regulate local institutions? It seems to me we would be going very far afield if we should attempt to do so.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, it is not an effort to regulate local institutions, but to require that the money appropriated by the United States Congress shall not be used for compulsory military training. The Senator says there is no law to require it, and we do not want it to be used in that way; at least, there are many of us who do not.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the effect of the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota would be to take the administration of a college out of the hands of the trustees or the local governing body that might be prescribing the courses of study and the rules and regulations of the college, insofar as any military activities may be concerned, and to place the administration solely in the hands of the individual student, and let him prescribe the rules for the institution, insofar as they pertained to military training.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator from Tennessee is correct when he says there is no Federal law compelling military training. The State of Minnesota has a land-grant college which used to have compulsory military training, but by action of the board of regents it was made elective, and I think the same thing was done in Wisconsin. However, I cannot but believe that it is an old practice when Congress appropriates money to impose limitations on how the money shall be used. Congress can prohibit the money's being used for compulsory military training if it so desires. Whether the Congress will do so is another matter.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, we are not imposing any requirement upon a local college. It can determine for itself what it wishes to do. But the Senator from North Dakota desires to have the law so framed that if a college does not choose to do away with its rule of compulsory military service, it can have none of the money we appropriate.

Mr. President, I may never be an angel, but I want to be on the side of the angels. I know I am on the side of the angels when I say that the great majority of the people of this country are in sympathy with what we are trying to do for youth. On the other hand, the subversive groups, those having different ideas of government, those who would change existing institutions in the United States, are all on the side of doing away with the R. O. T. C. and throwing every possible embarrassment in its path.

I do not wish to be on that side. I want to be on the other side, to say to these schools, "Here is the money; do with it as you like; compulsory military education or not, as you please. Here are the funds, and God bless you."

We want these R. O. T. C. units to be maintained, and we are going to provide, so far as we can as a Federal Government, for the machinery and the money to operate them. So I am content.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BENSON. The Senator has made several remarks in very beautiful language about insurrections in colleges and among college students, and has spoken very eloquently—

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have not said a word about insurrections in colleges; I have not even intimated that there are insurrections in colleges. So, if the Senator will confine his remarks to what I have said, I shall be well pleased.

Mr. BENSON. I may have misunderstood the Senator, but I think I understand English. The Senator has also remarked, in very beautiful language, about the need of spending this money in order to train young men in order to give them a patriotic understanding and an American understanding of what is going on in this country.

When we appropriate money for roads, we appropriate money for roads, do we not? When we appropriate money for schools, why should we not appropriate the money for schools, and not for military training, and not to educate Army officers? If we want to educate Army officers, let us do it at West Point, or schools which are dedicated to that purpose, and not compel the State of Minnesota or the State of North Dakota or the State of Montana to compel all the students who attend their colleges in order to take up medicine or agriculture or engineering, also to take a course in military tactics. Whether or not I understood the Senator I think there are other Senators here who understood him as I did.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I merely wish to say that I desire to take the floor when the Senator from New York is through.

Mr. COPELAND. I wish to answer the question, and then I shall yield the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. With reference to giving military training, it seems to me that what has happened in Japan recently ought to be a lesson to the people of the United States. The Japanese have been giving their young people military training, the result of which has been that the military element has taken over the civil functions of the government. That is one reason why, in my judgment, we should not at this time attempt to build up a great military force in the United States.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I wish to say first to the Senator from Vermont that I am not desirous of taking him off the floor. I simply want to call the attention of the Senator from New York, handling the bill, to a training manual put out by the War Department, for the use of young men in the training courses in our colleges. This manual contains some of the most extraordinary language and proposals that I have ever seen in print. This matter has been previously adverted to on the floor of the Senate by the Senator from Nebraska, Mr. NORRIS. It is not a matter of first impression in the Senate. The title of the manual is "Citizenship." It was prepared under the direction of the Chief of Staff of the United States Army, for use in the Reserve Officers' Training Camps. It bears date of November 30, 1928. I wonder why the War Department, which is merely supposed to be training officers, is telling the young men of this country things of this kind. I am quoting:

Public utilities corporations build great hydroelectric plants in one State for distribution of power to many. Railroad, telegraph, and telephone companies invest billions of dollars in properties, and conduct their affairs to the benefit and profit of the Nation. Capital is consolidated and labor employed, farms enriched, cities builded, and our citizens bound together in one cooperative, prosperous, happy union by the magic power of interdependent relationships.

If Sammy Insull had written this manual, he could not have written a more subtle and persuasive argument for the Middle West Utilities Co., which took the whole country to the cleaners after this manual was prepared. Why is the War Department, in a training manual prepared for boys in colleges, trying to promote a very high regard for privately owned utilities?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, in just a moment I am going to leave the floor.

If the Senator from Washington does not like the manuals which are put out by the War Department—and he apparently refers to one of ancient vintage—why does he not propose that they stop printing those manuals? If there are Senators here who do not like the R. O. T. C., why do they not propose to wipe out the appropriations for the R. O. T. C.?

Let us be honest about it. Are we for it? Do we want it to go forward? Has it a useful purpose to serve? Does it tend to promote good citizenship? Is it worth while? If it is not worth while, take it out of the bill! But, so far as I am concerned, so long as I can stand on my feet, I am not going to permit anybody to force upon me the idea that the R. O. T. C. is bad. I know differently. But why do not Senators who become excited over compulsory military training be consistent and say, "We will not have any military service"?

Talk about the conscientious objector! It is not the conscientious objector; it is not the pious man; it is not the occasional religionist, who is seeking to do away with military training in these institutions. There is a well-organized movement in the United States of America to make an attack upon the citizen soldier, upon the National Guard, upon the R. O. T. C., upon the Reserve Officers' Corps.

If we are going to do something for the country such as the Senator from North Dakota desires to do, for heaven's sake, let him move to strike the whole item out of the bill. Then he will be on sound ground. But the occasional cases of conscientious objectors, like occasional swallows, do not make a summer. I have full sympathy for the Senator from North Dakota; but I have no sympathy for the organized movement going on in America against orderly government, against institutions as they now exist, and against the flag itself.

I say to those who wish to be counted that way, "All right; I am going to be 'on the side of the angels.'"

Mr. AUSTIN obtained the floor.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a few remarks that I desire to make about the document I referred to a moment ago, and then I will yield the floor?

Mr. AUSTIN. I shall yield the floor in a very few moments. My remarks will be very few.

I rise to oppose this amendment upon a ground which has not yet been mentioned. Before stating it I wish to say that I should oppose the amendment upon the same grounds that have already been discussed by those who oppose the amendment, namely, that the R. O. T. C. is a very valuable element of education for citizenship in this country. But the particular point I wish to place in the RECORD tonight, while this matter is fresh, and so that it may be considered in connection with what has already occurred here, is that we are under an obligation as a government not to adopt this amendment, for by the adoption of the amendment we should absolutely repudiate, with all the obnoxiousness of that term, a solemn, binding contract with every State of the Union.

The Morrill Act of 1862 made grants of land scrip which could be converted into money for the purpose of establishing and maintaining universities and colleges in every State in the Union upon condition that those colleges should teach military training. I read, from section 4, a part of the section revealing this condition, because it ought to be considered at this time:

Shall be inviolably appropriated by each State—

That is, the fund—

which may take and claim the benefit of this act, to the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the grant of land and land scrip hereby authorized shall be made upon the following conditions, to which, as well as to the provisions hereinbefore contained, the previous assent of the several States shall be signified by legislative acts.

That is only a portion of the Morrill Act of 1862; but the events which followed the passage of that act—namely, legislative acts of every State in the Union accepting the grants upon those conditions—effected a binding obligation upon the several States and the United States which cannot be broken without repudiation.

I have heard much said about compulsory military training. If we are to criticize the inclusion of military tactics in the curriculum of a college and object to that, why not object to the inclusion of French in the curriculum for a bachelor of philosophy degree? If we do not like the idea, why not, by act of the Congress of the United States, exclude from the requirements of a university in the State of Vermont the study of Greek in order to obtain a bachelor of arts degree? As I listened to it, the entire argument seemed to be perfectly absurd that the Congress of the United States should be reaching into the several universities of the country and undertaking to tell them what they shall and shall not include in their prescribed courses.

So far as the freedom of the individual boy is concerned, he does not have to elect a course in any land-grant college which would compel him to perform military service.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. In the State of North Dakota we have a State university and an agricultural college, separate institutions, located at different places. They are the only two institutions which grant a college degree, with the exception of one small church institution in the State. I should like to ask the Senator where the boys on the farm who want to get agricultural training can go to school without going to an agricultural college? If they go to that agricultural college and get a degree, they must take 2 years of compulsory military training.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is but one of the circumstances in the lives of those boys in North Dakota for whom I am exceedingly sorry, if that is their condition. They are not compelled to perform military service. They are not compelled to take military education anywhere in the United States. They are not compelled to go to any land-grant college in North Dakota. I venture the suggestion, although I am talking about something with which I am unfamiliar, that they could get a liberal education in those very schools mentioned by the learned Senator from North Dakota without taking a degree, and that the doors of the State college or the State university would not be closed in their faces. It would be strange if a State university should close its doors to its own boys and girls, and I apprehend we will not find a single State in the Union that does such a thing.

Mr. FRAZIER. There have been a number of cases at the University of Maryland, just a few miles from the National Capital. Two boys were expelled from that university because they refused to take military training. They took the matter into court. One court upheld the boys, and on appeal the university authorities were upheld and the boys were expelled from school. There have been numerous such cases, one in California and one in Massachusetts, which is pending right now.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, read the amendment and see what its scope would be if it were enacted into law, how it would operate upon all the land-grant colleges of the United States by the simple method of undertaking to change the policy of the United States with respect to education which has been in operation since 1862, how it would operate to repudiate the obligation which exists between the States and the Federal Government, and how it would operate to violate all those philanthropies and trusts which have been created on the good faith of the contract between the Federal Government and the several States.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I should like to have the Senator from Vermont point out where there is anything in the law that requires compulsory military training in any land-grant college or any other college of the United States.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have read it into the RECORD.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator from Tennessee just concluded a long discourse proving that there was not any law anywhere. He quoted from the law. He is an eminent lawyer, too. The Secretary of War and the Attorney General have issued their opinions to the effect that military training is not compulsory because of any law enacted by Congress.

Mr. AUSTIN. I believe the Senator from North Dakota and I were not speaking on the same subject. If the Senator will wait a moment, I shall undertake to make clear that to which I was referring. I think the Senator from North Dakota was talking about the obligation of an individual boy. I have not been talking about that. I have been talking about the obligation of the State which accepted land-grant money. When the State accepted the grant from the United States of a sum of money to establish a university, upon the condition that it teach military tactics, it obligated itself to teach military tactics in that university. The university is under compulsion to teach, but the boys of that State or any other States are absolutely free to take it or leave it as they see fit. That is the difference between the Senator from North Dakota and me.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BONE. Is the requirement that the college teach military training in language that would compel every male student in a school to submit to military training? Does the Senator feel that the language is sufficiently broad so that the compulsion would rest upon every male student in such a school?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not believe so. That has not been my opinion and it is not my opinion now.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I do not know that I comprehend the exact issue before us. As I understand, the present law, where the Federal Government grants funds to educational institutions, is such that the authorities of those institutions may or may not make military training compulsory. Is that correct?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is not correct with respect to the Morrill Land Grant College Act.

Mr. WALSH. With respect to that class of colleges, is military training compulsory?

Mr. AUSTIN. It is compulsory upon the States which accepted that grant. The grant was made to the States upon condition that they would appropriate money for the building or maintenance of a college in which military tactics would be taught.

Mr. WALSH. That, of course, is an entirely different proposition from making military tactics a part of the curriculum of a college and to make it compulsory. Is it the Federal Government or is it the State that makes military training compulsory?

Mr. AUSTIN. The only information I have about that subject is that it is the university itself which makes the rule with respect to what degrees require military tactics as an element of the curriculum. It is just like Greek or Latin or French or German being added to other subjects and balancing a course which entitles a candidate to a certain degree.

Mr. WALSH. I think we all agree that is a perfectly proper procedure; but, as I understand the position of the Senator who has proposed the amendment, it is that there are in fact institutions receiving Federal grants who refuse admission to the school of youths who will not take military training. Is that true or not?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not know of any that do so.

Mr. WALSH. We ought to have that fact established first.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; before we adopt any such amendment as the one now pending.

Mr. WALSH. If that fact does not exist, then the amendment is inconsequential.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BENSON. For all practical purposes, is it not a fact that a good many of the land-grant colleges have been laboring under the assumption that military training was compulsory upon their part, and that the Federal Government was insisting that military training or military tactics be not optional with all the male students at their schools? Is it not a fact that high-ranking officers of the United States Army have gone into the States in which land-grant colleges are located, and have done everything in their power to create that impression, and have done everything in their power to disparage efforts to make military training optional rather than compulsory?

LXXX—245

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, those are questions that I cannot answer. Of course, if they are important, they should be examined into by a committee and carefully studied and considered. My objection to this amendment is that it is an effort to hamstring universities and colleges which depend upon this appropriation for the payment of salaries of teachers of military science.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I think the Senator is entirely mistaken. There is nothing in the amendment that would hamstring any college or university.

For instance, take the case of the land-grant college of Wisconsin. There the State legislature passed a law against compulsory military training. Military training is still given at that college, but it is optional with the students whether or not they shall take it.

The same thing is true in the University of Minnesota. Just a year or so ago the State board did away with the compulsory feature as to military training in that school.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, assume that a land-grant college says in its catalog to prospective students, "If you get a degree of bachelor of philosophy from us you will have to take 2 years of military tactics." My friend the learned Senator from North Dakota undoubtedly would assert that military education was compulsory in that college. Another might see the matter in a different light, and say, "Oh, no; if it is true that in that institution one could take a degree of doctor of medicine without having military tactics, it does not come within the scope of this amendment."

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. I do not see any necessity, in the matter of appropriations, for making military training compulsory in universities.

I went to the University of Missouri and graduated therefrom. I did not take military training, although I was fond of military drill, because I had already had it in high school. But I graduated from the University of Missouri, as many others did in my time, without taking compulsory military training; and I think probably we were just as good citizens as though we had had compulsory military training.

Why should it be necessary now, 20 years later, to say that a land-grant university shall not receive an appropriation in aid of military training unless it makes military training compulsory on all students? I might want to send my boy to the University of Missouri, where I myself graduated, and might not want him to have military training. Why should not I, as a citizen of Missouri contributing by my taxes to the support of that great educational institution, be permitted to send my boy there without having him compelled by a relatively small appropriation by Congress to undergo military training?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, that is the reverse of the situation here. Here is an attempt by Congress to coerce these universities. Here is an attempt by Congress to say to the States of the Union, "Your land-grant colleges will have to quit requiring, as a part of the curriculum of any one of these degrees, military tactics." That I regard as a repudiation of the obligation between the United States and the several States established by the Morrill Land-Grant College Act, and the acceptance of it by the solemn acts of the legislatures of the several States.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BENSON. The amendment does not attempt to do any such thing. The amendment merely states that the taking of military tactics at the university or college shall be optional and not compulsory with the students.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, let me read the amendment and see if it states any such thing.

On page 60, line 14, after the word "corps", it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used for or toward the support of any compulsory military course or military training in any civil school or college, or for the pay of any officer, enlisted man, or employee at any civil school or college where a military course or military training is compulsory; but nothing herein shall be construed as applying to essentially military schools or colleges.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. That amendment certainly does not prohibit the Morrill Act from functioning in its full blossom as it was originally passed by Congress and originally intended, which was, as it was in my day in the university, as I have just said, to have a voluntary system of military training in the universities. The amendment does prohibit the use of the land-grant appropriations by Congress as a fulcrum to compel State colleges and State universities to put in a system of compulsory military education.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, let me finish my remarks.

What could a land-grant college do without military officers? Nothing. A land-grant college founded upon the condition of teaching military tactics must have military officers to teach military tactics.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again? I do not wish continually to interrupt him.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have not finished my thought, but I am perfectly willing to yield.

Mr. CLARK. I shall not interrupt the Senator again; but I again suggest that there is no limitation in this amendment on the payment of Army officers or Army enlisted men or noncommissioned officers assigned to duty in land-grant colleges which do not make military training compulsory. The whole point is as to whether the land-grant college shall make the training compulsory or leave it voluntary; and there is absolutely no limitation in this amendment which prevents any land-grant college from setting up any voluntary system of military training it may see fit to set up.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a college that cannot prescribe its courses and say what shall be taken in a certain curriculum is no college at all. It is a hybrid institution. There may be such an institution somewhere in the world, but I never heard of it.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. FRAZIER. There are many institutions that do not require military training.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is begging the question; and I am not talking about those institutions. I do not condemn them for not teaching military tactics. That remark is entirely beside the question.

Mr. FRAZIER. There are a great many institutions which have military training but do not make it one of the subjects in the curriculum that must be taken in order to graduate.

Mr. AUSTIN. Very well. They are not land-grant colleges.

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, yes!

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, no!

Mr. FRAZIER. I beg the pardon of the Senator. I do not know how many there are; but at least in Wisconsin and Minnesota, with which I am familiar, there are land-grant colleges that teach military training as an elective course.

Mr. CLARK. I am a graduate of one.

Mr. AUSTIN. And they are land-grant colleges?

Mr. FRAZIER. They are land-grant colleges.

Mr. AUSTIN. No State can abandon the teaching of military science in its land-grant college without violating the terms of the grant made to it under the Morrill law of 1862.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I promised not to ask the Senator to yield to me again; but on that point I should like his indulgence for just one moment to say that I am a graduate of a university which in my day had voluntary military training, and had a cadet corps of some twelve hundred.

But there were also perhaps a thousand students who were not members of the cadet corps. I went through the university in good standing and graduated without being a member of the cadet corps. I did not feel I was any less a good citizen or good student because I did not belong to the cadet corps.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to reflect upon the Senator from Missouri or his university in any way.

Mr. CLARK. Certainly not.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have great regard for him and for his university also. I am undertaking to express an opinion upon the law, and that is all. If I have stated something in haste which sounded bad to the Senator, I hope he will, in reading it in the morning, find that it is not so bad as it sounded.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I would never suspect the Senator from Vermont of saying anything unkind to me personally.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. As I understand the case of the land-grant college, the grant from the Federal Government to the institution is dependent upon the institution maintaining a course in military science in the school. As to whether or not the course shall be compulsory depends upon the board of regents or the board of trustees, or the other governing body of the institution. The effect of the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota would be to enact into law the proposition that the trustees, or the governing body of the institution, should not have control over the curriculum as it related to military training, but that each individual student should have a right to say whether or not he would take military training.

Mr. FRAZIER rose.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I will state my views about that matter, and then I will yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

The object of the amendment, if it has any object at all, is to bring pressure upon the trustees of land-grant colleges to take military tactics out of the requirements for a bachelor of arts degree, for a bachelor of philosophy degree, or for any other degree granted by the college upon prescribed courses, and just hang the military science course up in the air. Whether that is a compliance with the Morrill Act I will submit to any reasonable lawyer in the Senate. Is a college, is a State, which accepts a grant under the Morrill law, and which takes out of the curriculum the subject of military tactics, complying with the conditions of the grant? I doubt it.

It is my opinion, from a study of the amendment, that its adoption would affect all land-grant colleges injuriously. Any person who claimed that the payment of salaries to military officers who were teaching military tactics at a land-grant college was contrary to the terms of the amendment would probably have some ground to stand on.

While I have been trying to express my views, three or four Senators have expressed the idea that a curriculum is compulsory which requires, for the granting of a degree, the teaching of military science; that is, that it is compulsory to a certain extent. On the other hand, one might say, in order to get this amendment through, "Oh, no; that is not compulsory, if a student can go there—as he can in most of the land-grant colleges—and take a course under another curriculum which does not include military science."

What I say is that in order for a State or a State university to comply with the Morrill Land Grant College Act, there must be at least one course in the university which requires military tactics as a part of the course, and as a condition without which a degree in the college will not be granted. Therefore, I say that this amendment attacks all the land-grant colleges; the amendment is contrary to the educational policy of the United States and of the several States since 1862, and it is in violation of the spirit of the founding of the colleges and the subsequent philanthropies which were made to the colleges under the conditions of the Morrill Act. For that reason, I think the amendment should not be adopted.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I cannot quite follow the argument of the Senator from Vermont. Of course, I am not a lawyer. He intimates that he will submit his argument to any reasonable lawyer on the floor of the Senate. There are some of us who are not lawyers.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, there is nothing invidious in that. The reference was to a legal question. I expect that perhaps the Senator from North Dakota could answer very much better than any other lawyer in the Senate.

Mr. FRAZIER. I am not a lawyer, so I ask the Senator not to call me another lawyer. I am not qualified in that class. I wish to say, however, that I happen to know that some of the land-grant colleges require military training—that is, the teaching of military tactics—if the students attend in the regular courses during a term of years. It is required that they take military training, even though they are taking the first 2 years of law in their college course, or the first 2 years of medicine in their college course. The students are required, if they are to graduate, to take a military course.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, such facts ought to be brought out in hearings before some Senate committee, at which they could be carefully investigated, before any such drastic piece of legislation as that contained in the amendment is adopted.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, let me assure the Senate, and particularly the chairman of the subcommittee having the bill in charge, that my interest in the subject arises solely out of the fact that I think military training should be optional with the student. That is why I asked the Senator from Vermont whether, in his judgment, the law was so written that it compelled every student to take military training whether he wanted to or not.

Mr. President, I go back again to this remarkable document of the War Department, issued in 1928, and which was widely circulated, and went into the schools and became the basis of the training of these young fellows compelled to take military training.

I happen to be one of those western folks who believe in public ownership of power. I have given 20 years of my professional life to a battle for public ownership of power in my State, and I confess my great astonishment when I discovered that the War Department, for some reason, instead of teaching military tactics, was teaching the young fellows in the universities that public ownership of power was very bad.

Frankly, I was unable to see the connection between military tactics and the question of whether or not the people of any State or community might own their own power systems. I am at a loss to understand why the Chief of Staff of the United States Army is so desperately anxious, apparently, to promote the interests of the Power Trust of this country by language that was very persuasive and engaging. He refers so touchingly to private utility corporations building great plants that render magnificent service to the people of this country. What, forsooth, does that have to do with military tactics? How does that teach the young fellow to handle a rifle, or a bayonet, or a machine gun, or a field piece? But the War Department finds in the fact that my city or some other city owns its own power system some dark or gloomy or sinister thing.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator is a member of the Munitions Committee and has undoubtedly been familiar with the very intimate connection between the great manufacturers of munitions and the War Department and also the Navy Department. Does he think it strange that some ideas from the Du Ponts might have trickled over to the War Department and been passed out to those engaged in the compulsory education imposed on our schools?

Mr. BONE. Unhappily, what my good friend the Senator from Missouri says about this thing is true. The communion of spirit between the War Department and some of the big munitions "boys" is a very touching thing. I admit that I cannot understand why these two should be united in the holy bonds of some sort of wedlock, but apparently they are.

Now, Mr. President, I go further and find other economic doctrines that the War Department is teaching the young fellows in the Reserve officers' training camps. I suggest that there is no connection between what is here set forth in this manual and the proper use of a bayonet or a machine gun, and I am wondering why they go into the field of economics when teaching young men to be Army officers.

The Chief of Staff says:

Power of consumption is based upon the ability to purchase and pay for the desired commodities. In America the employee receives 72 percent and the employer 28 percent of the income of industry, constituting a range of wealth distribution which fixes our living standards at the highest point known in the world.

Assume that it be true, which I do not, may I ask what that has to do with the teaching of a young fellow to shoot a cannon or handle a rifle? Is the War Department defending the status quo—the trimming of labor by big business interests of this country, or incidentally the bilking, fleecing, and trimming of both labor and consumers, with which process we are all familiar?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I think the Senator is mistaken. I contend there is no connection between the kind of instruction that is being given out and the use of a bayonet. For instance, we know that in a certain foreign country there is a dictatorship which employs what is known as the goose-step, and which takes young boys from their youth up and trains them in economic matters and governmental matters in behalf of the dictatorship for the ultimate purpose of using them as cannon fodder and personally to use the bayonets. It may be that the author of these expressions in the War Department had some such ideas as that in mind.

Mr. BONE. I find myself in such happy and hearty agreement most of the time with my good friend, the Senator from Missouri, that I am happy upon this occasion to again agree with him. I know that the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] suggested that this manual was issued several years ago, but, Mr. President, I have not seen a single repudiation of this astounding document from the War Department. So far as I know, it is still being used; so far as I know, it is still good War Department dogma. It is the credo of the War Department yet, so far as I know and you know, Mr. President.

But let us go ahead with a further examination. I shall be through in just a moment:

America has amassed unbelievable wealth which is being spent for the good of mankind.

I suspect if we went out and took a poll of the great army of unemployed in this country we would not find very hearty agreement with that statement. Of course, when that statement is put across and firmly implanted in the mind of the young student, that is supposed to make a good soldier out of him!

Now listen to this gem! This—if I may employ the vulgar vernacular of my small boy—is a peach:

A surfeit of food, clothes, comfortable homes, and much time for idleness can easily become the first step to the overthrow of civilization.

If any man in the Senate ever heard a more astounding suggestion than that, I should like to have him rise to his feet right now and proclaim it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I am not certain that I correctly understood the Senator. Would the Senator mind reading that sentence again?

Mr. BONE. I want my able friend the Senator from Missouri to get this, because it is surely a gem of "purest ray serene." It must have taken one with a Jovian brow to produce a thing like this, because the man who wrote it is deliberately saying that too much food for the hungry and too much clothing for the use of those who are without might be a bad thing for them and the country. For God's sake, do not give them too much in the way of good food and clothing, and in the way of homes, because that might be subversive; that might overthrow the Government. I read it again:

A surfeit of food, clothes, comfortable homes, and much time for idleness can easily become the first step to the overthrow of civilization.

Mr. President, I submit that if that statement is true our civilization is safe—oh, it is safer than anybody here suspects. Millions in this country know no possibility of realizing a surfeit; the sad army of the poor cannot even get enough to sustain their poor bodies in even a semblance of decency.

I pass to the next gem in this document. Democracy is defined, and I want my colleagues to listen carefully to this definition of "democracy" by our War Department:

A government of the masses; results in mobocracy; attitude toward property is communistic, negating property rights; attitude toward law is that the majority shall regulate.

Oh, what an astounding proposition. How un-American that the majority should by some awful mischance have anything to say about how the rules of the game are made. Quoting again:

Democracy is the direct rule of the people, and has been repeatedly tried without success.

Under the representative form of government there is no place for direct action (by the people). The inherent characteristic of a republic is government by representation. The people are permitted to do only two things; they may vote once every 4 years for the executive and once in 2 years for members of the legislative body.

One might well imagine, Mr. President, that the War Department sits in sackcloth and ashes and rends and tears its garments all the time because the people are even permitted to do that much.

Democracy—

My father spent nearly 4 years with a rifle on his shoulder, and he almost died from wounds in a military prison upholding democracy in this country. I say as a Member of the Senate that I do not like suggestions from the War Department of this country that democracy, which my father was willing to die to preserve, is a foul and noxious thing.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator think that in conformity with the Morrill Act, adopted on the motion of a great patriot back in the sixties, that if you send your boy to school in Washington, or I send my boy to school in Missouri, to a land-grant college, which most of the universities are, he should be compelled to be instructed in that sort of doctrine?

Mr. BONE. No, Mr. President. That is precisely the point. I believe that, within reason, a boy should be permitted to elect what he wants to take. There is something fundamentally sound and sane in that sort of a proposition. If the school wants to teach military training, all well and good, but they ought not to compel a boy to take military training if he does not want it, and then when he is compelled to take military training, be taught the subversive and anarchistic doctrine that democracy is a foul and filthy thing that ought to be abolished from the earth.

Oh, Mr. President, that is not all:

Several dangerous experiments have been proposed, such as the initiative, referendum, recall, and the election of judges.

Here we find the War Department teaching the young officers under this compulsory training that it is a bad thing to allow common folks to elect judges. They ought to be appointed for life! Does any Senator here agree that the initiative and the referendum and the election of judges by you poor human beings who sit here is bad business? Senators ought not to be permitted to vote for judges. Some fellow above you ought to appoint them for life, so that they can later snap their fingers at you and play ducks and drakes with the laws and the Constitution if they so elect; so they can be so far removed from the salutary force of public opinion as to be wholly immune from its wholesome effects.

Departures from constitutional principles threaten to impair the efficiency of our representative form of government, and if continued, will ultimately destroy it.

Direct action—

That is through the initiative and referendum—and Government ownership—and government ownership should be avoided as perils that threaten the very foundation of the Republic.

Get this!—

Mr. President, again I ask my brethren in the Senate what right, moral right, or any other kind of right, the War Department has to arrogate to itself the right to teach that sort of philosophy to my boy or any other boy in this country under the guise of military training. What business is it of the Chief of Staff that the people in my State want to own a power plant? This thing was circulated all over the country in these schools. There can be no justification for teaching that kind of stuff.

That is a damnable thing, and it ought to be repudiated and spurned by a great representative body such as this.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. Certainly.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Did the Senator state who was the author of that document?

Mr. BONE. This document was issued by the War Department under date of November 30, 1928. It was prepared under the direction of the Chief of Staff, and if he had called in Sammie Insull, and Mr. Doherty of Cities Service, and the Electric Bond & Share officials and the National City Bank, they could not have written a more complete and more subtle defense of the Power Trust and the American plunderbund than is here presented as "educational matter." What about the right of the Government to compel a boy to absorb this sort of subversive Power Trust training and swallow this sort of so-called education?

No boy should be compelled to swallow this kind of doctrine from the United States Army or be fired from school. If a State wants to own a public plant how will you gentlemen justify yourselves? You Senators deliberately voted to build some of the great Government power plants, did you not? Yes, by a large majority this very Senate voted to bring into being Muscle Shoals, Boulder Dam, and other great public plants, and yet here is one of your creatures, the War Department, saying you are guilty of doing a thing that threatens the very foundation of the Republic. Is it a pleasant experience to have the War Department tell you that you are bona-fide Communists and that what you have done after mature deliberation will overthrow your Government? That is what the War Department did in this document. I wonder what you think of this sort of thing.

It is said that Government ownership of power plants will destroy the Republic. I ask Senators again to remember that one sentence. Government ownership of power is to be avoided because it will overthrow and destroy the Government. You gentlemen sit here calmly and hear me read this document and you do not rise to repudiate it. You are the Anarchists and the Communists who voted for these things, according to the War Department. Is not that entertaining. You should go home tonight and have a little fun contemplating your awful action in voting for Boulder Dam and Muscle Shoals and other power projects, because if this principle continues to live we will probably have no virtue left, and the foundation stones of the Republic will crumble and rot and the Republic itself pass away.

If the War Department wants to teach military tactics, let it teach military tactics and not issue documents which would rank high as Power Trust propaganda.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, so far as the War Department appropriation bill is concerned, it is apparent we cannot complete its consideration this afternoon. Accordingly I ask that it may go over until tomorrow.

EMPLOYMENT OF COUNSEL BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE LOBBYING ACTIVITIES

Mr. BARKLEY. The senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] had intended to introduce a joint resolution which he had prepared. I offer it in his name and ask that it go over until tomorrow. Tomorrow the Senator from Alabama will attempt to have it considered by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the joint resolution will be received and lie on the table.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 234) authorizing the Senate Special Committee on Investigation of Lobbying Activities to employ counsel, in connection with certain legal proceedings, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and ordered to lie on the table.

SUSPENSION OF ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 3669. I have talked with the majority leader, Mr. ROBINSON, about it, and he said there would be no objection to having the bill considered this afternoon.

The bill is similar in form to one which passed during the last session and relates to the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims. It has been reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining. It is exceedingly important, if it is to be passed, that it should be passed as speedily as possible.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 3669. It is a bill to suspend assessments upon the mining claims during the coming year, except as to the payment of income taxes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3669) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska, which had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the provision of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which requires on each mining claim located, and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor to be performed or improvements aggregating such amount to be made each year, be, and the same is hereby, suspended as to all mining claims in the United States during the year beginning at 12 o'clock meridian July 1, 1935, and ending at 12 o'clock meridian July 1, 1936: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply in the case of any claimant not entitled to exemption from the payment of a Federal income tax for the taxable year 1935: Provided further, That every claimant of any such mining claim, in order to obtain the benefits of this act, shall file, or cause to be filed, in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded, on or before 12 o'clock meridian July 1, 1936, a notice of his desire to hold said mining claim under this act, which notice shall state that the claimant, or claimants, were entitled to exemption from the payment of a Federal income tax for the taxable year 1935: And provided further, That such suspension of assessment work shall not apply to more than 6 lode-mining claims held by the same person, nor to more than 12 lode-mining claims held by the same partnership, association, or corporation: And provided further, That such suspension of assessment work shall not apply to more than 6 placer-mining claims not to exceed 120 acres (in all) held by the same person, nor to more than 12 placer-mining claims not to exceed 240 acres (in all) held by the same partnership, association, or corporation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States."

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters may be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that nominations in the Army may be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc. That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, March 18, 1936, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate March 17 (legislative day of Feb. 24), 1936

APPOINTMENTS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

Gladden Robert Hamilton to be first lieutenant, Medical Corps.

Robert LaTourrette Cavanaugh to be first lieutenant, Medical Corps.

William Congdon Harrison to be first lieutenant, Medical Corps.

APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY

Maj. John Lester Scott to Finance Department.

First Lt. Edward Cassel Reber to Ordnance Department.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

Edwin Colyer McNeil to be colonel, Judge Advocate General's Department.

Augustine Warner Robins to be colonel, Air Corps.

Emil Pehr Pierson to be colonel, Cavalry.

Clark Porter Chandler to be colonel, Cavalry.

John Walton Lang to be colonel, Infantry.

Henry Harley Arnold to be colonel, Air Corps.

Floyd Hatfield to be lieutenant colonel, Infantry.

Charles Lewis Clifford to be lieutenant colonel, Cavalry.

Oscar Otto Kuentz to be lieutenant colonel, Corps of Engineers.

Earl Landreth to be lieutenant colonel, Infantry.

William Edward Raab Coveil to be lieutenant colonel, Corps of Engineers.

Joseph Dogan Arthur, Jr., to be lieutenant colonel, Corps of Engineers.

Edwin Rudolph Petzing to be major, Signal Corps.

Richard Carvel Mallonee to be major, Field Artillery.

Douglas Johnston to be major, Air Corps.

Lawrence Pradere Hickey to be major, Air Corps.

Severn Teackle Wallis, Jr., to be major, Field Artillery.

William May to be major, Infantry.

Samuel Tankersley Williams to be major, Infantry.

Howland Allan Gibson to be major, Medical Corps.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MARCH 17, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, our light and our salvation, whose days are without beginning and without end, grant that by Thy holy inspiration we, the servants of our Republic who are joined together in this undertaking, may know what we ought to do, and that by Thy grace we may be enabled to perform the same. Grant us, we humbly beseech Thee, such prosperity as Thou seest to be good for us, and make us to abound in such works as may be pleasing unto Thee. With clear vision and earnestness of purpose may we stand looking into the day expectantly, ready for its duties and responsibilities. Believing in Thee and in our homeland, O Lord God, let us have a heart for any service. Unto Thy name be eternal praises, through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the disposition of the special orders for today—the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER], 30 minutes, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], 10 minutes—that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman mean today?

Mr. SNELL. That is my request, after these gentlemen have concluded their remarks.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman knows we have the Private Calendar today and a great many Members are deeply interested. I have had serious complaints about not being able to have the omnibus bills considered. I wonder if the gentleman could not postpone his request.

Mr. SNELL. There are certain reasons why we desire to have the opportunity today, and considering the fact that Members on the gentleman's side of the aisle have been granted 40 minutes I do not think it is unreasonable that we should ask for 20 minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I do not think it is unreasonable. I regret that we cannot go along right now with the Private Calendar. I am just suggesting the difficulties to the gentleman from New York. I do not want to be unfair, and it would appear to be unfair, of course, to refuse the gentleman from Massachusetts 20 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Yes; it would be unfair inasmuch as the gentleman's side has 40 minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall not object to the gentleman's request, under all the circumstances, but I am very anxious to go ahead with the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the bill (H. R. 9863) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman expect to bring the bill up tomorrow?

Mr. WOODRUM. If it comes from the Senate. The Senate has to act on it first. I understand they will take action today. It is the intention to call it up the first thing tomorrow.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there going to be a reduction in this bill from what it was last year?

Mr. WOODRUM. I will give the gentleman full information tomorrow. If the gentleman will stick around tomorrow, I will tell him.

Mr. RICH. We would like to see the bill brought in with some reduction.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10919), making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, together with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, request a conference with the Senate, and ask that the Chair appoint managers on the part of the House.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this bill comes back here with practically all of the cuts that our committee made, and which this House approved, restored to the bill. I am in hopes the conferees will stand by the position of the House to the limit and try to save some money for the Treasury. [Applause.]

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. FIESINGER. Is the gentleman speaking about the War Department bill?

Mr. TABER. No; the Treasury-Post Office bill.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, may I submit the observation, in connection with what the gentleman from New York has said, that, speaking as one conferee, I am in hearty agreement with his position at least as to the main items in the bill. As a Member of Congress interested in economy, I am positively opposed to the way the other body has loaded this bill with amendments that drain the Federal Treasury.

Mr. TABER. I appreciate that.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I call the attention of the gentleman and the conferees to the elimination of the provision made in the House bill for the ocean-mail contracts. A most serious situation will develop if this cut is made. There is a little under $85,000,000 due from persons who have borrowed from the construction-loan fund. In addition, there is grave danger that the business of these lines will be materially interfered with. The situation is most serious. I know it was stated in the Senate that this could be restored in the deficiency bill. This is possible if a subsidy bill is not passed; but, in the meantime, with the chaotic condition that will exist, with the fear on the shippers that the lines are to be put out of business or thrown into bankruptcy, there will be a tendency of business to go to the foreign lines, and it will be an aid and comfort to the foreign lines. It will be destructive of the American merchant marine.

I feel that this House was right in providing this appropriation. It was justified in obeying the existing law and carrying out contracts that have been made. The President has the power to cancel these contracts if he sees fit to do so. In my opinion, he has exercised wise judgment so far in not exercising that power.

I believe to cut out this provision at this time would imperil the existence of the merchant marine, encourage foreign commerce, turn shippers to foreign flags, and send many of these lines into bankruptcy.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. LUDLOW. I assure the gentleman, who is one of the very ablest champions of an adequate merchant marine, that all of the facts and circumstances he mentions will be given very careful consideration.

Mr. BLAND. I am sure they will be by the gentleman. I am simply reminding the conferees about the gravity of the situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. LUDLOW, BOYLAN, GRANFIELD, O'NEAL, TABER, and McLEOD.

CONSTRUCTION OF A 300-TON AIRSHIP FOR MILITARY SERVICE

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, the bill H. R. 10186, which I filed January 14, entitled "Construction of a 300-ton airship for military service", has attracted tremendous interest, as expressed by Members of Congress and by the personnel of several Government departments. It was also widely reported in the press of America.

This bill should attract attention, for with the demonstration of this airship there may be constructed, for commercial service, a great fleet of such airships that can be designed to be converted to military use for the protection of our country. With 50 of these airships we may have the best defense of any nation in the world. With 50 of these airships we would have 50 well-armed "airports" high up in the skies, and these "airports", with their squadrons of military planes, could be moved at 100 miles per hour to be concentrated whenever danger threatens.

With 50 of these airships we may protect our cities, our munitions factories, and our vital transportation lines from bombing attack, or with them we could send a group of a thousand military airplanes to any part of the world, a concentrated force no other nation may withstand, and in doing this we would endanger the lives of only 5,000 men.

We may risk the sum of $6,000,000 to prove the value of the first airship, and we may have to accept the judgment of our American engineers that this airship structure is safer, stronger, and more adaptable for airship service than is the German Zeppelin frame, upon which the Akron and Macon were constructed. We may have to recognize that the American engineers who have designed and constructed our great suspension bridges know the type of structures that will best stand aerodynamic stresses, and we may have to risk $6,000,000 on their judgment. It is worth it.

Because we have accepted the advice of Zeppelin engineers and have lost two airships, shall we continue to follow their advice and ignore our American engineers? Are we not warranted in at least showing our faith in American construction methods by giving our engineers a trial in airship construction?

The chief difference between the Respass airship and the Zeppelin airship is that Respass employs a suspension-bridge type frame and the Zeppelin employs an arch-bridge type frame. The suspension bridge is 40 percent lighter in weight than the arch bridge, and in a structure for an airship, where great strength and light weight is most important, the suspension bridge should be the superior type.

An airship requires a frame which must be strong and dependable, but must be of light weight. Upon this frame a cover is attached, and gas bags, as balloons, are installed to lift the airship; engines are positioned to propel the airship, and control means are provided to direct its course.

The Graf Zeppelin has demonstrated the commercial value of the airship, and the operations of the Akron and Macon have indicated that the airship might be constructed to be valuable in military service. But the Zeppelin construction may not be the last word in engineering improvement, for the same type of construction has been followed in the Zeppelin airship for 30 years. Are we not warranted in believing American ingenuity and engineering skill can make such improvement?

There have been some comments expressed as to the possibility of constructing so large an airship to be safe, to provide the speed of 120 miles per hour, to carry 20 military airplanes, with sufficient armament for its protection, a crew of 100, with military supplies and fuel for long flights.

In America we construct suspension bridges that are several thousand feet long, and engineers who designed many of these bridges have stated they would accept a commission to design and supervise the construction of a suspension-bridge type airship frame of any size that may be desired. These engineers, having full knowledge, so far as aerodynamics is now known, of the stresses this structure must withstand, would design and build accordingly.

The total lift of an airship depends chiefly upon the volume of lifting gas in its interior balloons. Ten million cubic feet of helium gas would lift 300 tons. In a Respass airship of 10,000,000 cubic feet helium gas capacity approximately 250,000 pounds may be the fixed weight of the structure, cover, gas bags, equipment, and so forth, leaving approximately 350,000 pounds of what is termed useful weight.

This useful weight may be apportioned to provide engines, fuel, ballast, crews' quarters, and supplies, with quarters for passengers, mail, and freight when in commercial service, or for carrying airplanes, armament, military equipment, and supplies when employed in military service.

The speed of an airship is controlled chiefly by the total of its engine horsepower in proportion to the displacement of the airship. A sufficient part of the 175 tons useful load can be allotted to engines to provide a speed of 120 miles per hour, and the suspension bridge frame structure will provide the strength to withstand such speed.

To transport and service 20 military airplanes is also possible through an allotment of a part of the useful load. The Akron and Macon each demonstrated the practicability of transporting several airplanes, which were released and taken back into the airship hundreds of times. The airplanes contemplated in the bill H. R. 10186 would be the most improved type of military planes that may be redesigned without ground-landing gear, and saving approximately 33 percent of the weight, thus such airplanes may be faster and a better military unit than the planes that are required to land on the ground.

The armament of this airship may be rapid-fire guns of larger caliber and much longer range than guns carried by airplanes. These guns may be placed to fully cover all angles of approach to the airship and with the airship operating at 20,000 feet altitude its guns may reach an airplane at 30,000 feet altitude. The Respass suspension bridge structure of elastic steel cable is capable of withstanding the shock of larger guns if required.

There should be no experiment in building the Respass suspension-bridge-frame airship, for it is actually a most highly perfected "self-anchored" suspension bridge. The Brooklyn Bridge, at New York, which has given nearly 70 years' service, is a worthy demonstration of the suspension-bridge structure, and engineers of national and international reputation, who have designed and constructed our great bridges, both the arch-frame and the suspension types, have endorsed the use of the suspension-bridge structure for airships.

Whatever has been proven practical and of value, as demonstrated by the Zeppelin airships, is equally practical with the Respass airship. They both have gas cells that lift, engines that propel, and controls for guidance. The substitution of a different type of frame will not change these necessary features. Thus the Respass airship is no more an experiment than the Zeppelin airship or the suspension bridge. As compared with the Zeppelin, however, the Respass airship has the following advantages:

- First. Greater strength and safety.
- Second. Greater inherent strength.
- Third. Increased length of life.
- Fourth. Decreased maintenance costs.
- Fifth. More efficient use of material.
- Sixth. Reduction in cost of construction.
- Seventh. Reduction in time of construction.
- Eighth. Ease of construction.
- Ninth. Simplicity, accuracy, and definiteness of calculation.
- Tenth. The stresses in this airship never reverse, thereby removing all fear of failure in the hull through fatigue and crystallization.

Eleventh. The net pay load will be unusually high, facilitating economical commercial operation.

These advantages were enumerated in an analysis and report by Messrs. Robinson and Steinman, consulting engineers, 117 Liberty Street, New York City, upon their examination of the plans for a Respass airship, 147 feet in diameter by 785 feet long, that was designed in accordance with specifications prepared by the Bureau of Aeronautics of the Navy Department for the construction of the Akron and Macon. Messrs. Robinson and Steinman are internationally recognized as authorities on arch frame and suspension-bridge structure, and the accuracy of their analysis has been subsequently endorsed by many of the world's leading structural and aerodynamic engineers.

There are several airship bills now presented for action by Congress. Congress may be also asked to experiment further with Zeppelin type airships constructed in the United States. It also may be suggested we should order Zeppelin airships from Germany. One bill in Congress provides limited airship construction and experimentation over a period of several years before any new type of American airships be constructed. This bill indicates another airship of the Akron and Macon type may be constructed.

I feel we should have American-designed airships as soon as they may be constructed. If we do any further "experimenting", we should do it now with large airships that may demonstrate their value for extending our overseas commerce and for military service if the need should arise for such use. These airships should be fully insured for our protection.

I think the Zeppelin design airships can be improved by our American engineers. Such improvement may result from the acceptance by Congress of the bill H. R. 2744 for commercial airship construction and operation, and the bill H. R. 10186 for the construction of a 300-ton military airship.

The inventor of the suspension bridge airship is Mr. Roland B. Respass, who is a southerner now residing in my district in Rhode Island. An inventor by profession, Mr. Respass has been successful to the extent he has been able to personally expend a very large sum, received from other inventions, in the design of the suspension-bridge airship, the construction and test of models to establish the definiteness of this structure, in employing American engineers of international repute to study this type of airship design and in an effort to secure governmental support.

He has followed the unusual procedure of determining the value of his invention before announcing it publicly. If Congress had given Mr. Respass a hearing 12 months ago I feel Congress may have then approved the bill H. R. 2744, and we might now have two American airships as large as the new Zeppelin L. Z. 129 either completed or nearing completion. When the new Zeppelin visits our country this summer we should remember this.

Shall we continue to ignore the present opportunity to establish a major form of rapid transportation, with which we may extend our overseas trade, and may establish a military defense with which only 5,000 trained men may become an unbeatable force in the defense of our Nation.

I urge my colleagues in Congress to study and to actively support the bills H. R. 2744 and H. R. 10186. Thus we may begin airship construction without further delay. We need new industries to supply work for our surplus labor and this may be part of the answer.

If further information as to the commercial value of large airships is desired, I recommend a study of the data supplied by the Honorable ERNEST LUNDEEN in the House of Representatives February 11, 1936, as published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date.

CAN WE AFFORD ROOSEVELT'S NEW DEAL?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address which I delivered last Friday afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert the following radio address by me March 13, 1936:

Friends of the radio world, it is a pleasure to speak to you at this hour under the auspices of the National Broadcasting Co. This feature program entitled "Congress Speaks" was initiated a little more than a year ago. It was my privilege to be the first to address the radio world when this program was inaugurated. I come to you today, a little more than 3 years after the present administration assumed power, to ask you the simple question, Can we afford Roosevelt's New Deal? This, I believe, is pertinent at this time in view of the outspoken opposition of our enemies, who would have us believe that the accomplishments of the present administration are not commensurate with expenditures involved.

One of the questions heard most often on the floor of the House today is, Where are you going to get the money? This is a simple question and can be answered simply. In the end the people must pay for benefits received. Obviously some will have to pay more than others, but this is as it should be, for, after all, the wealth of this great Nation belongs to all the people, and all the people should share it. Just and equitable taxes can be levied requiring those who have an undue amount of worldly goods to share their part of the burden of caring for the less fortunate.

Answering the inquiry: Where are you going to get the money?—by saying that the people will pay for the benefits the people have received and are now receiving, there remains but one proposition to consider when we ask: Can we afford Roosevelt's New Deal? And that is: Do the accomplishments of the present administration balance the expenditures? I come to you today as a humble champion of the great man in the White House, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and I say, without any hesitancy and without fear of contradiction, that when we carefully and honestly survey the benefits that have come to us through the efforts of the present administration we must admit that we can afford Roosevelt's New Deal.

We must conclude that every part of the great revitalizing process so ably prosecuted by President Roosevelt has been in an effort to restore this Nation, to rout poverty, to stabilize agricultural products, to stimulate the wheels of industry, to solve the monetary problems, to provide social security, and to accomplish many other purposes definitely antidepression.

Ladies and gentlemen, when the present administration assumed control of our Government we were in the midst of the most terrible depression the American people had ever known. Our domestic trade was stagnant, our foreign commerce was paralyzed, our factories were closed, our mines were shut down, and 12,000,000 idle men and women, who were willing, able, and anxious to work, were out of employment. This condition existed with our land teeming with abundance, with more corn, more wheat, more cotton, more manufactured articles—more of almost everything necessary to sustain human life and contribute to human comforts than was ever known before in all the history of mankind—yet bread lines were stretching down the streets of our cities, men and women and children from the best families of our country were forced to eat the bread of charity or beg from door to door, people who will not get the chill of humiliation out of their blood for two or three generations. Our farmers—forced to sell their crops below the cost of production, corn for less than one-fourth its normal value, cotton for less than one-third, and wheat for the lowest figures it had reached in 500 years—saw their lands and stocks swept away for debts, and their homes sold for taxes that were levied when their crops were bringing normal value, and which they had a moral right to pay with the same price dollars used at the time these obligations were incurred.

Ladies and gentlemen, behind every cloud there is a silver lining.

The history of the world commits itself to a distinct, self-evident tradition that in times of great national emergency there has invariably arisen a forthright leader able to command the loyal obedience of his countrymen by the sheer genius of his personality and the profoundness of his program. Since the birth of our Nation, tracing our progress by the landmarks of critical emergencies overcome, we can pause and reflect in the security that America has, without fail, been equal to the exigency of every occasion. Whether it has been righteous reform or crucial revolution, there has always emerged some American who, by masterful precision, patriotic compassion, and keenness of intellect, has wrested calm out of chaos and order out of confusion. Whether it has been "taxation without representation", "imperialistic infringement" of other nations, "secession from the Union", "autocracy or democracy", or war against economic bondage, as now engages our attention, America has steadfastly been able to produce on every occasion "the man of the hour." Today that man is Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Realizing that the accomplishments to date have been made under the direct leadership and by the forethought of President Roosevelt, it is well to consider here our progress under his banner since March 4, 1933. We have emerged from the depths of the most terrible depression the American people have ever known.

Our domestic trade has been awakened, our foreign commerce has considerably improved, smoke replaces cobwebs in our principal factories, the glow from the miner's headlamp is once more apparent, and our unemployment has actually decreased through governmental and private enterprise. Recently President Roosevelt flung far and wide the challenge to the American people to take stock of themselves. Our great President requested us all, individually, to ask ourselves the question, "Am I better off than I was in March 1933?" This bold fearless challenge was pointed to by Republicans and other antiadministrationists as a positive boomerang to the New Deal. Like many other cherished hopes of the opposition, this predicted boomerang failed to materialize. The die-hards and soreheads have failed utterly to reckon with the Roosevelt policy, the Roosevelt popularity, the Roosevelt frankness, and above all, the Roosevelt strategy. Apparently the great masses of the American people have accepted the challenge of the President, for the anti-Roosevelt forces have quit talking about the matter.

When President Roosevelt was inaugurated a little more than 3 years ago, he repeated before the Chief Justice of the United States his oath that he would, to the best of his ability, faithfully execute the office of the President, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution. This was a higher promise than any made in either party platform or in any campaign speech by Franklin D. Roosevelt. The promise he made when he took his oath of office bound him to preserve the Government at any cost. Ladies and gentlemen, President Roosevelt has preserved our Government. The cost has been great, but it has been a big job. Instead of bankrupting the Nation as the opposition predicted, President Roosevelt has, in preserving democratic government, rescued us from bankruptcy and is now heading us on the road to recovery. While the President has been preserving our Government he has been called a Socialist, a Communist, a Fascist, and a dictator; but the fact is that the present administration has probably saved our country from socialism, communism, fascism, dictatorship, and even incipient revolution.

Ladies and gentlemen, even if the cost had been five times what it has, the accomplishment of the present administration would have justified the expenditures. Even though we take no account of the fact that a Government has been preserved and that our people have been saved from starvation, misery, and want, the rise in the national income alone during the last 3 years justifies the cost of the New Deal. We will remember that while the previous administration was piling up a deficit of approximately $5,000,000,000, our national annual income fell from almost ninety billion to about forty billion dollars. Add to this the unemployment created, the misery and the suffering of a great people, and the destruction of their morale and we have the cost entailed by the previous administration.

Ladies and gentlemen, even though the opposition may contend that we cannot afford Roosevelt's New Deal, we submit the accomplishments of the present administration in support of the proposition that we can afford Roosevelt's New Deal. Agriculture has been aided. In 1933, the farmers' cash income was two and one-half billions greater than in 1932. Foreclosures have been stopped by F. C. A. loans. Profitable prices have replaced bankruptcy prices. In spite of a serious Court set-back, a national program of soil conservation and planned production is again being administered. The H. O. L. C. has saved a million city families from eviction, and many private lending insurance companies have been made solid. The H. O. L. C. on its mortgages and the R. F. C. on its loans to finance industry have established a record of collections on the billions loaned. Utility rates have been widely reduced. Schools have been kept open by the program of Federal aid for education. Labor has received recognition never recorded in any previous administration. It has gained the right to bargain collectively, and has secured means of enforcing that right. Relief has been extended to millions of our fellow citizens. Employment has been provided for those who previously walked the streets, seeking in vain for work that could not be found. The C. C. C., P. W. A., and the W. P. A. have helped to relieve the unemployment problem, besides adding many improvements of a useful and permanent nature.

These programs have made it possible for our people to secure work and at the same time retain their morale, which is so necessary under a democratic form of government. Government work has been made necessary because private industry has been unable to cope with the ravaging effects of the depression, but now business is better because of the accomplishments of the present administration. The business index has advanced from 60 to 95 percent of an estimated normal. Our banking system, which was prostrate when President Roosevelt assumed his office, has been repaired until the confidence of depositors has been raised from the lowest to possibly the highest ebb known in the history of our country. When the President was inaugurated, banks were closing their doors by the thousands, but today bank failures seem a thing of the past. A measure of social security has been established by unemployment insurance and pensions for our aged people. The effects of this program, as soon as same can be realized, will go a long way toward averting future depressions.

The Nation 3 years ago was caught in a maelstrom of devitalizing confusion and prejudice, with the forces of construction vesting their welfare in the sympathetic and responsive personality of Roosevelt. The President has launched forth in a manner comparable to George Washington to check and overthrow a political imperialism and a capitalistic oligarchy. Like Washington, he has promulgated ideas and changes that are revolutionary. The spirit of each was conceived in an ever-watchful and an ever-responsive attitude to safeguard American welfare.

America, with Franklin D. Roosevelt in the White House, entered upon a new path of national destiny. From the proclamation ordering the bank holiday to the personal message by the President to the heads of 54 nations, Roosevelt advanced from a vigorous and compelling national leader to a wise and humane world leadership. Behind this phenomenon lies a series of facts—issues, events, personalities—upon which the fate of a man and the destiny of a nation rest. The circumstance of Mr. Roosevelt's nomination and election is too profoundly a part of America's present survival and future progress to be left loosely spread over the incoherent reportings of the daily press and ephemeral reflections of periodical comment. Even today we cannot see clearly whither events are leading nor how far we may be carried before equilibrium is reached and this sliding civilization of ours shall once more come to rest. Of one thing we are sure, that the great man in the White House today is bending his every effort for the betterment of his country, and we know we are safe in his hands.

Oh, I know we are not yet "out of the woods"; but admitting all blunders and minimizing the many accomplishments of the present administration no one can deny that President Roosevelt has saved us from chaos, freed us from despair, and restored our faith and confidence.

Ladies and gentlemen, we can afford Roosevelt's New Deal, and we must continue to support his program in the hope that recovery from the depression will continue and that conditions will soon return to normalcy.

Paraphrasing the words of that great orator, Patrick Henry, I know it is natural for men to indulge in the illusions of hope. I know we are apt to shut our eyes to a painful truth and listen to the song of that siren until she transforms us into beasts. And I know that this is not the part of wise men engaged in a great and arduous struggle for life, property, and the pursuit of happiness. And I hope we will not be of that number who, having eyes see not, and having ears hear not the things that so vitally affect our very existence. God forbid that we fail to do our duty in this the greatest crisis in the history of our country. I trust that we may all work and hope and pray that America march forward and onward, supporting the New Deal with President Roosevelt in the interest of all the people and not a favored hereditary few. If we do this the specter of unemployment, poverty, and greed will be supplanted by the Golden Rule rather than the rule of gold which has so dismally engulfed us.

EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION OF CERTAIN ASSETS OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 451

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3978, an act "Relating to taxation of shares of preferred stock, capital notes, and debentures of banks while owned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and reaffirming their immunity." That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 4 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, is this a rule to take up a bill that was defeated in the House last week sometime?

Mr. SABATH. I do not know whether it was defeated. I think it was before the House for consideration.

Mr. SNELL. Was it not defeated?

Mr. SABATH. I was not here that day.

Mr. BLANTON. It was defeated under the two-thirds rule.

Mr. SNELL. May I ask the Majority Leader the question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is not the same bill. It is a similar bill. This is the Senate bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is the same bill with an amendment which the House rejected.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me that somebody on that side ought to know something about a bill which is going to be brought up here for consideration. This is a bill that was rejected last week.

Mr. SABATH. This has been requested by the Banking and Currency Committee. There is a unanimous report, and a unanimous request for the rule.

Mr. SNELL. I think they ought to know what the bill is all about.

Mr. SABATH. This is an open rule.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Has the gentleman received the information he desires?

Mr. SNELL. I did not get any information except that the gentleman did not know anything about the bill they are going to bring up.

Mr. SABATH. It is a similar bill, I may say, but there is an amendment.

Mr. SNELL. Is it the amendment that was rejected by the House last week?

Mr. SABATH. I am informed not.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

The SPEAKER. The Chair may say that all this conversation is out of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to ask the gentleman from Illinois one question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois if it is not a fact that a bill called up under suspension which requires a two-thirds vote, and it lacks the two-thirds vote, is not defeated.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman from New York is familiar with what happened.

Mr. SNELL. Yes; I am familiar with what happened. It was defeated under a regular vote, not under suspension at all.

SHALL CONGRESS PREVENT LOCAL COMMUNITIES AND THE DIFFERENT STATES FROM PROPERLY TAXING LOCAL PROPERTY USED FOR PRIVATE GAINS?

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an excerpt from existing laws.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has authorized the purchase of $100,000,000 in preferred stock of national banks. The money has not as yet been paid and will not be paid until the bill to exempt the stock from taxation is finally passed upon by Congress. This bill is to be before the House the second time this session tomorrow, March 18, 1936. If the bill passes as proposed by the Banking and Currency Committee, local communities, including States, counties, and political subdivisions, will be compelled to strike from their tax rolls a hundred million dollars' worth of taxable property. The banks receiving this money will be charged 3½-percent interest. My information is that the banks would not object to paying the local taxes in addition to the 3½-percent interest, as they would then be getting a good bargain, but the law, if this bill passes, will prevent them from paying the taxes unless they want to make a direct contribution, and I doubt that the directors would feel authorized to do that.

ON ONE DISBURSEMENT, NOT YET MADE, BANKS WILL BE SAVED
$2,000,000 A YEAR

It is my impression that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would not object to writing into their contracts with these banks a provision that they will take care of all local taxes as heretofore, but the Reconstruction Finance Corporation cannot require this unless the Banking and Currency Committee's recommendations are changed. In other words, the Banking and Currency Committee is asking us to vote for a bill that will withdraw from taxation a hundred million dollars in taxable property that is now upon the tax books of the different States and local governments, and the committee refuses to recommend an amendment that will permit these banks to pay the local taxes or permit the R. F. C. to require the taxes to be paid. This means a difference of about $2,000,000 a year on this $100,000,000 purchase. I presume that the members of this committee have reasons sufficient in their own minds to justify this action, but I fail to see upon what theory such a course is taken.

HOW BILL SHOULD BE CHANGED

This bill should be changed so that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may require the payment of local taxes in all new contracts, and the banks receiving the money will be permitted to pay the taxes as heretofore. A new section should be inserted immediately after section 302, title 3, of the act approved March 9, 1933, as amended, and designated as section 302 (a), reading as follows:

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any national banking association may, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, pursuant to action taken by its board of directors, issue to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation its capital notes or debentures in such amounts and with such maturities as the Comptroller of the Currency may approve. The holders of such capital notes or debentures shall be entitled to receive such interest, at a rate not exceeding 6 percent per annum of the principal amount thereof, and shall have such conversion rights, priorities, control of management, and other rights, and such capital notes or debentures shall be subject to retirement or redemption in such manner and upon such conditions as may be provided therein with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Section 303 of said act approved March 9, 1933, as amended, should also be further amended by inserting after the words "preferred stock", appearing in the last sentence of said section, a comma and the words "or capital notes or debentures."

Section 304 of title 3 of said act approved March 9, 1933, as amended, should be further amended, as follows:

Strike out the words "preferred stock" appearing in the first sentence of said section and insert in lieu thereof the words "or purchase preferred stock, capital notes, or debentures" and strike out the third sentence of said section.

DEFEAT IT IF AMENDMENTS NOT ACCEPTED

Unless these amendments are inserted, the bill should be defeated.

These amendments will not take care of past transactions but will make it possible to prevent future transactions that will remove local property from local taxation.

SERIOUS INJUSTICE TO CERTAIN STATES

If this bill passes, it will upset the tax laws in a great majority of the States that have passed laws in conformity with an act of Congress.

THREE METHODS STATES MAY USE TO TAX NATIONAL BANKS

Section 5219 of the Revised Statutes Act of June 3, 1864, provides as follows:

548. State taxation: The legislature of each State may determine and direct, subject to the provisions of this section, the manner and place of taxing all the shares of national banking associations located within its limits. The several States may tax said shares, or include dividends derived therefrom in the taxable income of an owner or holder thereof, or tax the income of such associations, provided the following conditions are complied with:

1. (a) The imposition by said State of any one of the above three forms of taxation shall be in lieu of the others.

(b) In the case of a tax on said shares the tax imposed shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such State coming into competition with the business of national banks: Provided, That bonds, notes, or other evidences of indebtedness in the hands of individual citizens not employed or engaged in the banking or investment business and representing merely personal investments not made in competition with such business, shall not be deemed moneyed capital within the meaning of this section.

(c) In case of a tax on the net income of an association, the rate shall not be higher than the rate assessed upon other financial corporations nor higher than the highest of the rates assessed by the taxing State upon the net income of mercantile, manufacturing, and business corporations doing business within its limits.

(d) In case the dividends derived from the said shares are taxed, the tax shall not be a greater rate than is assessed upon the net income from other moneyed capital.

2. The shares or the net income as above provided of any national banking association owned by nonresidents of any State, or the dividends on such shares owned by such nonresidents, shall be taxed in the taxing district where the association is located and not elsewhere; and such associations shall make return of such income and pay the tax thereon as agent of such nonresident shareholders.

3. Nothing herein shall be construed to exempt the real property of associations from taxation in any State or in any subdivision thereof, to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

4. The provisions of section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as in force prior to March 4, 1923, shall not prevent the legalizing, ratifying, or confirming by the States of any tax heretofore paid, levied, or assessed upon the shares of national banks, or the collecting thereof, to the extent that such tax would be valid under said section. (R. S., sec. 5219; Mar. 4, 1923, c. 267, 42 Stat. 1499.)

Thirty-one States in the United States have elected by their respective laws to tax national banks upon their shares of stock. These States are as follows: Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and West Virginia.

Seventeen States and the District of Columbia have elected to tax national banks according to earnings on their shares of stock, or according to the income of the corporation, but do not tax directly the shares of stock. According to the Federal law, if a State elects to tax according to one of the three methods, it cannot levy taxes by any of the other two methods. These 17 States are as follows: Louisiana, Maine, Mississippi, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Utah, Vermont, Washington, Wisconsin, Alabama, California, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New York, Oklahoma, Oregon, and Wyoming.

R. F. C. CREATED IN 1932, AND COULD NOT PURCHASE PREFERRED STOCK OF NATIONAL BANKS

On January 22, 1932, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was created. Section 10 of the act provided:

The Corporation, including its franchise, its capital reserves and surplus, and its income, shall be exempt from all taxation.

March 9, 1933, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized to purchase preferred stock from national banks and capital notes and debentures of State banks and trust companies. No specific tax exemption was enacted at that time. Up until that time national banks did not have the right to issue preferred shares of stock.

CONGRESS INTENDED STOCK TO BE TAXED

It should be remembered that at the time of the creation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in 1932 and at the time that the corporation was authorized to purchase shares of stock of national banking associations, it was the law that all shares of national banks, no matter by whom owned, shall be subject to taxation. This is very plain and I cannot possibly construe it any other way except that the Congress in authorizing preferred shares of stock issued by national banks to be sold to the R. F. C. expected these shares of stock to be taxable, otherwise a specific exemption would have been written into the law, since the law was plain and unmistakable that all shares in national banks no matter by whom owned shall be subject to taxation.

UNANIMOUS DECISION OF SUPREME COURT HOLDS STOCK TAXABLE

The R. F. C. purchased a million dollars of stock in the Baltimore National Bank, Baltimore, Md. Although this bank had theretofore paid the State of Maryland and all local taxing units taxes based upon this valuation, after the R. F. C. purchased the stock this bank pleaded that it was tax-exempt. The State tax commission upheld a tax upon the shares, overruling the protest of the bank, which made a claim of immunity. The case went to the circuit court of appeals and then to the United States Supreme Court. The facts and the law were so plain and unmistakable that the Supreme Court by a unanimous decision held that the State of Maryland and all the taxing subdivisions in that State still had the same right to tax these shares that it did before the R. F. C. purchased the stock.

SPECIFIC EXEMPTION OF SHARES OF STOCK

A bill, H. R. 11047, was introduced in the House by Congressman T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH, of Maryland, which provided for a specific exemption of shares of stock in national banks from all taxation by the States and political subdivisions thereof when such stock is held by the R. F. C. A similar bill, S. 3978, was introduced by Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, of Florida, in the United States Senate. The Senate, February 24, 1936, passed the bill by a vote of 38 for to 28 against.

SO-CALLED CLARIFYING OR PERFECTING AMENDMENT

In the discussion in the Senate, many of the questions I have raised were not discussed at all and none of them discussed thoroughly. I think the Members of that body looked upon the bill as a clarifying amendment, as it was called, or a so-called perfecting amendment to existing law. These terms, so often used, lull many of us to sleep while bad legislation goes through.

HANDICAPPED BY LIMITED TIME FOR DEBATE

This problem probably had not reached the House when the House bill was taken up February 25. A rule was adopted in the House on February 25, 1936, which permitted consideration of this bill and allowed 2½ hours for general debate. There was but 1 hour's debate on the rule. In other words, there were 210 minutes allowed to debate this bill. I had appeared before the Rules Committee and protested the granting of the rule to consider this legislation. The rule, however, was granted, but I thought an understanding existed between the Rules Committee and those having charge at the time that I and others who were opposed to the bill would be allowed a fair division of the time, but, instead of us getting 105 minutes, one-half the time, we received only 48 minutes in opposition to the bill. I received only 5 minutes one time on the rule and 15 minutes on the bill. Notwithstanding this handicap by reason of lack of time, we succeeded in convincing the House that the bill was a bad bill and should be defeated, and, on a roll-call vote, shown on page 2794 of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 137 Members of the House voted against the bill and 165 for it.

I immediately moved to reconsider the vote and to lay that vote on the table, which was carried. This prevents the House bill from again being called up during this session of Congress.

NOW SENATE BILL

However, in the meantime the Senate bill had been sent over. I have never before heard of the proponents of any bill getting full consideration in the House on two different occasions on two different bills during the same session of Congress. Yet the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House held another hearing on the same bill that was defeated by the House with the expectation of again getting consideration of the measure.

I want to tell you what this bill will mean to the different States, counties, cities, road districts, and school districts, and how it will affect other people who are holders of the same kind of shares, and how it will affect other national banks that have not sold shares of stock to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and how it will affect the State banks in the different States:

First. If a bank's capital stock is a million dollars, one-half of it, $500,000, is preferred stock; and if $250,000 of this preferred stock is held by the R. F. C., it will be tax-exempt; and although it has been on the tax rolls in that locality for years before, it will be taken off by orders of the United States Congress, whereas the other $250,000 of preferred shares held locally will be taxable, and the bank will pay taxes on it as heretofore.

Second. A national bank that has sold half of its shares to the R. F. C. will obtain a 50-percent tax reduction under this bill, while the national bank across the street that has not sold any of its shares to the R. F. C. will not obtain any tax reduction. It will pay taxes as heretofore.

Third. A national bank that has sold half of its shares to the R. F. C. will obtain a 50-percent tax reduction, but the State bank across the street will be compelled to pay taxes as heretofore.

Fourth. It will set a precedent which, if carried to its logical end, will cause Congress to pass the necessary law that will give all other national banks the same amount of tax exemption in the respective States and local communities where they are located.

Fifth. It will be a precedent for Congress to pass the necessary law to reduce taxation 50 percent on all banks in the 17 States and the District of Columbia where another method other than taxing shares of stock is in force. I refer specifically to the 17 States listed above.

If Congress can pass the bill under consideration and it is constitutional, it can certainly pass a law that will grant tax relief to the same extent and to the same proportionate amount to all national banks in the 17 States and District of Columbia using other tax methods, and it can pass a valid law that will grant all national banks, although no stock in them are held by the R. F. C. from taxation in excess of 50 percent or any amount of their shares of capital stock.

BAD PRECEDENT

In other words, no precedent could be worse than Members of Congress to assume the jurisdiction of taking from the tax rolls of States, counties, and cities taxable property that has been and should now be legally upon those rolls. At this time when the various States are seeking fair methods of taxation for the purpose of meeting their shares of the burden by reason of the passage of the social security law passed by Congress, it is proposed that we now take this source of taxable wealth away from them.

AMOUNT OF TAXES 31 STATES WILL LOSE

If this bill becomes a law, the banks in the following States will be granted immunity from taxation to the amount stated in column 1 opposite the name of the State, which will cost these different governments to lose in actual tax money that would ordinarily be paid by these banks the amount stated in column 2:

	Immunity	Loss to governments
Arizona	$1,340,000.00	$68,608.00
Arkansas	1,275,000.00	33,369.75
Colorado	4,101,000.00	201,564.15
Delaware	137,300.00	274.64
Florida	1,177,500.00	1,177.50
Georgia	1,507,500.00	46,732.50
Idaho	565,000.00	23,557.17
Illinois	72,797,614.17	2,495,138.23
Indiana	6,857,980.00	17,144.95

Representatives from other States are asked to vote for this bill because it is claimed that it will not affect them and their congressional districts. A bad precedent always affects a Member of Congress if he votes for it regardless of who happens to be directly affected at the time. If this bill should become a law and we must presume that the banks in other States will pursue logically and reasonably this same course and direction, the banks in the 17 States and District of Columbia listed below will also ask for a 50-cent tax reduction; and if they are successful, the amount set opposite the names of the State will be taken from the State, county, city, and all tax rolls:

Louisiana	$4,340,000.00
Maine	2,455,600.00
Mississippi	2,629,000.00

WILL SET PRECEDENT FOR WHOLESALE EXEMPTIONS

Let us see how far this bad precedent might lead. It is said that the stock held by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in a national bank should not be taxed because the R. F. C. is a governmental agency. It is also true that a national bank is a governmental agency. If this so-called reasoning is carried to its logical end, the next move will be to exempt from taxation all shares of a national bank stock that are held by another national bank. Under existing law in Texas a national bank pays taxes upon its capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits less, however, the value of the real estate. These banks do not have to pay a gross-receipts tax as many other public-service corporations have to pay in Texas. Neither does it have to pay upon its commercial notes and accounts as citizens and other corporations are legally bound to pay in Texas. They are exempt from these different methods of taxation because the shares of stock are taxed; the State having elected that method of taxation. If a national bank in Texas owns shares of stock of another national bank, these shares of stock are taxed, notwithstanding the law in Texas that only the capital, surplus, and undivided profits less the amount of real estate rendered shall be taxable. If the R. F. C. is right in its interpretation and you use the same logic and reasoning, no national bank should pay taxes upon shares of stock held in other national banks. If this policy is enacted, it will lead to wholesale exemptions from taxation.

Remember that the taxes are not levied or laid upon the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. They are levied upon the assets of another corporation which the Supreme Court has held must pay the taxes in the first place.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2½ minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may say to the gentleman there are three special orders today. The Chair does not desire to recognize anyone to make a speech until disposition of these special orders. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] yields to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MONAGHAN], the Chair will be glad to put the request.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent to address the House for 2½ minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, on what subject does the gentleman desire to address the House?

Mr. MONAGHAN. I would like to explain why I think the pending radio bill ought to be enacted into law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, at the last session I introduced a bill providing for Government ownership and control of the radio facilities of this country. There is not a more powerful argument that I could present to this body for the enactment of such a law than the experience which I am having in my own State with the Power Trust, which controls the large radio station in Butte, namely, KGIR.

Since I had an idea that such tactics would be employed, on January 5 I had Mr. Albert Haskell, an undisclosed agent, apply for time on KGIR station for me the evening before the next election, July 20. The Anaconda Corporation, which I have always fought—most strenuously in connection with the strike which occurred in the summer of 1934—realizing how beneficial time on the radio the night before election is, has not only refused to give a positive contract to my undisclosed agent but in a subtle manner refused to give me any definite contract for time, stating that they had "scheduled seven now, and will only move for some outstanding national program", in which event I would be moved to "next nearest available time." As I stated in my wire to them, this made the time so contingent that it might be midnight, at which time I would be prohibited by law from making the speech. They made no effort to disguise their discrimination.

By so doing they violated section 202 (a) of the Federal Communications Act, which makes unlawful such discrimination, and I have called upon Mr. John Tansil, United States attorney for Montana, to institute proper proceedings in the Federal court for issuance of a writ of mandamus to compel KGIR to give me a definite contract for this time.

In order that the full facts be called to the attention of the House I ask, Mr. Speaker, that this telegram be printed at this point in the RECORD.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to the telegram until I know whom it is from.

Mr. MONAGHAN. It is a telegram I sent to the United States district attorney.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana to print the telegram referred to?

There was no objection.

The telegram referred to follows:

MARCH 16, 1936.

Hon. JOHN TANSIL,

United States District Attorney, Butte, Mont.:

On January 5, Mr. Albert Haskell, acting as my undisclosed agent, wired KGIR radio station for time, evening July 20, night before election. The station refused to sell definite time. On January 14, I wrote to the station, disclosing my identity as principal, asking for any time available, preferably hour previously stated. Manager of KGIR, in letter to me, stated he would see me in Washington, and talk about the situation. In my office, he gave me no assurance of time. March 11, I wired setting forth the facts previously referred to and said, "I now ask an immediate response with respect to the possibility of obtaining time. Your response or failure to respond within 24 hours will be regarded as acceptance or rejection." To which I received following response: "Thought matter of time straightened out to your satisfaction when I was in your office recently and said I would reserve time as near 7 as possible for your talk July 20. Have it scheduled 7 now, and will only move for some outstanding national program in which case you would move next nearest available time. What's the matter, isn't my word good? Signed, Ed Craney." Note language "scheduled 7 now, and will only move for some outstanding national program." This time I sent the following response: "Reply regarding time July 20, so contingent it could be moved midnight when I would be prohibited by law from making speech. See no reason why given definite contract 1934 primary, months in advance, and refused this time. Refusal make time definite tantamount no assurance time, therefore, in effect, refusal. I respect your word, Ed, but have never found radio station yet willing take mine; always had sign contracts even with your station, therefore insist upon having definite contract for my own protection." To this wire I have not as yet received response. I now call upon you as United States district attorney to institute proceedings in the United States District Court of the State of Montana, to issue a writ of mandamus to compel KGIR to sell me the time which I have requested, refusal of which constitutes a violation of section 202 of the Federal Communications Act of 1934, which states: "It shall be unlawful for any common carrier to make any unjust or unreasonable discrimination in charges, practices, classifications, regulations, facilities, or services for, or in connection with, like communication service directly or indirectly by any means or device, or to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, class of persons, or locality, or to subject any particular person, class of persons, or locality to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage. Section (b) charges or services whenever referred to in this act include charges for or services in connection with the use of wires in chain broadcasting or incidental to radio communication of any kind. Section (c), any carrier who knowingly violates the provisions of this section shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $500 for each such offense, and $25 for each and every day of the continuance of such offense." For your information, I have positive proof that failure to give me time is a trick by which opposing interests hope to defeat me, it having been positively asserted by a radio announcer of KGIR that I would never win the Senate race. Asked why, he said he had some inside dope. Please advise me at the earliest possible moment with respect to this matter.

JOSEPH P. MONAGHAN,

Member of Congress, First District, Montana.

Mr. MONAGHAN. I bring this to the attention of the House to urge the enactment of my bill (H. R. 8475) to provide wholesome radio programs, free from monopolistic domination and control on the part of vested interests, and to make available to all our people adequate radio service. Thus taking this great avenue of public education and enlightenment away from the Power Trust monopoly and other corporations, and putting it back into the hands and the control of the people where it properly belongs.

[Here the gavel fell.]

LABOR AND FARM POLICIES OF NEW DEAL

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a radio address recently delivered by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address which I delivered yesterday over a Nation-wide hook-up of the Columbia Broadcasting System.

During the past 3 years nearly $25,000,000,000 of the people's money has been spent by the administration for governmental purposes and for priming the pump so as to put the unemployed back to work in private industry. Yet, despite all of this spending the American Federation of Labor has just announced "that unemployment increased more in January of 1936 than during any January in the last 5 years." This organization reports the unemployment figures for January to be 12,626,000, an increase of 1,229,000 over December of 1935. Relief officials estimate more than 20,000,000 persons on public relief.

INCREASING NATIONAL DEBT, EXPENDITURES AND UNEMPLOYMENT

It is high time for the American people to take inventory of assets and liabilities. Who will pay the $34,000,000,000 national debt which is estimated will be on our hands by the end of the year? Why, the taxpayers, of course; and the taxpayers are not one class of the people. They are all of the people—rich and poor alike. More than 60 percent of the taxes will be in the form of indirect taxes, which are concealed, and paid by all consumers in increased costs of goods and merchandise purchased. It is estimated that the average American family pays an annual indirect tax of $300. This tax will increase so long as the administration continues to spend $2 for every dollar of income.

I sincerely believe that public expenditures should be made to take care of those in need and distress during a great national emergency, but I cannot concur in many of the wasteful and political policies practiced by the administration in the present crisis.

With twenty millions on relief and more than twelve millions unemployed, we have a right to question the administration's relief and work programs. Billions are being spent in thousands of work projects in all parts of the country. In accordance with Presidential order, these projects only provide work for people on the relief rolls. Millions of our citizens, who have used up their savings and have lost their homes, are being forced to go on relief, believing that they will secure work on some public project, only to find a Presidential order which prohibits their employment unless on relief prior to November 1 of last year.

Is such a policy fair to these unfortunate people? I have repeatedly requested the President and Mr. Hopkins to change this order so that worthy men and women may secure work when work is available. Thus far these officials have refused to recognize the appeal. Instead they have brusquely crushed the hopes of millions who are anxious to get work so as to provide for themselves and their families.

RELIEF FUNDS USED FOR POLITICAL PURPOSES

If the Federal Government is to continue the relief program, then wasteful practices and political pressure should be eliminated. Dollar value should be received for every dollar spent. The top-heavy and expensive political organization now used in the name of relief largely to build a Nation-wide political machine, should be cast into discard. Proper administration of relief would eliminate the criticism now being offered by leading Democratic Senators and House Members. But how can this evil be cured?

Federal relief funds could be distributed on a per-capita basis to county and city authorities. Up to 3 years ago these authorities had charge of local relief. They are familiar with local conditions, and, if such funds would be turned over to them, they would employ twice as many worthy individuals on necessary local projects as are now employed under the present political system. Eight billion five hundred and seventy million dollars have been appropriated for relief during the past 3 years. This sum divided on a per-capita basis would yield approximately $65 for every individual in the country. A county or city with a population of 300,000 would have received nearly $20,000,000. Such a distribution of the taxpayers' money would be on a fair and equitable basis and the funds would be more than adequate to take care of local relief problems. Local machinery is at hand, but I assume that the acceptance of this proposal would interfere with the administration's political plan.

What has happened to the relief money? Why are the unemployment and relief rolls constantly growing? Why doesn't the President change his relief policy so that worthy unemployed may secure work before being forced to go on relief rolls? Is it because they must first become a part of a great political machine before they can secure work on public projects, or what is it? The American people, and particularly the unemployed, have a right to hear the answer.

AMERICAN MARKETS FOR LABOR AND FARMER

Millions of unemployed could be put back to work today in industry and agriculture if the administration would permit our farmers and laboring men to enjoy the full benefits of the American market. This country is the best market in the world. The unemployed and the millions of farmers who are barely able to eke out a living, are the best potential customers for automobiles and other manufactured and farm products produced in this country. Unemployment will continue to increase and agricultural distress become more aggravated so long as the New Dealers pursue the policy of giving our American markets to foreign farmers and cheap foreign labor.

I do not suppose there is any point in repeating to the New Dealers that this country cannot compete with other countries in production, for the reason that labor costs, taxes, and standards of living are lower in other countries than they are here.

AGRICULTURAL IMPORTS INCREASED FOR 1935

We have listened to the purr of the New Deal about the increase of hundreds of millions of dollars in exports, but what are the facts and figures for 1935? The Department of Commerce supplies the answer. Its report shows that in 1935 our exports were 7 percent greater than in 1934, and the increase for total imports for the year was 24 percent. A large percentage of the increase in imports consisted of competitive farm products now produced in sufficient quantity in this country to take care of domestic consumption.

Under the theory that we were producing a surplus of farm products, the farmers of this country were induced to take around 30,000,000 acres of farm land out of usual production so as to produce less. They complied with the idea of scarcity only to find that after 3 years of experimentation, they were providing an abundant American market for cheaply produced foreign farm products of the same kind as they took out of production.

For the benefit of the farmers, I will give some of the farm imports for the year 1935 and the percentage increase over 1934: 202,000,000 pounds of wool, an increase of 85 percent—this represents wool from 25,000,000 foreign sheep; 17,500,000 bushels of flax, an increase of 24 percent—this represents flax from 1,750,000 acres of foreign land; 27,400,000 bushels of wheat, an increase of 255 percent—at 15 bushels to the acre this wheat represents 1,830,000 acres of foreign land; 43,200,000 bushels of corn, an increase of 1,361 percent—at 40 bushels to the acre, foreign corn farmers were given a market in this country for more than 1,000,000 acres of corn land; 9,600,000 bushels of rye, an increase of 27 percent—at 15 bushels to the acre, this item represents 640,000 acres of foreign land; 364,623 head of cattle, an increase of 532 percent; 320,000,000 pounds of malt made from barley, an increase of 66 percent. In addition, 4,839,000 bushels of barley were imported. This barley and malt provided a market for more than 700,000 acres of foreign farm land.

I hope some of the cotton farmers will hear the next item of imports. One hundred and sixty-six million pounds of cottonseed oil—an increase of 1,720 percent over 1934.

Then, to cap the climax, and for the particular benefit of the dairy industry, the New Dealers have put their stamp of approval on the importation of 22,674,000 pounds of butter, which is an increase of 1,948 percent over 1934. The total dairy imports for 1935, in terms of milk, amounted to 1,118,000,000 pounds. At 4,000 pounds of milk per year for the average milk cow, the dairy farmers of this country gave way to 279,000 head of foreign milk cows. These cattle consumed feed and pasture from several hundred thousand acres of land. Surely a governmental program in which our domestic market is given to foreign farmers can be of no benefit to American agriculture.

RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Apparently the administration was not satisfied with the damage already done to agriculture, so last year the President and the Secretary of State proceeded to negotiate reciprocal-trade agreements with many foreign countries which permit an additional importation of competitive farm products under greatly reduced tariff rates.

It cannot be out of place for me to call your attention to a promise made by the President in Baltimore on October 26, 1932. I quote from his speech: "I know of no excessive high duty on farm products. I do not intend that such duties shall be lowered. To do so would be inconsistent with my entire farm program."

Did the President keep this pledge to the farmers? He did not, for on January 1 of this year he put into effect the crowning achievement of his administration in the form of a reciprocal-trade agreement with Canada. Dairy, livestock, and poultry farmers were required to bear the major sacrifices of this agreement. Protests were lodged with the administration by farm organizations and farm leaders against any reduction of agricultural duties, but they were brushed aside in the merry scramble to give away the domestic market to foreign farmers.

While we do not have official figures to show the results of the trade agreements, Department of Commerce reports disclose a large increase in farm imports for the month of January this year as compared with January of 1935. Cattle imports increased from 5,828 head to 21,410 head; butter increased from 539,124 pounds to 859,644 pounds; beef, pork, veal, poultry, and mutton increased from 6,491,296 pounds to 11,722,320 pounds.

The farmers of Canada are jubilant over the fact that the President of the United States has provided them with a good market in this country. On the other hand, we hear grumbings of protest from American farmers that their home market is being taken away from them. Why shouldn't they protest? Before the shades of November are drawn, these farmers will register their protest in understandable language.

INCONSISTENCIES OF FARM PROGRAM AND PROPOSALS

It is not my purpose to criticize the policies and expenditures for agriculture during a time of emergency. I know that the millions of checks sent to the farmers helped increase the income of those who received them. In my opinion, the farmers of the country must have their income and purchasing power restored before we can have complete recovery for all branches of our complicated economic structure.

The farm problem is not a political proposition, nor can it be cured by one stroke of the pen in a single piece of legislation. The time has come for the adoption of a permanent program, and, therefore, I feel that we have a right to criticize the evils and inconsistencies of the New Deal plan now in effect, so as to bring about the enactment of beneficial and constitutional laws which will be of lasting value to American agriculture and the country as a whole.

I have pointed out some parts of the farm program which I believe are inconsistent, and in the long run, will work to the disadvantage of domestic agriculture. If our farmers are to curtail production, then they should have the full benefit of the domestic market as the first principle in any sound program. The reciprocal-trade arrangements should be canceled, and the law passed in the Seventy-third Congress granting absolute authority to the President to negotiate trade agreements should be repealed.

I feel that the farmer and home owner should have the lowest possible rate of interest upon their indebtedness. The adoption of a soil-conservation program of equal benefit to all branches of agriculture will be for the general welfare of the entire country. Our foreign markets can be reestablished by the payment of export bounties on surplus products, and subsidies should be paid on that part of the production which goes into domestic consumption so that all farmers may have the benefit of the tariff.

Time will not permit a complete discussion of the suggestions which I have made. Upon one issue at least all right-thinking people should agree, and that is, if we are to have recovery in this country, then the American laboring man and the American farmer should have the complete benefit of the domestic market without foreign interference. After this has been accomplished we can begin building upon a sound foundation for permanent prosperity for the entire country. It is time to take an inventory in order to chart our course along American lines for a better day for all of our people.

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] will soon be recognized to speak on a very important question, I feel that in fairness to the House I should make a point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold that a moment until the Chair recognizes some Members who have unanimous-consent requests to submit?

Mr. WITHROW. I shall hold it in abeyance, Mr. Speaker.

THE LATE GEORGE EDMUND FOSS

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes in order to announce the death of a former Member of this body.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that Hon. George Edmund Foss, former Member of Congress from the Tenth Illinois District, which I am now privileged to represent, passed away Sunday afternoon at Ravenswood Hospital, Chicago.

He was elected to the Fifty-fourth Congress and served for 20 years as a Member of this body. Some of you here today were colleagues with him during his term of service. Having had the privilege to work with him in intimate association, I know that this announcement of his death will come as a message of sorrow. He was loved and respected as a man and a statesman.

While a Republican in politics and loyal to his party, he recognized always the higher loyalty to God and his country. For such loyalty and devotion to duty, he leaves with us a lasting memory of a truly great man. I only hope that I as a successor of his in office can serve as well.

Congressman Foss was born of a New England family in Vermont on July 2, 1863, graduated from Harvard University in 1885, attended the Columbia Law School and the School of Political Science in New York City, and was graduated from the Union College of Law at Chicago in 1889. He was admitted to the bar and commenced the practice of law in Chicago in the same year that he graduated from law school.

At the same time that Congressman George Edmund Foss was in the service of his country here as a member of the Republican Party, his brother Congressman Eugene Noble Foss, and later governor, was also in the service of his country here as a Democratic Member of this body from Massachusetts. To my knowledge it is the only family that has the distinction of two brothers being Members of Congress at the same time from different States and each of a different political faith.

Mr. Speaker, as a personal friend of our deceased colleague, out of reverence for his memory and the noble service he rendered to God and his country, and in respect to his family, I convey this message to the House.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY AND THE UNKNOWN SOLDIER

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes on the Unknown Soldier.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] yield for that purpose?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes on the Unknown Soldier. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, this is St. Patrick's Day. The day when the red blood that courses through our Irish veins races a little faster; the day when the Irish mind turns, in loving contemplation, to the deeds and accomplishments of those who gave it being; when the Irish heart lifts a song of hope for better days and better times for the homeland, the Isle of Saints and the land of song; the day when all the world joins in honoring the memory of him, who, 15 centuries and more ago, carried the story of the tragedy of Calvary from the uttermost bounds of Ireland to the confines of the Black Sea; the day when the people of our country in particular, by a seemingly unanimous consent, offer their homage to the patron saint of Ireland, and by so doing pay tribute to an unconquered and unconquerable race. And it is not without reason that our people do this. It is not without a deep sense of justice and appreciation that the liberty-loving American Nation accords this tribute to St. Patrick and the Irish people who, though downtrodden in their native land, carried to the four corners of the world and to our country in particular in the days of its infancy and pressing need, that spirit of independence and love of liberty which has ever been enshrined within the Irish heart, and which is the very well-spring of our national life. Not only did the sturdy sons of the Gael bring with them to our shores a love for liberty; not only did they accept and embrace the idealistic doctrine of freedom and independence which they found rising like a flood tide in colonial days, but they gave to it concrete expression by their deeds of valor on land and sea and sealed their compact with liberty by laying down their lives that it might live.

To call the roll of the Irish who played leading parts in the making of our Nation or to attempt to rehearse the story of their loyalty, their sacrifices, their sufferings, and their indomitable courage and perseverance, or even to recount those particular incidents where their heroism reflected glory on our arms, would be a recital far too long for the short time at my disposal. But I cannot let pass this occasion without at least a reference to the incomparable Jack Barry, half Yankee and half Irishman, as he denominated himself, father of the American Navy, at whose monument I engaged this morning in patriotic exercises to commemorate his memory. To Barry belongs the honor of being the first American naval officer to engage, under the Stars and Stripes, a naval enemy, and the first to bring victory to our flag upon the high seas.

Perhaps I could not do better, in the nature of a summation of the contribution of Ireland to the cause of American liberty—to the making and salvation of the Nation—than to quote the words of the poet:

Can you doubt our Irish fealty—
Call your muster of the dead.
Find a field in all your history
Where no Irish heroes bled.
Where their valor shed no lustre
On the flag that ne'er can fade,
From the days of Wayne and Moylan
Down to Meagher's Green Brigade.

In addition to my participation in the exercises at the Barry monument I also had the exceptional honor, this morning, of participating in the commemorative services at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, under the auspices of the Irish War Veterans, U. S. A. The services were conducted by Walter Ferry, national commander; John Connolly, senior vice commander; Elmer McGinnis, junior vice commander; Joseph B. O'Rourke, chaplain; Chris C. Nugent, junior adjutant; Edward Durning, quartermaster; James Caffery, officer of the day; Philip Fitzpatrick, sergeant major; John Hennessey, sergeant at arms; Arthur Cokeley, service officer; George A. Henderson, judge advocate; and John J. McLaughlin, chief of staff, the national officers of this association, who gathered from all sections of the country to collaborate with the local committee, composed of Edward J. J. McGrory, commander; Patrick J. Taft, senior vice commander; John W. Barrett, junior vice commander; George A. E. Prendergast, adjutant; Edward F. Tierney, quartermaster; W. R. McLister, chaplain; Robert G. Smith, judge advocate; and Michael J. Sullivan, sergeant at arms; all officers of District of Columbia Post, No. 17, Irish War Veterans, U. S. A.

Perhaps one of the most impressive monuments to the heroic dead of any land or nation is the sarcophagus at Arlington, and no man, much less a soldier and a veteran, can stand beside this monument without feelings of deep emotion. It is not possible to contemplate this magnificent testimonial of a free people to its honored dead without experiencing a consuming sadness for those of our people whose loved ones answered the call when the alarm of war sounded through the land and were, by fate, denied even the right to claim their ashes.

I know of no way on March 17 by which we Americans of Irish lineage or birth could better demonstrate our undying love to our country, our fealty to its laws, our duty and love to its heroic love for its defenders, our respect to Ireland itself and to Saint Patrick, than by appropriate exercises at that hallowed tomb.

We, therefore, devotedly and humbly, but nevertheless proudly, assembled there today, the anniversary of the feast of Ireland's patron saint, to place thereon a simple emerald wreath in testimony of our respect and honor for the Nation's dead. We could not help but feel that the good saint himself, together with the spirits of those thousands of Irishmen who had given their all in defense of these United States, smiled a benediction upon our actions. The Unknown Soldier to the American people is symbolic of everything that their national history holds chivalrous, valorous, holy, and dear. It is possible that he was an Irishman by right of birth, for thousands of such wore our national uniform in the World War. It is possible also that, though American born, a heritage of warm, red Irish blood pulsed through his veins. No matter what the lineage may have been, significant only is the fact that he was an average everyday American, enjoying his every breath of life, loved and respected within his own particular social circle when the Nation called him in 1917. In unison with those Irish veterans who today did him honor, cheerfully responded in order that these United States might continue to the fulfillment of its noble destiny. From him the United States could expect no more, from us, nothing less.

Ireland is deeply indebted to the hospitality of our great Nation, but it is fitting that it be proclaimed that the indebtedness is of dual nature. We know that this grateful land has never failed to acknowledge the fact that Erin's contribution, Catholic and Protestant, to national growth, played a major role in the founding and developing of America; her sons and daughters have contributed to every period in our history, and their influence has been felt in widely varied walks of life.

The Unknown Soldier belongs to all of our people, and his memory is immortal. Nothing that I or anybody else might say could possibly add to or take from his glory. As American war veterans of Irish lineage or birth, we gather today, simply, and humbly, but proudly, to lay a wreath of remembrance upon that marble tomb where reposes his clay, and to pray for the repose of his eternal soul.

The Unknown Soldier, we hope, has not died in vain. We Irish, either by birth or descent, hope that the principles for which we both fought will forever live. [Applause.]

(Mr. STACK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.)

THE GOVERNMENT'S REPUDIATION OF INDIAN CLAIMS, AND HOW IT IS DONE

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD the remarks I made on yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks made on the floor of the House on Tuesday, March 17, on the subject of the Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewa Indians, I desire to say that this Congress is no different from the many Congresses that have convened and adjourned since this Nation began in respect to the Indian question.

This much is certain: That when our forefathers landed on the shores of this continent they found it inhabited by Indians. How long they had occupied and used the country no one definitely knows. It may have been a thousand years; it may have been 6,000. The fact that we are concerned with is that they were here in possession of the country in the year 1000, when the first white man stepped on our shores.

We became the principal occupants of this entire continent. The area occupied by Indians was gradually made smaller through the years, by Indian wars, by Indian treaties, and finally by acts of Congress without the consent of the Indians. Today the 340,000 Indians occupy less than 47,000,000 acres of land, or less than the area of North Dakota. The Indian population has gradually become less and less as the years have passed.

When the Government was formed there were 1,000,000 Indians in this country.

We gained the principal part of the territory from the Indians by means of treaties, solemnly entered into between the Indians and the Government.

This Government recognized treaties up until the year 1870, when, by acts of Congress, treaties were abolished. All former treaties were, however, recognized, and the Supreme Court of the United States has decided, in many cases, that rights accruing to Indians under treaties made prior to 1870 shall be protected and recognized in all things. It is a comparatively easy matter, therefore, to trace an Indian claim against the Government for damages for the violation of treaty rights.

In connection with the treatment of Indians under acts of Congress since treaty days it must be remembered that the Indian status has changed. At one time Indian tribes were recognized as sovereign nations. Since that time our contact with them has been under the relationship of guardian and ward. This Government assumed a guardianship over the Indian and his property without the consent of the Indian, and that status still remains. We have made him a semicitizen, but we have never lost our control over his property and have molded his future in any pattern we saw fit to prescribe. In dealing with the Indian, therefore, under this guardianship relation, it is vastly different from treating with the Indian under full freedom as an American citizen. At every step we are, by law, acting in a fiduciary capacity—one that demands of us the utmost good faith and fair dealing. A higher degree of good faith, integrity, and fair dealing must always be exercised in transaction between guardian and ward than that required between persons not handicapped by an inferior status.

The Indian lands, defined and circumscribed in treaties, solemnly made, have been gradually but surely taken away from them. This has been accomplished by violations of recognized treaties and acts of Congress. The Indians have been advised, encouraged, cajoled, and bluffed into accepting acts of Congress by the very Government agencies created to protect the Indian. Through this course of Congress through the years there has been accumulating a long list of damage suits against the Government. From quite definite information, I am safe in stating that today the Indians of the United States have just claims against this Government that will total $4,000,000,000. In every Congress there are a great many bills asking Congress to pass a jurisdiction bill authorizing the Indians to present their claims against the Government to the Court of Claims for adjudication. It should also be remembered that the Government cannot be sued without its permission, and before the Indians can present a claim for damages they must secure from Congress the right to prosecute such a claim.

There should not be any objection on the part of the Government to permitting Indians to prove their claim. There ought not to be any objection to a jurisdictional bill if the Government had no fear of past bad faith. These jurisdictional bills are always fought on the floor of Congress and the reason given is that we owe the Indians so much that it would bankrupt the Government to pay them. In this way the evil day has been delayed and delayed until damages for more than 100 years have accumulated.

The attitude of the Government now is and has always been a complete repudiation of debts due Indians. The Government, through its officers and leaders, prates of the sacredness of Government credit, Government honor, and the mere suggestion of repudiation of ordinary Government obligations is met by a storm of scathing denunciation. But I charge here now, and stand ready to prove it by the Government's own record, that this sacred honor of the Government in the protection of its credit has been so shamefully repudiated by the Government in respect to debts due Indians that there is no such parallel in any government that ever existed on earth of such base, intentional, and preconceived repudiation.

I have not the time to cite many cases, but any one I do call attention to is similar to thousands of others. Here is one:

THE TURTLE MOUNTAIN BAND

At one time the Chippewa Indians inhabited, occupied, and used a tract of land in Dakota beginning at a point on the Canadian line 30 miles west of the Red River of the North and extending westward along the Canadian line 63 miles, thence south 15 miles, thence due east to a point 30 miles west of the Red River. In this area were 945,000 square miles. This tract was ceded to these Indians by treaty stipulations. By various treaties afterward made and through methods that would not stand up in a court of equity, this great territory was reduced to 10,000,000 acres of land. By Executive order in 1882 all of this land was opened up for homestead purposes and 1,000,000 acres retained as a reservation. Nothing was paid the Indians for this land, and the whole transaction was carried on without the Indians' consent.

In 1904, or 22 years later, Congress ratified an agreement with the Indians to pay them $1,000,000 for these lands so taken. Congress made certain conditions and reservations which necessitated the act going back to the Indians for their approval of the changes made in the agreement. The changes were never ratified by many bands and never ratified by the same Indian representatives who made the original agreement.

These Indians now claim that they are entitled to reasonable compensation for these 9,000,000 acres. Just recall that the Indians received a trifle over 10 cents per acre for this land, and had to wait 22 years for it. The Government now boldly asserts that it paid the Indian for this land and therefore will not pass a jurisdictional bill permitting the Indians to show fraud, failure of consideration, or bad faith exercised by a guardian over a ward.

In this case the open, uncontradicted facts condemn the Government. The very price of 10 cents an acre, when the minimum price of land per acre on which claims of Indians have been repeatedly settled, was $1.25 per acre, is, of itself, proof of fraud on the part of the guardian. When the Government gave the Northern Pacific Railroad every alternate section of land through Dakota, extending 50 miles north and 50 miles south of the proposed line, the minimum price was fixed at $2.50 per acre, and in the grant the railroad was forbidden to sell the land for less per acre. On the face of this settlement, therefore, it shows a failure of consideration.

In addition to this, the Indians, during all of the negotiations, were presumed to be incompetent. They were wards of the Government. The Government was charged with the fiduciary duty and obligation of protecting the interests of its ward, who was incapable, in law, from protecting itself. This situation demands the utmost good faith and good conscience. Applying this rule to the payment by the Government of $1,000,000 to these wards for 9,000,000 acres of land convicts the Government of bad faith and outright dishonesty.

All these Indians now ask is that they be permitted to present their claim against the Government to the Court of Claims. But this Congress says "no." "No, sir; we paid you once, now get out of here. We will not let you prove that we were dishonest with you."

Those who are not Members of Congress cannot, of course, understand how this attitude of Congress is sustained. Why cannot the Indians get action? I will answer that question now. The Indians in this case have not a chance on earth to have their case heard unless there is an accident in Congress—unless some Member falls dead just before the bill comes up. There are always some Members in Congress who say, "To hell with the Indians." They watch these bills and when the bills come up they do their stuff. Here is how it is done:

A bill comes before Congress in one of four ways:

First. It may go on the Consent Calendar. If the bill is on this calendar, one Congressman out of 435 can get up in his seat and say, "I object to the consideration of this bill." That settles it—one objection stops the bill. This is what happened to the bill of the Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewa Indians. The bill was on the Consent Calendar, and one Congressman made an objection, and that ends the bill. If objected to a second time, it goes back on the Union Calendar.

Second. Union Calendar bills on this calendar come up on Calendar Wednesdays and the committees come up in order, unless by a suspension of the rules, requiring a two-thirds vote of the House. For instance, the District of Columbia has Calendar Wednesday. At this session there will be no Calendar Wednesday for Indians because we had Calendar Wednesday for Indians during the closing days of the first session. Before we can reach that position again Congress will have adjourned.

Third. By rule: Bills come before the House on a rule adopted by the Rules Committee, but in theory only those bills advocated by the administration or of great prominence in the public eye, ever come on the floor by a rule. This excludes Indian bills, especially those which merely provide jurisdiction.

Fourth. By petition: If an Indian bill could get the signatures of 218 Members it could be brought on the floor of the House without a rule, but on the average Indian bill I predict that 50 signatures could not be obtained in the whole House.

Thus it is that Indian legislation is defeated year after year. Year after year the Indian claims for damages pile up, and year after year the Indian is denied the chance to prove his damages.

Should the Indians be successful in obtaining a jurisdictional bill, then the case is presented to the Court of Claims. On an average it takes 7 years to get a decision in the Court of Claims. Many Indian claims have been pending for over 15 years and end is not yet.

LXXX—246

This Government did not complain about its sacred credit when it loaned $10,000,000,000 to the Allies. The Government has never said that our Nation will be bankrupt because the Allies will not pay us. They have not paid us, they do not intend to pay us, and this Government knows it.

All this Government will do about these foreign debts is to charge that those Governments, especially France and Italy, repudiated their just obligations. The Government is not in a position to talk repudiation to anyone, since it has repudiated the just claims of the first Americans against it. With less than half of the money squandered in loans to foreign countries we could have paid every last Indian claim, abolished the guardianship over the American Indian and turned him loose as a free citizen.

That would have ended the Indian question, and it will not end until these claims are paid and the shackles taken off the wrists of the Indians.

This Congress is and has been for years pretty well committed to the policy of committee control of legislation, and ordinarily the pronouncements of the committee members have great weight with the House. That is true of all committees except one—the Committee on Indian Affairs. I was put on this committee by the Republicans, but when a bill comes out approved by all the Republicans on the Committee of Indian Affairs that makes no difference to the other Republican Members. The recommendations of the Republican members is totally ignored by the Republicans. The unanimous recommendation of all Democratic members on the committee makes no difference to the Democratic Congress, and when an Indian bill comes up with the support of the Democratic members of the committee, the Democrats in the House rise up thicker than cornstalks and object to the legislation.

How different it is with other committees. When the Committee on Agriculture reports a bill, that is the bill that will be passed and no other bill. One who takes issue with the committee may have the satisfaction of following the dictates of his own conscience, but his influence is stopped before he begins because—because what? Because he is not in accord with the committee.

This question cannot be smothered; this question will haunt this Government until it is settled and settled right. So far as I am concerned, I shall never agree with the policy this Government has pursued and is pursuing in regard to this Indian question. It is wrong and cannot be defended.

I could give other examples, many of them, hundreds of them, a thousand of them, but in all you will find that same spirit of injustice and broken faith which is so glaringly present in the Turtle Mountain case.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE CAUSE AND CURE OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, in a speech in Congress on July 1, 1930, discussing the subject of unemployment, I stated that the wealth in the country at present is 650 times as much as was in the country at the time the Government was established. I further stated that, of the total wealth in the United States today, each person owns only one-fiftieth of the percentage which on the average constituted the share of each person in the wealth of the United States at the beginning of our Government. As year after year more of the wealth produced in our country has gone into the hands of fewer and fewer people, unemployment has increased more and more. These facts show great injustice in the distribution of wealth, with the result that the people have suffered untold hardship. All kinds of plans have been urged to cure the evil. The remedies which we hear most frequently suggested are unemployment insurance, old-age pensions, and measures of that kind.

AUTHOR OF FIRST LABOR PENSION LAW

I introduced and worked successfully for the first pension measure ever passed by Congress, providing for the retirement of aged workers employed by private interests. For the benefit of old people in general, I favor also the most liberal old-age pensions that can be provided by sound legislation. Let us consider every plan, proposal, or suggestion and do everything possible to provide a truly liberal and satisfactory old-age-pension law.

MEASURES WHICH MAKE MORE BEARABLE BUT DO NOT REMEDY INJUSTICE

It is important to note, however, that just as morphine quiets the pain of the body without curing the disease, so measures such as those to which I have referred, merely make more bearable the unjust distribution of wealth, but do not cure the evil by removing the cause of the injustice. Regardless of how much we improve such laws, we do not remedy the injustice resulting from the unjust distribution of wealth. With a sound economic system we should have no unemployment against which to insure and people would earn enough to provide handsomely for old age.

Certainly we should assist in a practical way those who are unemployed and make every possible provision for those who have reached old age without sufficient means to enable them to live comfortably. While, however, we should help rescue from drowning people being carried violently down a river, it is even more important for us to go up the stream to remove the cause which is forcing them into the river. We must find the cause of unavoidable unemployment and poverty.

In the time which has been allowed me I shall point out what I consider to be the cause of unemployment and poverty and the remedy for the evils.

MONEY SYSTEM AND ITS RELATION TO UNJUST DISTRIBUTION OF WEALTH

Mr. Speaker, many people have the notion that a change in the laws relating to money would correct the great injustice in the distribution of wealth. I have not time to fully discuss the money question, but will say a few words as to its relation to conditions of labor and business. Many persons are sure that inflation—that is, the increase of the amount of money in the country—would remove all our troubles in the way of poor business and unemployment. The purpose of inflation is to lessen the value of the dollar—that is, of money. The value of money is measured by the value of goods. The lower the value of money, therefore, the less goods or services it will buy. On the other hand, deflation is wrong. The purpose of deflation—that is, of decreasing the amount of money in the country—is to increase the value of money. The higher the value of money the more goods it will buy.

It is very important and necessary that the value of our money be unchanging so that it will buy as much goods, in general, at one time as at another. In other words, we should have a stable standard of value. To restore the value of money by reducing its value to what it was 10 years ago when most of the present debts were incurred would not be unreasonable, but merely a reduction of the value of money to what it was when the money was borrowed.

MUCH CONFUSION IN REGARD TO MONEY QUESTION

There is no question about which there is so much confusion in thought as there is about the money question. It is argued by some that since the Federal Reserve banks issue money on the basis of a gold reserve, the Government in like manner should print money according to the value of the gold in its vaults. The theory upon which Federal Reserve banks issue money is, in my opinion, not correct, and the Government's doing the same thing would not make it right. Moreover, the mere printing of billions of dollars of money would not get it into the hands of the people.

From a scientific standpoint, money is not in itself wealth. Goods and commodities are wealth. Money issued, in accordance with scientific principles, may be regarded practically as an order upon the public for property or services equal to the value stated on the face of the money. Money, therefore, should be issued for the purpose of making easy the sale and purchase of goods or property. If it does not represent the value of property or services, then it constantly tends to uncertainty in value. I traveled through Germany in 1923 and stopped first at the city of Cologne. As you know, the usual, or standard value of a mark is a little more than 23 cents, but I bought 1,000,000 marks for a dollar on my first day at Cologne, and in less than a week later I bought 4,000,000 marks for a dollar at Munich, Germany. In other words, at Cologne for $1 I got what ordinarily would have cost $230,000, and at Munich for $1 I bought marks which usually would have cost $920,000. The people of Germany were in terrible circumstances, and I saw many pinched and haggard faces.

To function properly money must be unchanging in value or, in other words, stable. If a commodity, such as one of the precious metals, be made the standard of value, then it is sure to be a changing standard of value. Then the greater the demands of trade for the use of such money, the higher becomes the price of the metal, for example, gold, which may be used as money. The rise in the price of gold would mean that the gold, or money based on gold, would buy more goods, and that would mean that the prices of commodities and the wages of labor would become less. It should be clear, then, that nothing of intrinsic value—that is, nothing with value in itself—should be made the standard of value, nor by law be constituted money.

SOUND PRINCIPLES OF A CORRECT MONEY SYSTEM

A sound, stable money could be provided by establishing as the standard of value the average value of the almost 800 commodities in which the people of the United States deal. The old system made it possible for one commodity—gold—to determine the value of everything else. When the supply of gold was limited, either by the money changers or because of insufficient output from natural resources, the value of gold increased and so a certain amount of gold, such as the quantity of gold in a dollar, bought more of all other things than it would buy before. The farmer received less in money for his grain, and the workman received less in money for his labor. If, on the other hand, gold, and therefore the money based on gold, should decrease in value, the money would buy less of commodities or household goods and a little money saved by anyone would not buy as much as when he got it.

A change either up or down in the value of money always does great injustice to someone. Money, based on one commodity, whether gold or something else, is constantly changing in value and, therefore, is always causing injustice to some of the people. If, however, the standard of value, that is, the value of money, were the average value of all commodities in which the American people deal, then each commodity would have an equal influence in determining the value of money. This would assure us of an unchanging standard of value; a sound money.

PROPER METHOD FOR CIRCULATION OF MONEY NECESSARY

Even the much-desired establishment of an unchanging and sound standard of value will not in itself however give us a satisfactory money system. There must be provided also a scientific method for getting the money into the hands of those desiring to deal in real wealth; that is, in commodities and other things which satisfy human needs. Money is practically a certificate by government that the holder of such certificate, called money, has given goods or services equal to the value stated on such certificate; that is, money. Those engaged in trade and industry must be enabled to conveniently procure money for their goods and services. I have not time to fully discuss proper provisions of law to enable people to secure, when desired, money for their goods. Let me say, however, that no private person or company should be allowed to issue money or to fix its value. Only the Government, through a proper central agency, should have authority to do that.

In a general way, it might be stated also that there should be established branch agencies of such central Government monetary agency. A person should have the right to apply to such agency for money on the security of goods owned by him. The agency should have authority then to deliver, in money, to the applicant, the largest percentage of the value of the goods that could be advanced without danger of loss to the Government. If the Government agency were to give the applicant money, amounting to half the value of his goods, the owner would still have in the goods a half interest for which he would not have received money. He would, therefore, need to find a customer so as to get money for his remaining interest in the goods. The money received from the Government agency on the security of goods would make it possible for the owner to take time to find a buyer who would pay a fair price for the goods and so enable the owner to avoid being forced to sell his goods at a loss. On the other hand, the danger of losing his uncashed rights in his goods, because of a less-than-cost price, caused by oversupply, would compel the owner to consider carefully what amount of goods he could produce and be reasonably sure to sell at a fair profit.

The application of the principle just outlined would make possible on the one hand the issuance of any amount of money required by actual trade and industry, and, on the other hand, would cause the return of the money to the Government when it had served its purpose. In short, it would provide what is called an elastic currency.

THEORY OF ACCELERATION OF CIRCULATION OF MONEY OR FORCED SPENDING

It is important to note, however, that neither one kind of money nor another can be eaten as food or put on as clothes. Money may be regarded in the nature of an order on the general public for what the person with the money may desire. In that sense it is proper assistance in the production of real wealth, the things we eat, wear, or otherwise use.

A correct system of commerce should enable everyone to produce and exchange goods on fair terms. The possession of money should indicate that the person having it has given for it something equal to the value shown on the face of the money. Unless, however, an increase of money represents an increase in the amount of commodities, of real wealth, then it is not reliable money.

It is a mistake, to believe that we can improve business and commerce by giving some of the people, at stated times, a certain amount of money and forcing them to expend it within a certain time. The so-called demand for goods resulting from such a practice would be altogether artificial and for a short time would force the production of goods beyond the ordinary requirements of the public, and then the forced buying or demand for goods, like all increased demands, would raise the price of goods. With the rise in price the demand would lessen or, in other words, sales would fall off. If, to keep such a plan going, we were to increase the volume of currency in the country, without at the same time increasing the production of real wealth, we should be simply cheapening the value of all money by putting into circulation money not representing true wealth. On the other hand, if we were not to increase the total volume of currency by a new issuance of money, but instead were, by taxation, to compel one part of the population to give part of its money to another part of the population, then we merely would be increasing the means of buying for one part of the population by taking the means of buying to the same extent from the other part of the population. The operation of such a plan might give momentarily the appearance of increased activity in business, but in a very short time it would be found that the volume of business would lessen.

EVEN A CORRECT MONEY SYSTEM NOT SUFFICIENT REMEDY FOR UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Speaker, I am not one of those who believe that the establishment of even an unchanging and perfect standard of value will prevent injustice in the distribution of the wealth of the country. It would, of course, prevent the specific injustice resulting from a change in the purchasing power of our money. A greater injustice, however—yes; the greatest of all injustices of an economic nature—is due to a total disregard of the true laws of distribution of wealth produced by the cooperation of labor, capital, and natural resources.

FACTORS ENGAGED IN ALL PRODUCTION

According to all of the classic writers on the subject of political economy, three factors are engaged in the production of all goods and commodities. The earlier writers named the three factors land, labor, and capital. Later writers use the terms natural resources, labor, and capital.

The use of different terms, however, is of no real importance. Whether we use the term "land" or "natural resources", what is meant is the earth in some form or other. No material thing, no goods or commodities, can be produced except from the earth. Labor and capital applied to the earth, or what is taken from the earth, supply the commodities and goods which people use.

I have referred already to the constant decrease in the percentage owned on the average by each person in the total wealth of the country. We saw that the percentage of the total wealth owned on the average by each person today is only one-fiftieth of the percentage of the total wealth owned on the average by each person when the United States Government was established.

CAUSE OF THE UNJUST DISTRIBUTION OF WEALTH

The explanation of this manifest injustice is, I think, perfectly clear.

Of the goods or commodities of any kind that may be produced by labor, capital, and natural resources working together, the share of labor is wages, the share of capital is interest, and the owner of the natural resources, which may be used with these two, receives all the rest.

The price, that is, the wages paid for labor, like the price of anything else, depends on how much labor is needed and how many workmen desire to sell their labor. When our country was new, in order to produce a certain amount of commodities, many times the number of workmen were needed than are now employed to produce the same amount of goods. That caused a greater demand for workmen. Among employers there was more competition for men's services. Workmen, therefore, could and did demand a larger share of what was produced; or, in other words, asked better wages. In late years, however, because they were better trained, more skillful and used better tools and machinery, workmen produced commodities in much less time than was at first needed to make them. It is true also that the increase in the general intelligence of the people has made common the better methods of doing practically everything and so has helped to produce more goods in the same or even less time.

Those who have controlled the natural resources, the agencies of production and have employed men, have just claimed for themselves the value of all the time saved as a result of workmen's increased skill and intelligence, and the use of machinery. They cannot morally justify such a claim.

The reason why those in control of the agencies of production can take for themselves the benefits, the value of all the time saved as a result of the education of the workers and the use of machinery, is that they have a practical monopoly of the natural resources. Because, in a certain time, by the labor of fewer and fewer men, the same amount of commodities can be produced, those who control the land and resources upon which men must labor to produce goods can and do discharge more and more men. Suppose that a dozen men owned the whole North American Continent. They could then order workers to work as long each day as they might desire to have them work and give them as little pay as they might see fit, provided such wages would keep them well enough to work. If the men were to refuse to work upon such terms, the owners could order them off the continent, and all they could do then would be to go into the ocean. Because, therefore, men must work on the earth for a living they can be forced to surrender to the owners all the benefit and value resulting from labor's increased producing power. The more goods men can produce in a day the more men can be discharged and turned into the army of the unemployed. This army of unemployed is then the means, the weapon, used to force men, remaining employed, to work as long as or longer than they worked when producing less goods. In short, the unemployed are used to lower constantly the condition of labor and the standard of living.

The philosopher Schopenhauer stated the matter forcibly when he said:

Whether I own the peasant, or the land from which he must obtain his nourishment, the bird or its food, . . . is practically a matter of small importance.

Thomas Paine said:

Landed monopoly has dispossessed more than half the inhabitants of every nation of their natural inheritance.

In Ecclesiastes it is said:

The profit of the earth is for all.

Henry George, author of the greatest book on political economy ever published in the United States, wrote as follows:

Place 100 men on an island from which there is no escape, and whether you make one of these men the absolute owner of the other ninety-nine, or the absolute owner of the . . . island will make no difference either to him or them.

To remedy the evil thus illustrated by George, he urged that the annual value of the earth itself be collected, as revenue, for public use.

This is the remedy which, without any doubt, will finally be applied. What I propose in the meantime is to take the power from the monopoly which has grown and oppressed mankind, as George predicted.

Mr. Speaker, let me emphasize again the fact that while monopoly prevails, better skill, training, and the use of machinery merely make possible greater injustice in the distribution of wealth.

If, for example, 5 years ago an industry, by the labor of 100,000 men working 8 hours per day, was producing all of the shoes needed each year by the people of America, and now, by the labor of 75,000 men working the same number of hours per day, using improved machinery, can produce the same number of shoes, many employers have just taken it for granted that the value of the 25,000 men's time saved rightfully belongs to them. That is not, however, either morally or logically right. The employer should have, of course, the amount of interest paid on the cost of the machinery; and if he shall have become more industrious, enterprising, and efficient, he should have an increase in the wages of management, but such amounts could be paid without greatly reducing the amount of money representing the 25,000 men's working time saved.

REMEDY FOR UNEMPLOYMENT AND UNJUST DISTRIBUTION OF WEALTH

Now, the 25,000 men's time is, of course, one-fourth of the time worked in the first place by the 100,000 men, and that means that if 100,000 men were to work 6 hours per day, or, in other words, three-fourths of the time which they originally worked, they would produce as many shoes as the same 100,000 men produced in the beginning when working 8 hours per day. Since then, in only 6 hours, a man could produce the same number of shoes which before he required 8 hours to produce, his hours of labor should be reduced substantially from 8 to 6 hours per day without reducing his pay. If all of the 100,000 men's working time were likewise reduced to 6 hours per day, then all would continue to be employed making the same number of shoes as they at first produced in 8 hours per day.

The principle of reducing working hours would be the same, of course, whether at the beginning the men worked 7 hours, 6 hours, or any other number of hours per day, and then later produced the same amount of goods in time less by one-fourth, one-fifth, or other amount than was used to do the work at first. If, for example, a man originally did the work in 6 hours and later did the same work in three-fourths of that time, then his working day should be reduced practically one-quarter, or, in other words, should then be $4\frac{1}{2}$ hours instead of 6 hours. It is very important to remember also that because they are producing the same results, the same number of shoes in the shorter working day, the pay of the workers should not be reduced.

If in every industry the working hours were continually reduced in proportion to the reduction in time necessary to do the work, everyone so desiring would continue at work. In short, the proper application of this principle would abolish unemployment.

It is clear, of course, that, with justice, only the National Government could order the reduction of the hours of labor in general. If the States were trusted to do it, we should find one State reducing the hours of labor as justice requires and other States refusing to do so. Then the manufacturer employing labor in the State where hours might have been reduced could not sell his goods in competition with manufacturers employing workers at less cost in States where the hours of labor might not have been reduced.

I have long urged that Congress be given authority to pass laws reducing the hours of labor. I proposed an amendment to the United States Constitution in the following language:

To promote the general welfare, the Congress shall have the power to reduce the number of hours of service per day and days per week for which contracts of employment may be lawfully made.

Let me respectfully and earnestly urge the Judiciary Committee to report favorably in regard to this proposed amendment to the Constitution.

Under the authority proposed in the language which I have quoted, Congress could establish what might be called the Federal Industrial Court. Then, because in fewer hours per day than was before needed, workmen were producing the same amount of goods, proper application could be made to such Industrial Court for a reduction in the hours of labor. If in a certain industry, for example, the court should find labor to be producing commodities in one-fifth less time than was before required, it would order a reduction of substantially one-fifth in the hours of labor. Similar action in regard to the hours of labor in every industry would soon put an end to unavoidable unemployment.

APPLICATION OF PROPOSED REMEDY FOR UNEMPLOYMENT WOULD MAKE WAGE LAW UNNECESSARY

In recent years we have heard a great deal about a minimum-wage law, but with unemployment abolished and everyone able to find a job when desired there would be no wage question, for no one would work or need to work for less than fair wages. With unemployment abolished and employers looking for workmen, if one employer would not pay him fair wages, the worker could go to another employer who would do so.

MONOPOLY IS CAUSE OF UNJUST DISTRIBUTION OF WEALTH

As already stated, the fundamental cause of the unjust distribution of wealth and of unemployment is the permitting of those controlling the agencies of production to take for their own use the benefits and values resulting from the increase in the producing power of workmen. If a few men are allowed to control the source of all wealth—that is, the earth or the parts of the earth necessary for use by our people—then it will be possible for them to compel everyone living in our country to work as long and for as little pay as may be offered. More men will be thrown into the army of unemployed as fewer men can be forced to do the same work. This enables the few to take for themselves the bounties of nature which rightfully belong to all.

If the law were to require, in all industries, the reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the lessening of time needed to produce goods, then everybody would be employed and there could be no industrial depression. If everyone were employed or could be employed if so desired, then no one could be forced to work for less than fair wages. The fact that a man could go elsewhere and procure fair compensation for his services would compel his employer to pay him fairly. This would put an end to the dreaded evil, unemployment. With everyone employed and able to buy, the demand for goods would soon equal the supply. Not only would the employee class get justice but employers would benefit immeasurably from an assured market for their goods. Poverty would vanish and men would be freed from an economic slavery which is even more cruel and oppressive than was chattel slavery. [Applause.]

Will the principle, I have urged, become law? My hope is unbounded, but for answer let me again quote from George as follows:

The truth that I have tried to make clear will not find easy acceptance. If that could be it would have been accepted long ago. If that could be, it would never have been obscured. But it will find friends—those who will toil for it; suffer for it; if need be, die for it. This is the power of truth.

But he says also, however, that—

For those who recognize justice and would stand for her, success is not the only thing. Success! Why, falsehood has often that to give; and injustice has often that to give. Must not truth and justice have something to give that is their own by proper right—theirs in essence and not by accident? That they have, and that here and now, everyone who has felt their exaltation knows.

Let me hint my own feeling in the matter by repeating a few lines written by me when a young fellow of 23 just out of school. These are the lines:

Poetic lore has often told
Of Nature's blessings, manifold;
And humbler prose, perhaps in mirth,
Proclaims men equal on this earth.

If this be true, why do we see
The wretches men oft seem to be;
Why see the poor forsaken wail
Searching in vain for shelter safe?

One child, of God, first sees the light,
Surrounded by gold and linen white;
Another, Nature's canopy sees,
The Earth his cradle, e'en that not his.

With dirge and funeral rites they lay
The miser in his downy grave;
But yonder poor old tott'ring serf
Can hardly reach kind Nature's berth.

How can we, suffer'g then, behold
God's blessings ruled by weight of gold,
His word construed by greedy wealth,
His off'rings filched with sneaking stealth?

Courage, then, ye men, yet strong,
Gird up your loins, go join the throng,
Battle for Freedom, long sung by the Muse,
Leave not a foeman, heed no flag of truce.

And when the din of battle's o'er,
And selfish Greed shall reign no more,
We'll hasten forth, proclaiming then,
Peace on Earth, good will toward men.

[Applause.]

Yes; often seems the Prince of Light overwhelmed by the Powers of Darkness. So it seems, but finally we shall know that it only seems. To noble minds and hearts of courage Duty's call is loud and clear. Doubt not at all Right's final triumph. The cause of justice will prevail. Tyranny must vanish to the limbo of forgotten things. No longer will hardship plague mankind when we shall take courage and strike from men the chains of injustice.

Released, then, from the power of the oppressor, no more the victim of fear and free from want and the dread of want, men will joyously obey their noblest and best impulses. In their spirit of freedom and with gladness men will embrace the inspiring principles of justice and eagerly devote their hearts and minds to expressing the harmony of life. Then from the earth will vanish the meanness, the envy, the jealousy, and hatred which now blight our harassed civilization.

Along the highway of life, with songs of joy pealing from their hearts and the spirit of justice shining from their eyes, will march the sons of men in the glorious cause of brotherhood. Men will be free men and the grandeur of creation will be manifest throughout the land. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'MALLEY). Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I am going to speak briefly this morning on the subject of the Federal Register. You have received in the last few days two copies of the Federal Register. I take it and I say it is regrettable that many Members do not know what the Federal Register is. I shall undertake to explain it to give the reasons why we have been anxious to publish it.

The Federal Register is a daily compilation of all the administrative laws—a daily record of all Executive orders and all rules and regulations issued by the President and all departmental and bureau chiefs. There is also provision for the codification of all past Executive orders and rules and regulations. The daily Register will appear upon your desks five times a week. It will be published Saturdays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays. No rule or regulation can be legally effective unless published therein. As you read the Federal Register you will be apprised, and the whole Nation will be apprised, of what the various bureaus and departments are doing with reference to the issuance of the rules and regulations, all of which have the force and effect of law.

We pass daily in this Chamber statute after statute. They are classified and compiled as statutes, and you can find them readily in the Clerk's office, in all law libraries, in most law offices, in all public offices.

But try and find the rules and regulations that have been issued, which still have the force and effect of law, for the last 50 years. Unfortunately you cannot find them. The Federal Register is supposed to and will remedy that defect.

When you take into consideration that the heads of bureaus have the right to issue these regulations, provide therein dire penalties, including fine and imprisonment—and you further take into account the fact that the rules and regulations cannot often be found, I say the situation is barbarous, and it is for the purpose of removing this barbarous defect that the Judiciary Committee reported out my Federal Register bill, which has passed the House and the Senate and been signed by the President.

Numerous organizations—the American Bar Association, the American Medical Association, and scores of associations equally important—have been in favor of this Federal Register. Now, there are some, particularly the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW], who think it is too expensive and ought not to be issued.

I cannot conceive that these gentlemen would want to punish citizens for violation of rules they are ignorant of and cannot, even by due diligence, discover. Bentham said:

We hear of tyrants, and those cruel ones; but whatever we may have felt, we have never heard of any tyrant in such sort cruel as to punish men for disobedience to laws or orders which he had kept them from the knowledge of.

When you perceive that, for example, in the National Recovery Administration, which has gone to limbo, there were 2,998 administrative orders issued, scattered among 5,991 press releases, involving 10,000 pages, and when you further contemplate that you often did not know where they were or what they were, involving the rights, properties, and liberties of the people of the Nation, indeed it was time to call a halt. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] said that the N. R. A. has passed. There is more than the N. R. A. There are a thousand and one bureaus doing the self-same thing that the N. R. A. had been doing. There are, for example, the Executive orders of the President. Try to find the Executive orders by President Coolidge or President Harding or President Hoover, even. They were frequently issued in single sheets of paper, in single pamphlets, sometimes they appear as telegrams, and they are supposed to be filed in the State Department, but try to find them. There is no compilation, no index, a hopeless jumble.

I herewith give you the number of Executive orders and proclamations issued by the various Presidents from Lincoln down to Roosevelt:

Executive orders issued by the various Presidents

	Executive orders	Proclamations
Franklin D. Roosevelt.....	1,469	121
Hoover.....	1,004	168
Coolidge.....	1,248	201
Harding.....	484	80
Wilson.....	1,770	361
Taft.....	699	365
Theodore Roosevelt.....	111	407
McKinley.....	50	60
Cleveland.....	168	53
Harrison.....	3	66
Cleveland.....	15	22
Arthur.....	3	17
Garfield.....	None	None
Hayes.....	None	15
Grant.....	13	55
Johnson.....	5	51
Lincoln.....	2	40

² First administration.

You will note Lincoln issued two Executive orders, and Roosevelt during the time he has been in office issued already over 1,469 orders. Garfield issued no Executive orders; Hoover issued 1,004; Grant issued 13; Coolidge 1,248.

We are told by a committee of the American Bar Association:

The practice of filing Executive orders with the Department of State is not uniformly or regularly followed, and the totals are really greater than above indicated. Some orders are retained or buried in the files of the Government departments, some are confidential and are not published, and the practice as to printing and publication of orders is not uniform. Some orders are made known and available rather promptly after their approval; the publication of others may be delayed a month or more, with consequent confusion in numbering. The comparatively large number of recent orders which incorporate provisions purporting to impose criminal penalties by way of fine and imprisonment for violation is without numerical precedent in the history of the Government.

The association then recommended regular publication of these orders.

I commend to the House the very thoughtful letter which I have received from our colleague from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] under date of February 20, 1936.

MY DEAR MR. CELLER: I am advised that you will have a hearing on tomorrow, Friday, on the bill introduced by our colleague [Mr. COCHRAN] to repeal the Federal Register Act. I regret very much that my absence from the city will prevent my personal attendance at your hearing.

Without going into a lot of detail, I will say that the Appropriations Committee of the House (both the deficiency subcommittee and the Committee on Independent Offices, each of which I am a member), has gone into the matter most carefully with reference to the establishment of the Federal Register. In my judgment, there is a very definite and positive need for this publication and for the compilation for which the act provides.

It seems to me that the set-up is modest and as economical as possible under the circumstances. The cost of printing will, of course, be by far the major item. In my judgment as a Member of the House, it would be a very serious mistake to interfere with the organization which has been set up and which is now busily engaged in carrying out the mandate of Congress.

With best wishes, I am,

Yours very truly,

CLIFTON A. WOODRUM.

We have made an appropriation thus far for the publishing of the Federal Register, for a period of 4 months, of $100,000. There is involved an employment of but 15 persons. I am in receipt of a very interesting letter from Mr. B. R. Kennedy, Director of the Division of the Federal Register, which I herewith set forth:

THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 12, 1936.

HON. EMANUEL CELLER,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CELLER: Replying to your letter of March 11 enclosing the comments of Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania, on the appropriation for printing the Federal Register, it seems to me that Mr. SNYDER's statement that $75,000 was cut out of the appropriation for the present fiscal year in order to eliminate the publication of the past accumulations of regulations is erroneous. My understanding, when I appeared before the Appropriations Committee, was that the only reason for cutting the amount asked for from $295,000 to $100,000 was that the time involved was only 4 months, and on an estimate of $300,000 a year for printing the Register, $100,000 seemed the proper amount for the 4-month period. Moreover, the Federal Register Act did not contemplate the printing of the supplemental edition during this fiscal year. It has first to be authorized by the President.

As to the comment that some of the committee feel that this publication may not be as valuable as its sponsors thought it would be, there is nothing I can say which will add to the statements made by Judge Stevens, Mr. Dickinson, Professor Griswold, Congressman Shanley, Congressman Driscoll, Judge Townsend, and members of your subcommittee in the hearings before your subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee. The necessity and value of the Federal Register were so thoroughly explained by them and the duty of the Government to publish such a paper so carefully outlined that it would be impossible to enlarge upon them.

If there is any further information at my disposal which you would like, please let me know.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

B. R. KENNEDY, Director.

I often made search for certain rules, and frequently was told, "They are out of print." At other times they were lost.

We had an anomalous situation with reference to the oil code. A man was indicted and convicted in the lower courts.

The case came to the Supreme Court of the United States, when, lo and behold, it was discovered before the argument in that august body that the particular provision of which the defendant was accused of violating never existed, and the Government was put in the awkward and embarrassing position before the Supreme Court of being compelled to ask for the dismissal or withdrawal of the suit, because the alleged offense was not an offense at all. Apparently neither the N. R. A. officials nor the Department of Justice knew of the exact wording of that code. The Register would have saved the Government expense and embarrassment and the citizen his trouble and chagrin at being classed as a criminal. At the time this very significant remark was made by Chief Justice Hughes, "Why is there not a repository of the Executive orders and the rules and regulations issued by the various departments?" The Federal Register, I say to the gentleman from Missouri, answers the query put by Chief Justice Hughes.

In an argument before the Supreme Court last week on the Securities and Exchange Commission Act the claim was made by the defendant contesting the act's validity and constitutionality that the rules and regulations of the Securities and Exchange Commission under the basic statute must be published, and that there was no publication of the rules and regulations of the Securities and Exchange Commission, because they were simply issued by a clerk or the secretary of the Commission and then given to the newspapers. Very properly they said that was not publication, and I think the Supreme Court will have something to say as to whether or not that is publication; but the minute such rules are filed in the Federal Register, where he who runs may read, that will be publication beyond question. Brother COCHRAN would run the risk of having the law declared invalid for want of publication.

Away back in 1890 the same situation confronted England. There was an avalanche of administrative law, which, as here, has the same effect as statute law. Back in those dark days Englishmen argued as we are arguing, but they saw the light—long before we did—and England started to publish its Gazette, which is exactly what we are publishing as a Federal Register. Every Latin country has wrestled with this problem, and each country has its gazette or register. All of the colonies of England have it.

Canada has had one for years, and I should say that the opposition is almost verging on false economy, as far as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] is concerned, and particularly those who will in the future try to strike at the Federal Register by cutting off appropriations. We have appropriated $100,000 for a 4-month period. I am willing to try the thing out. We are trying it out. If it does not work, I shall be the first to come here and ask the withdrawal of the publication of the Register, but I do not think that will be the situation at all. For the interest of the gentleman from Missouri—and only for his benefit and no other, and I say this very respectfully—we of the Judiciary Committee conducted a second hearing, something rather unusual. We had the chief justice of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, Judge Harold M. Stephens, before our committee. He is an expert, probably the most skilled one on the subject of administrative law. Almost all rules and regulations of all departments sooner or later come for adjudication in his court in the District of Columbia. He said:

It is idle to attempt to know what the law is today without knowing what the regulations are or the Executive orders, and I, as a lawyer and a judge, say that we have no dependable source except the Federal Register for obtaining those laws and those rules and regulations at the present time.

Judge Stephens had previously been the Assistant Attorney General prosecuting the alleged oil-code violations. Among other things, he said:

Now, my friend, Congressman COCHRAN, says that all I would have had to do in the Supreme Court, when the Chief Justice and the other Justices asked me why I had not found this order, was to go and ask a question and go and get it. We had tried for weeks to get it. That is a spectacular illustration, nevertheless, of the underlying principle that I am here to speak about, and that is, that no such situation should be permitted by law to exist.

Furthermore, the present Assistant Attorney General, John Dickinson, formerly the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, appeared before our committee and listened to the arguments of the gentleman from Missouri, who also appeared. The latter stated that the Register was unnecessary because the constituent could get the information desired from his Congressman or from the trade associations that have representatives in Washington. In reply Assistant Attorney General Dickinson said, as follows:

Now, it is perfectly true that, by belonging to some of the associations to which Mr. COCHRAN referred, one could get a good deal of the information that he has in mind. However, there are a good many business people in this country that do not belong to those associations. There are a great many business people that are not large enough to maintain the contacts in their own organizations that is necessary to supply them with this essential information as to the law. I do not feel that an individual who is not in position to maintain those contacts ought to be any the less able to find the law applicable to him, than the individual who does belong to organizations of that kind.

I am thinking about the lawyer out through the country, the lawyer in the small country town who has a case that involves tracing down of the law frequently through those rules and regulations. I think they ought to be available in the country court-houses throughout this country, compiled and currently issued, these rules and regulations of the Federal Government, in the same way that there are available sets of United States Statutes at Large, and sets of the Supreme Court and Federal Reporters.

I am thinking about the man who only occasionally comes into contact with these rules and regulations, the lawyer who only occasionally comes into contact with them, but to whom they are very vital when he does need them.

Mr. COCHRAN referred to the compilations that are issued by the different bureaus themselves. That is simply another instance of the feeling that there is a responsibility upon the Government to make this material available to the people who are bound by it. It seems to me that that is an argument in favor of the Register rather than an argument against it, because the publication now is necessary, as is illustrated by the compilations that are issued by the various bureaus and departments.

There also appeared before our committee Prof. Edwin N. Griswold, of Harvard University. He had been 5 years with our Department of Justice. He had written a very illuminating article for the Harvard Law Review, entitled "Government in Ignorance of the Law", on the need for the publication of all rules and regulations. It was that article that inspired me to introduce the bill. Professor Griswold testified as follows:

As a matter of fact, as I recall it, I think it went back to a day in 1930, when I was assigned to prepare a draft of an opinion of the Attorney General in response to an inquiry from the Secretary of the Treasury about two poor school teachers out in Illinois, who had endorsed some Liberty bonds in blank to send them in for redemption, and after they had been endorsed in blank they were stolen; and the question was whether they were entitled to have them replaced or whether their endorsement in blank deprived them of their property after they were stolen.

So I found that the law said that the Secretary may restore stolen bonds, under regulations to be prescribed by him, and, naturally, I looked for the regulations. I hunted high and low through the Department of Justice. There simply was not a trace of any such regulations. I called up the Treasury Department and got hold of the Bond Division, and they said, "Why, yes; there is such a regulation, but it has been out of print for years. If you will come over here, we will be glad to let you see it." I went over and saw that copy of it, the relevant part, and I said, "Is this the latest thing?" And they said, "No; there have been three or four amendments. We have them in the drawer here." They never had been printed and that was the thing that controlled the question whether the ladies out in Illinois were entitled to $2,000, which were their life savings.

The difficulty with the situation, or with the remedy which Mr. COCHRAN suggests, seems to me is the fact that for some of the regulations it is not so hard to find them as it is awfully hard to be sure you have got the latest thing. The dangers are from the regulations you do not know about, and as the situation now stands it is almost hopeless to find out whether that is the regulation on any certain particular matter.

Since we do have the Federal Register, we can look at one place, the index, and find out if that is the regulation on this point.

I think this is a situation where it is very easy, in the name of economy, to do something that will turn out to be very expensive, and I think particularly about just one case, which could be one case out of many, in which I had charge of preparing the Government's brief before the Supreme Court of the United States. The question involved some insurance in favor of an enlisted man in the Navy. He had enlisted at one place and had been discharged, and reenlisted again within 3 months after that, and the law provides that if you reenlist within 3 months, your term is continuous, because it gives a man a sort of chance to get a vacation between enlistments. When he reenlisted, he did not instruct the pay clerk to deduct the amounts necessary to pay the premiums on his insurance, and those amounts had not been deducted, and he had always taken full pay thereafter, and knew that he got full pay. He died, and then his heirs claimed the insurance.

Now, it looked very bad, because his enlistment wasn't continuous. It looked bad. I defended the case, and the statute said something about a continuous enlistment and the instructions to withhold the pay should continue, "except as otherwise provided by regulation."

Well, that case had been tried through the lower courts without anybody ever finding any regulation which otherwise provided, and had gotten before the Supreme Court, and I took 2 days of the Government's time and went through a great mass of regulations, and finally, much to my surprise, found the specific regulation that said that if you reenlist in a different place, that you must make a new declaration, must take out your insurance premiums. That regulation saved the Government of the United States $10,000. When you multiply that by a few, you have covered all the expenses of printing the Federal Register, and very likely a great deal more.

I have great respect and regard for the gentleman from Missouri. I commend his zeal for decreased expenditures. But in this matter his zeal is misplaced.

I will say that we on the Judiciary Committee are trying also to keep the expense down. I shall report to the House shortly a bill to codify instead of compile all past rules and regulations. The codification would be a smaller and more economical publication than compilation, because it would eliminate a great deal of dead material.

The gentleman from Missouri said that there was no demand for the Register. That is answered by the testimony of Mr. Kennedy, which, in part, is as follows:

In order to indicate the interest shown by the general public in the Federal Register and the necessity for such a publication, it is only necessary to consider several outstanding facts: First, the long-felt need for this publication was emphatically shown by the attitude of the Chief Justice, when he inquired in the "hot oil" cases whether there was some one place in the Government where the public could find all Executive orders, proclamations, codes, rules, and regulations of general applicability and legal effect, particularly those embodying a penalty, which had never been promulgated and of which the public was unaware. This led to the establishment of a committee representing most of the Government agencies, which eventually drew up an outline for the Federal Register Act.

The number of copies of the daily issue of the Register which have been requested by the various Government agencies as necessary for their use approximates 2,200. There have been about 500 requests from depository libraries for copies of the Register and as many more are expected. There will be needed for the use of the Senate and the House of Representatives and other officials at the Capitol about 1,200 copies. There have been about 200 telephone inquiries at the office of the Division of the Federal Register as to date of issue, cost, and so forth. More than 50 individuals and corporations, some of national prominence, have made inquiry or asked to be placed on the mailing list of this publication. One hundred and twenty-five copies go to the Library of Congress for exchange with foreign countries.

The State Department, for many years, has had from 600 to 1,000 copies of each Executive order printed, and in a large number of cases this entire supply has been exhausted in a short time. The Government Printing Office has received constant requests for Executive orders, rules, and regulations from various departments, many of which it has been unable to furnish because they were never printed.

There are various commercial services, such as Commerce Clearing House, Prentice-Hall, the United States News, and others, which have an aggregate subscription list of more than 300,000 and which furnish their subscribers, among other things, with information as to Executive orders, rules, regulations, codes, and so forth. None of them, however, furnishes a complete publication such as the Federal Register will do.

The normal procedure for requesting copies of regulations, etc., is to address the agency issuing them, and every such agency receives numerous requests for these regulations, which they fill if possible. The fact that many of them do not print or publish their regulations is one of the reasons for the existence of the Federal Register. The office of the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, continually has numerous calls for Government regulations of all kinds.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York has mentioned my name on several occasions during his address, and in fairness I ask unanimous consent that I may have 5 minutes to reply to the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. CELLER. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have 5 minutes to reply to the gentleman from Missouri.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] has 20 minutes under the order of the House.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I should be glad to accommodate the gentleman from Missouri by delaying my remarks for 5 minutes.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object unless I have 5 minutes to reply to the gentleman from Missouri. Will the gentleman let me have 3 minutes?

Mr. COCHRAN. No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CELLER. I reserve the right to object unless I have 2 minutes to reply.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Does the gentleman object? No conditions can attach to the request.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield to me for 2 minutes?

Mr. COCHRAN. No; I will not.

Mr. CELLER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], under the special order of the House, is recognized for 20 minutes.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include a brief table prepared from information furnished through the Department of Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, as I have two important subjects to discuss, I request that I be not interrupted.

Mr. Speaker, great indignation has been expressed throughout the country at the procedure of a certain committee which, without authority of law, has secured access to millions of private wire messages. Practically the entire blame for this situation has been laid at the door of a certain committee. I think the shoe is on the wrong foot. If such a committee desires to exploit itself to gratify its curiosity, I am not so much concerned about it as I am at the failure of officials to respect their oaths of office.

The Federal Communications Commission came into being by act of Congress approved June 19, 1934, now known as Public, No. 416, Seventy-third Congress. As was to be expected, the Commission has set up a long list of employees, various divisions, always to aggrandize their own jobs, and to provide patronage positions for deserving Democrats. It happens that this organization has a peculiar feature about it, that no end of employees can be given positions outside the civil service, but in addition to that they can secure employees through the civil service. So they can pad the payroll account of this Commission either way, through the civil service or through Democratic patronage. I do not know whether that provision applies to other commissions, but it does apply to the one to which I am referring.

The first duty of the Commission itself should have been to acquaint itself with its own authority and to know the contents of the law under which it is functioning. The ignorance which its members have shown is culpable and deserves the severest condemnation, even to the extent of removal from office. I advocate the latter procedure. I doubt if it will be taken, but I advocate removal from office of the members of this Commission.

Here we have another example of the Government meddling in business. I do not hesitate to say that there is absolutely no authority in law for compelling telegraph companies to break confidence with their customers and provide any committee with their entire file of messages. The Federal Communications Commission should have known the contents of section 220 of the act, which permits investigation and examination only for the purpose of checking accounts. I have the act before me, and for the information of the House I want to call attention, on page 16, to the authority for inspection which is granted to the Commission. Paragraph (c) of section 220 reads as follows:

(c) The Commission shall at all times have access to and the right of inspection and examination of all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing, and kept or required to be kept by such carriers, and the provisions of this section respecting the preservation and destruction of books, papers, and documents shall apply thereto. The burden of proof to justify every accounting entry questioned by the Commission shall be on the person making, authorizing, or requiring such entry and the Commission may suspend a charge or credit pending submission of proof by such person. Any provision of law prohibiting the disclosure of the contents of messages or communications shall not be deemed to prohibit the disclosure of any matter in accordance with the provisions of this section.

This entire paragraph applies purely to the authority for inspection for accounting purposes and nothing else.

I also find that paragraph (f) reads as follows:

(f) No member, officer, or employee of the Commission shall divulge any fact or information which may come to his knowledge during the course of examination of books or other accounts, as hereinbefore provided, except insofar as he may be directed by the Commission or by a court.

Now, that ties in every member of the Commission. Authority to inspect these telegrams and turn them over to a certain committee could not have been given by anybody but the entire Commission unless they violated section (f) of the statute to which I am referring. Bear that in mind.

Except insofar as he may be directed by the Commission or by a court.

Certainly, it is a long stretch of imagination to consider a committee as a court.

I want now to refer also to another paragraph of the law, section 605, which reads as follows:

UNAUTHORIZED PUBLICATION OF COMMUNICATIONS

SEC. 605. No person receiving or assisting in receiving, or transmitting, or assisting in transmitting, any interstate or foreign communication by wire or radio shall divulge or publish the existence, contents, substance, purport, effect, or meaning thereof, except through authorized channels of transmission or reception, to any person other than the addressee, his agent, or attorney, or to a person employed or authorized to forward such communication to its destination, or to proper accounting or distributing officers of the various communicating centers over which the communication may be passed, or to the master of a ship under whom he is serving, or in response to a subpoena issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, or on demand of other lawful authority; and no person not being authorized by the sender shall intercept any communication and divulge or publish the existence, contents, substance, purport, effect, or meaning of such intercepted communication to any person; and no person not being entitled thereto shall receive or assist in receiving any interstate or foreign communication by wire or radio and use the same or any information therein contained for his own benefit or for the benefit of another not entitled thereto; and no person having received such intercepted communication or having become acquainted with the contents, substance, purport, effect, or meaning of the same or any part thereof, knowing that such information was so obtained, shall divulge or publish the existence, contents, substance, purport, effect, or meaning of the same or any part thereof, or use the same or any information therein contained for his own benefit or for the benefit of another not entitled thereto: Provided, That this section shall not apply to the receiving, divulging, publishing, or utilizing the contents of any radio communication broadcast, or transmitted by amateurs or others for the use of the general public, or relating to ships in distress.

What could be more positive than the denial of authority to divulge the contents of any telegram? Even if shown to be "on demand of lawful authority", such permission could only be construed as for lawful purposes.

I may say further that this is not the first time this question has come up. The Securities and Exchange Commission nearly a year ago—I think they have been in existence about a year—asked for the contents of certain telegrams and the then General Counsel of the Federal Communications Commission, Mr. Spearman, denied it. It is a matter of record that the request for those telegrams was denied.

Further than that, Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, in his official position in the Department of Justice, later on also asked to be given copies of certain telegrams, and his request was likewise denied. More recently this permission to which I have referred was given; and not only did the entire Commission go on record in favor of showing those telegrams, but the telegrams were sorted out by the officials of the Commission into two piles, one of which they thought would be of interest to a certain committee, and the other they thought would not be of any use to them, and they cast those to one side. In other words, a certain committee was being waited upon by the Commission or some agent of theirs—a patronage appointee, I suppose—looking around for this information. I think the culpability of the Commission is so gross, and they have gone so far beyond their authority under the law, that they should be summarily removed from office. [Applause.] I demand such action on the part of the administration, but I do not think the demand will be recognized by the parties in charge. I do feel, however, that the business interests of this country have some rights, even under this administration, to protection in their legitimate business; and certainly no man, no Member of this House, or of any other body, would say that the entire file of telegrams sent by the business concerns of this country should be open to any committee whatsoever.

I think that is the story of the present situation, and it is one that ought to be corrected and regulated. If this sort of thing is to be continued, and no man or business concern is to have any protection from the inquisitiveness of certain people, what will happen? It does not appear to me to be a very satisfactory situation. I leave that subject there.

RECIPROCAL-TRADE TREATIES

I want now to congratulate the State Department on having received the resignation of Professor Grady, who has been more responsible, I think, for the phraseology of the trade agreements than any other one man, although, of course, his superior is the great internationalist, Dr. Sayre, and Dr. Sayre's superior officer is our old colleague and intimate friend, Cordell Hull.

I was interested, and quite amused as well, Sunday morning, to read in the press the resignation of Dr. Grady, the internationalist from California; but the principal feature of his resignation that struck me as so extremely interesting was the fact that it will not take effect until July 1, in order that he may remain in the East rather than return to Berkeley, Calif., during the period that Mrs. Grady is a delegate at large from California to the national Democratic convention to be held in Philadelphia. Dr. Grady, it will be represented, has acted in the most nonpartisan, patriotic manner in trying to ruin the domestic trade of this country and bring in goods from foreign lands—entirely impartial and nonpartisan, I assume. It did look quite queer to me, however, that he was anxious to stay here until he was sure that his chief, Mr. Roosevelt, had been renominated and that part of the effort to secure his nomination should come from Mrs. Grady.

What is the result of the trade agreements constantly being brought to the surface? Why, it is the tearing down of our industries. I was amused a few moments ago to see over in the old House Office Building lobby pictures showing new land that is going to be cultivated by the W. P. A., the P. W. A., or some other alphabetical agency, in order to put fertility in the soil and develop new land. What are you going to do with the new land when, through the reduction of tariff rates, you open the markets of this country to all foreign produce?

How can it be justly said that Dr. Grady knows better what is good for the agriculturalists of this country than they do themselves or the Members of this Congress? He has shown great conceit in his own opinion of himself, but it so happens that all of us do not agree with him.

The result of these reciprocal-trade treaties is shown in the accompanying table which I have been given permission to insert in the Record and which appears at this point.

Recorded exports and imports
[Source: Department of Commerce]

Year	Goods sold to the world, net exports	Silver bought from the world	Gold bought from the world	Total
1929.....	$841,000,000	19,000,000	120,000,000	740,000,000
1930.....	782,000,000	11,000,000	278,000,000	515,000,000
1931.....	334,000,000	2,000,000	176,000,000	508,000,000
1932.....	289,000,000	6,000,000	11,000,000	272,000,000

1934.....	478,000,000	86,000,000	1,217,000,000	1,825,000,000
1935.....	234,000,000	336,000,000	1,739,000,000	1,841,000,000

We exported from this country in 1929 goods to the value of $841,000,000 in excess of our imports. There has been a continuing decrease, except for one year, from then until 1935, at which time our net exports had fallen to $234,000,000. The balance of trade was the other way by some $19,000,000. Last year we bought $336,000,000 worth of silver, and in the corresponding time last year we bought $1,739,000,000 worth of gold, which is now stacked up in this country. There is no use for it, there is no purpose whatsoever in having it. This results in a total balance of trade against us last year of $1,841,000,000. The way that was brought about is that we have reduced our own markets in connection with exports and we have opened our markets to imports from foreign countries. We have paid for the extra balance in imports of gold and silver, not in our own commodities but in stocks, bonds, and other securities. The foreigners have taken that money and put it into our securities and their own securities on the markets of Wall Street and elsewhere. That is the distinct, positive, and proved result of your reciprocal-trade agreements. The sooner that law is repealed the better for the interests of this country, whether they be agricultural or what they may be.

Mr. Speaker, there is no way whereby you can force foreign countries, getting our gold and silver in payment for their produce brought to this country, to buy our products in accordance with the manner the reciprocal treaties call for. Theoretically the scheme might be a good one, but it is like so many other will-o'-the-wisps, practically it is ruination to agricultural and mercantile pursuits of this country.

I received a telegram yesterday from a mill in my State stating that it was obliged to consolidate with a mill in another State because they have not business enough to keep them going. They have to move out of the State of Massachusetts because there is not enough to keep them going, owing to the tremendous amount of imports coming into this country. So we find that these reciprocal treaties bring about no benefit whatsoever to the manufacturers or orders for our goods.

We are getting ready to spend $500,000,000 annually to curtail surplus crops. Yet these same surplus crops will be increased in direct proportion to lowered tariff rates on all forms of agricultural products. Think of it! You are increasing the surplus crops directly as you receive imports from foreign countries, particularly from Canada, of the products that they grow. It is a shame. We destroy our American industries by tariff reductions in giving foreigners increased purchasing power, and they do not use this increased purchasing power to buy our goods.

Mr. Speaker, there is the story. The statements I am making plainly prove two things: First, that further tariff reductions are detrimental to the United States; and, second, it is a false assumption to say that foreigners will buy our goods if we give them increased purchasing power, whether by tariff reductions or gold and silver purchases. The records show they do not buy our goods. The tables show that the foreigners do not use their increased receipts to purchase our goods, but rather to increase their own dividends. That is what they are doing. If they took the money that we are providing them with to balance accounts, it would not be long before their $13,000,000,000 of indebtedness on account of the war could be paid off. That is not what they want to use this money for. I do not know why that would not be a fair transaction. They have shipped their goods to this country, and all we get out of it is the opportunity to pay for the goods and they get the benefit of the exchange. I do not see why one account could not balance the other. I do not think there is any explanation why we should be paying out one and a half billion dollars a year—$3,000,000,000 in 2 years—for foreign-made goods and gold and silver and not force them to credit the balance they owe us from the war.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to filibuster against the omnibus bills this afternoon, which involve millions of dollars. There are many meritorious bills that should be passed. I do think the membership of the House should know that we are about to consider these bills. I therefore make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently not a sufficient number.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 36]

Adair	Dear	Kerr	Romjue
Andrews, N. Y.	Dempsey	Kleberg	Russell
Ayers	DeRouen	Larrabee	Sabath
Bacon	Ditter	Lee, Okla.	Sanders, La.
Berlin	Doutrich	Lewis, Md.	Schulte

Corning	Jenckes, Ind.	Reilly
Crowther	Kee	Rich
Culkin	Kelly	Robison, Ky.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and forty-five Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. BANKHEAD, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9863) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10919) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. GLASS, Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. STEIWER, and Mr. NORBECK to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3071) entitled "An act providing for the placing of improvements on the areas between the shore and bulkhead lines in rivers and harbors", requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. COPELAND, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. McNARY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first omnibus bill on the Private Calendar.

The Clerk called the first omnibus bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 8236, for the relief of sundry claimants, and for other purposes.

STANLEY A. JERMAN, RECEIVER FOR A. J. PETERS CO., INC.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title I—(H. R. 1366. For the relief of Stanley A. Jerman, receiver for A. J. Peters Co., Inc.)

That the claim of Stanley A. Jerman, receiver for A. J. Peters Co., Inc., for forage delivered by the said A. J. Peters Co. to the Quartermaster Corps, War Department, during the late World War, and the years 1917 to 1919, inclusive, and used by the War Department, for which no payment whatever has ever been made under the following contracts and orders: P. O. 20847, P. O. 21212 to P. O. 21217, both inclusive, P. O. 21219, P. O. 21319, P. O. 21320, P. O. 21469, P. O. 21494, 51, contract dated March 31, 1917, P. O. 2350 to P. O. 2352, both inclusive, P. O. 20260, P. O. 20836 to P. O. 20838, both inclusive, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the United States Court of Claims with jurisdiction to hear and determine the same to judgment, notwithstanding the statute of limitations: Provided, That the petition is filed within 6 months from the date of this act.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out title I.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Page 1, line 3, strike out all of title I.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, numerous omnibus bills are on the calendar today. The membership should understand that the first two bills are war claims bills. The war ended in 1918, seventeen years ago, but there are claims here that go back to the Civil War.

This first claim has been considered by the War Department, by the Department of Justice, and by the Comptroller General, and they allowed a net balance on the claim of $2,428, which was paid and closed the case.

The claimants were indicted, but this did not preclude their right to go into the Court of Claims if they had desired to do so. They slept on their rights. Three Government agencies have considered this case, and now we are asked to send it to a fourth Government agency, and the claimants want $31,000.

This is all I have to say on this bill, Mr. Speaker, except I would like to call the attention of the House to the fact that in Friday's RECORD, which you will find in the rack, at page 3607, I briefed these claims, and the information that I furnished the Members is not my own entirely but comes from the various departments to my committee. I also have received reports from the Comptroller General in each case that I mention, and he is in possession of whatever records still exist in each of these cases.

I am perfectly willing for the House to consider the claims and expedite them, but I think you should know the facts in reference to each one of them.

There are dozens of meritorious claims in some of the omnibus bills that should be passed today, but sandwiched in between them are bills that amount to large sums; and in this one bill we have up now the total amount involved is $1,288,000, comprised in five different measures. I leave it to the House as to whether it wants to pass the first measure and let a fourth agency of the Government audit a claim when three different agencies have audited the claim and have allowed and paid $2,400.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I am in sympathy with the good purpose of my friend from Missouri when he says that we ought to stop any of these illegal or fraudulent war claims, but that does not apply to this bill.

I do not know Mr. Stanley A. Jerman, receiver for A. J. Peters Co., Inc., and neither do I know A. J. Peters Co. I never heard of any of them, do not know where they live or know anything about their business, but I do know Heid Bros., of El Paso, Tex., who furnished to A. J. Peters Co. some of this hay that the Army received and whose animals ate this hay, which has never been paid for.

May I say further that if you will look at the report on this bill you will see that this bill unanimously passed the Claims Committee of the House of Representatives in the Seventy-first Congress; it unanimously passed the Claims Committee of this House in the Seventy-second Congress; it unanimously passed the Claims Committee of this House in the Seventy-third Congress; and now it is here again with a unanimous report.

The only thing in the world that this bill does is to give these parties an opportunity to go to the Court of Claims and have this matter fairly and finally settled. My friend from Missouri said it had been investigated by the War Department and turned down; likewise by the Attorney General; but I hope you will be fair enough, before you vote against this bill, to read the report signed by the Acting Secretary of War himself, the Honorable F. H. Payne. I do not have time to read all the report, but let me read you this much of it:

The vendor upon being notified as to the grade of hay received and advised as to the price at which same would be accepted, usually acceded to the terms offered, and the commodity was purchased by the Government at the price agreed upon as being proper for the quality of this forage.

Let me say in this connection that the only trouble that ever arose about this matter was this: Heid Bros., of El Paso, sold some of this hay to this Peters crowd, and they shipped the hay to Arizona, where there was a big cantonment or a big lot of troops. This hay was sold subject to grades and weight at destination, and those grades and weights were passed upon exclusively by War Department officers, and their statements were accepted absolutely, and these people, whom I know and vouch for in my city, did not have anything more to do with that than one of you.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. Is this a case of the Government getting hay and then not paying for it?

Mr. THOMASON. The Government got this hay and that part of it still in controversy has not been paid for. I mean they have not paid for the part now in question. It is probably true they paid this $2,000 my friend from Missouri refers to. I know they did if the gentleman from Missouri and the Comptroller General say so, but there is still a large or substantial amount due on this claim.

Let me say this. The Secretary of War says that after suspicion was aroused the records of the Department show that a great quantity of hay was furnished the Government by Peters & Co., and somebody was indicted, and everybody in connection with the matter was acquitted. Here is what the War Department says:

As a result of the investigation conducted, criminal proceedings were brought against the members of this firm for fraud and conspiracy in restraint of trade. At the request of the Attorney General payment of the amount appearing to be due the company was withheld by the War Department, and subsequently a claim against the Government was filed by the said company for the sum of $31,915.70 for the value of the hay alleged to have been furnished.

Now, listen to this before you vote on this proposition:

Upon failure of the United States attorney to get a conviction in any of the cases tried, the criminal action against members of the firm was dismissed on recommendation of the Attorney General, and an investigation was then made to determine the advisability of bringing civil action against the company. The contemplated civil action was abandoned when it was learned that an audit of the accounts indicated there was no amount due the United States.

Now, listen to the excuse that is made on the part of the Government:

Due to the long period which has elapsed since the transaction involved took place, and the fact that many records pertaining to the matter cannot now be located, the Government would be at a great disadvantage were it required to defend itself in a suit at this time.

If the Government is at a disadvantage, how about the people who furnished this hay and never received a cent for it, hay that the Government fed to its horses and mules?

Let us be fair about this matter.

All parties charged with fraud or misrepresentation were promptly acquitted. All this bill does is to give them the right to go before the Court of Claims, where justice can be done. Not one cent of money is appropriated. The Treasury is not out a single cent.

I am sure you will not do an injustice to these citizens and taxpayers since the hay was delivered to the Government and fed to Army horses and mules. Are they not the ones at a disadvantage? Let us give them their day in court. That is all these people ask for. They furnished large quantities of hay, and it is an outrage not to give them their day in court. I repeat I do not know Jerman or A. J. Peters Co., but I do know Heid Bros. They are my friends and constituents. They are honorable men, and I vouch for them. They are entitled to pay for their hay.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. According to my colleague, many of these claims are deserving. I happened to be a member of the War Claims Committee in the Seventy-first Congress, which considered this bill, and it was reported favorably by unanimous vote. It is a meritorious claim.

Mr. THOMASON. I thank the gentleman. I have never been a member of the War Claims Committee, but I think that these people should have their day in court. The War Department itself says they were acquitted of any wrongdoing. The War Department said they had an audit and found these people innocent. The only excuse the Secretary of War can offer is that they have misplaced some of their papers, and the Government would be at a great advantage. That is not the fault of these good citizens. I plead for justice and fair, square dealing between a great Government and its citizens. All I ask for is a square deal, which these people have not received. Nobody will be hurt by an open, fair hearing before a competent and impartial court.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BEITER. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, if the Members desire to sustain the committee—

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next title.

CLAIMS OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES

The Clerk read as follows:

Title II—(H. R. 4147. To provide for the carrying out of the award of the National War Labor Board of April 11, 1919, and the decision of the Secretary of War of date November 30, 1920, in favor of certain employees of the Minneapolis Steel & Machinery Co., Minneapolis, Minn.; of the St. Paul Foundry Co., St. Paul, Minn.; of the American Holst & Derrick Co., St. Paul, Minn.; and of the Twin City Forge & Foundry Co., Stillwater, Minn.)

That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to pay and discharge the claims of certain employees (or their legal representatives of the Minneapolis Steel & Machinery Co., Minneapolis, Minn.; of the St. Paul Foundry Co., St. Paul, Minn.; of the American Holst & Derrick Co., St. Paul, Minn.; and of the Twin City Forge & Foundry Co., Stillwater, Minn., for additional compensation for work performed as employees of such companies in the execution of contracts made by such companies and the United States and for the manufacture of war materials for the use of the War Department or the military forces of the United States. Such payment shall be based upon the principles laid down in the award of the National War Labor Board of April 11, 1919, and the decision of the Secretary of War of date November 30, 1920, and shall be in accordance with the interpretations and the classifications and adjustments made under the direction of the Board in pursuance of such award. In the case of any employees with respect to whom classifications and adjustments have not been made in pursuance of such award and interpretations thereof the Secretary of War shall make the classifications and adjustments necessary for the payment and discharge of claims under this act.

Sec. 2. That no payment under this act shall be made after the expiration of 2 years from its passage unless prior to the expiration of such time a claim therefor is presented to the Secretary of War in such manner as he shall by regulations prescribe.

Sec. 3. That the provisions of the act shall not apply to any employees of such companies with respect to whom the award of the National War Labor Board was carried out, nor shall this act be construed to prejudice any claims which the employers receiving the benefits thereof may have in respect to contracts made by the companies and the United States for the manufacture of materials for the use of any department or service of the Government other than the War Department or the military forces of the United States.

SEC. 4. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum not in excess of $1,200,000, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of section 1 of the act.

SEC. 5. That no claim under the provisions of this act shall be settled, adjusted, or reviewed under section 236 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, nor shall jurisdiction of any such claim be had except as provided in this act.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. COCHRAN: Mr. COCHRAN moves to strike out title II.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this is not a bill to go to the Court of Claims. This is a bill to pay $1,200,000 out of the Treasury—taxpayers' money. It is an old war claim. What I read is not my report, but this is a report of the Comptroller General of the United States, who, under the Budget Act, is a representative of the Congress of the United States and not a representative of the executive branch of the Government:

This bill proposes to pay additional compensation to employees of certain private concerns for work performed in the manufacture of war materials furnished the War Department under contracts during the late World War.

The bill does not cover employees engaged upon work under Navy Department contracts. Does the Congress wish to discriminate between employees engaged upon work under contracts with different departments of the Government?

The War Department did not request and, in fact, was not consulted in connection with the award made by the National War Labor Board in these cases—as was done in the Bethlehem Steel Co. matter; act of March 4, 1925 (43 Stat. 1603), as amended—and what legal or other obligation rests upon the Congress now to authorize expenditures approximating $1,200,000 as gratuities to these employees of private concerns? Would not this be establishing a precedent which will induce the advancement of other similar claims?

The Comptroller also calls attention to the fact that under the provisions of the bill section 5 proposes to establish a dangerous precedent, whereby the paying agency would pass upon the propriety and legality of its own disbursements with no check or review by any other agency of the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I leave the matter to the House whether it wants to take $1,200,000 out of the Treasury at the expense of the taxpayers. I might also add many of the claimants are dead.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. In the first place, I call attention to the fact that this is not a bill to reimburse corporations, but one to reimburse their employees. This is a proposal to help the "little fellow." This body has had many opportunities to vote money out of the Public Treasury to pay the claims of rich corporations that were engaged in furnishing the Government with supplies during the war, but I dare say this is the first opportunity it has had to accord to workingmen the concessions that have been granted frequently heretofore to their employers. The corporations whose employees would be benefited by this bill are the Minneapolis Steel & Machinery Co., of Minneapolis; the American Hoist & Derrick Co., of St. Paul; and the Twin City Forge & Foundry Co., of Stillwater, Minn. These companies were all acting as contractors or subcontractors in furnishing the Government at its request with shells, gun-carriage parts, and other materials needed during the late war.

Comment has been made upon the fact that many years have elapsed since these claims accrued, and the inference is drawn that therefore they should not be paid. It is not the fault of the men who are to be the beneficiaries of this legislation that this debt is long overdue, for time and again they have come before Congress with bills for reimbursement. In every instance those bills were favorably reported by the committees to which they were referred, but because of the rules under which the House operated, it was impossible to get them to a vote. This is the first opportunity there has been to present the case to the House as such.

During the war there were numerous wage disputes, and the President created a National War Labor Board, headed by William Howard Taft, to adjust differences between war contractors and their employees.

The employees of the companies mentioned in the bill threatened to quit work, whereupon representatives of the Board went before them and assured them that, if they would stay on the job, the Government would pay them the wages paid in the same locality for similar work.

The men continued to work, the Board made its award, and the Secretary of War, Newton D. Baker, recommended that it be carried out. But before the Government's auditors had completed checking the claims there was a change of administration, a new Secretary of War took office, who overruled Secretary Baker on technical grounds.

Our contention is that the National War Labor Board was an agency of the Government, that it acted within the scope of its authority in entering into the said agreement, and that the Government therefore is legally and morally bound thereby.

In that connection, I want to say that Mr. Taft, after he became Chief Justice, voluntarily appeared before a House committee as a witness and declared that in his opinion the claim constituted an obligation of the Government which ought to be paid.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Yes.

Mr. PITTENGER. Is it not a fact that the employees in other steel mills in other parts of the country were paid and these were left out?

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. It is a fact, among them being the employees of the great Bethlehem Steel Co. I submit that if the employees of the Bethlehem Steel Co. were entitled to reimbursement, those of these three small Minnesota companies should be given equal consideration.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Yes.

Mr. ANDRESEN. I might say to my colleague that this appropriation simply carries out an award of the War Labor Board, an agency set up by the Commander in Chief, the President, to settle disputes of this character. The Board, headed by the late Chief Justice Taft, made an award in this case similar to the award in the Bethlehem Steel case, and the men who received the award have since 1920 made every effort to collect by legislation, but have been unable to do so. The award was approved by the Secretary of War, Mr. Newton D. Baker, at the time it was up for original consideration. He said the men were entitled to it and the award should have been paid, but it was not paid because of complications which arose in the change in Secretaries.

The bill has been before Congress on several occasions. The War Claims Committee heard it, passed on the evidence submitted by the witness, and that committee unanimously reported the bill as meritorious and recommended that the claim should be paid by the United States Government. These laboring men were patriotic employees who were working in the defense of their country. They were promised the same scale of wages as other workers were paid. The bill should be approved so that the obligation of the Government may be discharged.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. On the previous section of this bill the Chair put a unanimous-consent request for an extension of time. The attention of the Chair has since been called to a ruling by the author of the present Private Calendar rule, who was presiding at the last session on this calendar. This rule was proposed for the purpose of expediting business. Upon reflection, the Chair does not think he should recognize Members for the purpose of requesting an extension of time.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was rejected.

ST. LUDGERS CATHOLIC CHURCH OF GERMANTOWN, MO.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title III—(H. R. 3797. For the relief of St. Ludgers Catholic Church of Germantown, Henry County, Mo.)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to St. Ludgers Catholic Church at Germantown, county of Henry, and State of Missouri, the sum of $3,000 in full compensation for the use and occupation of and incidental damage to St. Ludgers Catholic Church at Germantown by the United States Army during the Civil War.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Mr. COCHRAN moves to strike out title III.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I am simply trying to be fair in this matter. This bill was introduced by my close personal friend and colleague from Missouri, Mr. WOOD. This bill has been before Congress for many, many years. It so happens that one night some 7 or 8 years ago when our distinguished colleague, Judge Dickinson, was unable to be present, I personally made a speech in behalf of this bill. The bill passed the House, but it failed to pass the Senate. I thought it was a meritorious bill then and I think so now. But, Mr. Speaker, this bill has passed the House and has passed the Senate and has been placed upon the desk of the President of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt, and he vetoed the bill. Why should we put it back in his lap?

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. I should like to ask my colleague from Missouri or some member of the War Claims Committee just what the policy of that committee is on different claims arising out of the Civil War. In the Seventy-first Congress that committee established the rule that they would no longer report out any bill for a claim growing out of the Civil War; that is, we would not go back prior to the Spanish-American War.

Mr. BEITER. The committee has the same rule. However, with respect to this particular bill that has been vetoed by the President, it is my understanding that the President was not apprised of all the facts in the case, and if the bill were again presented to him he would sign the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HANCOCK of New York) there were ayes 56 and noes 43. So the amendment was agreed to.

VELIE MOTORS CORPORATION

The Clerk read as follows:

Title IV—(H. R. 2706. To confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Velie Motors Corporation)

That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment, notwithstanding the lapse of time, or any statute of limitations, or any limitation upon the jurisdiction of such court with respect to claims upon any contract implied in law, upon the claim of the Velie Motors Corporation for reimbursement for net losses sustained by such corporation on account of the additional requirements imposed by the Government with respect to the crating of gun carts manufactured pursuant to a certain war contract (no. CMG-74, dated Oct. 25, 1917) with the Ordnance Department, United States Army, which requirements were not contemplated by such contract.

Sec. 2. Such claim shall be instituted by or on behalf of the Velie Motors Corporation within 1 year after the date of the enactment of this act. Proceedings in any suit before the Court of Claims under this act, and review thereof, and payment of any judgment therein, shall be had as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Mr. COCHRAN moves to strike out title IV.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to send a case to the Court of Claims. It is a case growing out of the war. It is just one of the many cases that have been reported. There are involved $37,000. The company had the right to go into court. It did not avail itself of the opportunity. Now, 17 years afterward, some lawyer comes here and wants us to pass a bill to go to the Court of Claims, waiving the statute of limitations. The question is, Are you going to waive the statute of limitations that Congress has provided? They have had a fair opportunity and did not accept it. It is not an ignorant organization. It is a great motor carrying company. Decide for yourselves whether you are going to ask your Government to protect itself in a suit 18 years after the alleged loss.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. COSTELLO. Is it not a fact that the contract with the Velie Motor Co. required that they should crate these gun carts for shipment, and that the crates in which the gun carts were placed were not sufficient to warrant their being shipped across the ocean, and, as a result, the War Department demanded that they should build stronger crates, and that this bill would provide $4.23 per gun cart to pay for that additional cost of a stronger crate? As a matter of fact, it was required by their contract that they should be adequately crated for export shipment. Therefore there is not any merit to this claim of the Velie Motor Corporation.

Mr. COCHRAN. There is absolutely no merit to the claim. Their contract provided that they should be shipped in proper crates. The War Department held them to their contract. I repeat there is absolutely no merit to the claim.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has passed the Senate of the United States twice and has been reported by various House Committees on War Claims, on four different occasions. The provisions of the bill require that this corporation be given its day in court before the Court of Claims. If the House should pass this bill this afternoon, the Velie Motors Corporation is not going to get its money tomorrow or the next day. It must make out and prove its case before the Court of Claims.

Replying to the gentleman from California with reference to the crating of these gun carts, of which there were approximately 9,000, the contract with the Velie Motors Corporation provided that these carts would be shipped to points within the United States. A gun cart is on the order of an ordinary wagon. We know that ordinary wagons are not crated for shipment within the United States; they are put in box cars and blocked the same as automobiles are shipped. In the Velie case the Ordnance Department later found that these gun carts were needed overseas and directed the contractor to crate them for overseas shipment; and the claim is based upon this company's being reimbursed the actual cost of the extra crating for overseas shipment.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. All this bill does is to give this company its day in court. Is that correct?

Mr. THOMPSON. Absolutely.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. It not only gives the company its day in court but it compels the United States Government to waive certain defenses which it otherwise would have to the claim, does it not?

Mr. THOMPSON. Not as I understand it.

Mr. HOPE. The bill not only asks the United States Government to waive the statute of limitations but it requires the Government to waive any defense it might have as to the jurisdiction of the court to consider the case of an implied contract, practically the basis of the claim in this case.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. PITTENGER. This involves the additional expense of crating those gun carts for overseas shipment under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. THOMPSON. Under the direction of the Ordnance Department as represented by the ordnance inspectors.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. And it is the customary thing where the statute of limitations has intervened that it should be waived in order for such a bill to accomplish its objective.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is the only object in passing the bill.

Replying to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], who stated that this company had its day in court, unfortunately the head of this corporation became involved in financial difficulties about the time it was getting ready to present this claim to the United States Court of Claims and those who were in control of this company for a period of 5 or 6 years allowed the statute of limitations to run against the claim and neglected to follow the matter through. After Mr. Velie again became active in the management of his company the statute of limitations had run against the claim; thus, this relief is sought.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the case were against the gentleman, would he waive the statute of limitations and permit them to sue him?

Mr. THOMPSON. I believe I would if it were a just claim. [Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOPE) there were—ayes 44, noes 30.

So the amendment was agreed to.

A. C. MESSLER CO.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title V—(H. R. 3101. To confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of A. C. Messler Co.)

That the Court of Claims of the United States be, and hereby is, given jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim of the A. C. Messler Co., of Providence, R. I., notwithstanding lapse of time or any statute of limitations, and to award said company compensation for additional material furnished the Government under contract dated April 17, 1918, for the manufacture and delivery of cartridge clips.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Mr. COCHRAN moves to strike out title V.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTEMBERG] says, and to save him the trouble of repeating it, all this bill does is to send the case to the Court of Claims.

However, Mr. Speaker, this company had its day in court with the Board set up by this Congress under the Dent Act. Mr. Dent, if you please, was chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of this House, and the Congress passed a bill known as the Dent Act, under which every person and corporation who had a claim against this Government growing out of the World War had an opportunity to be heard. This company, just like the other companies, had its day in court and was denied recognition by the Department.

The fact that the Department paid hundreds of millions of dollars to contractors and was criticized for it is evidence in itself that the Board was fair.

It is unjust to ask the Government 18 years after the contract to defend itself in court when we do not know whether the witnesses can be found or whether the evidence is available.

I have nothing further to say about the bill.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. Mr. Speaker, I wish to be heard in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I was a member of the subcommittee which considered the bill in the Seventy-second, the Seventy-third, and the Seventy-fourth Congresses. The gentleman from Missouri is wrong when he says that the Dent Board turned down this bill. As a matter of fact the Dent Board was unanimous for the payment of this bill to the amount of $16,000, but the Comptroller General refused to pay the warrant because he said it was an illegal payment. In the meantime the statute of limitations ran against the claim.

Subsequently the Senate passed a bill ordering that the Messlers be paid $12,000. The House of Representatives, through its committee, compromised and recommended the payment of $10,000.

For years Mr. Messler, an old gentleman from Providence, R. I., has haunted the galleries of this House hoping that in his old age he might be able to collect from Uncle Sam what he considers is a just claim.

Mr. Speaker, this bill does not call for the payment of any money but simply gives Messler the right to go to the Court of Claims to establish his claim. I would hate to have to do business with the United States Government and have my claim passed upon the way some of these bills are being passed upon by the Members of this House. Members of subcommittees spend days and days listening to testimony. The full committee listens to the reports of witnesses and members of the subcommittee. They unanimously agree to recommend that a bill pass, so that someone might be put in a position to justify his claim before the Court of Claims. Then a Member gets up here and says "no", and the claimant is thrown out. If that is the way to legislate, I disagree with you gentlemen who will answer "yes" to the question.

Mr. Speaker, this claim was originally handled by Mr. Condon, formerly a Member of this House from Rhode Island, who resigned to become a member of the supreme court of his State. This is a meritorious claim. The Government supplied material which only enabled the manufacture of 1,000 clips out of every 19 pounds of material, whereas the United States officers thought that Mr. Messler could and should have obtained 1,000 clips out of every 17 pounds of material. The metal was heavier than the Government representatives thought it was, and when the material ran out this man Messler had to go out in the open market and buy enough to make up the necessary number of clips to supply the number called for by his contract, because the contract contained a penalty clause. If Messler had not supplied so many thousand clips by a certain day he would have been subject to a fine. The Army representatives supervising the work in his factory told him to go out and buy the material.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COCHRAN) there were—ayes 32, noes 48.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill H. R. 8236.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 137, noes 168, not voting 125, as follows:

The doors were opened.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. COCHRAN, a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next omnibus bill on the Private Calendar.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8524, for the relief of sundry claimants, and for other purposes.

WILLIAM J. COCKE

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

Title I—(S. 941. An act for the relief of William J. Cocke)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William J. Cocke, of North Carolina, the sum of $9,116.88 in full settlement of all claims against the Government, for losses growing out of contracts with the War Department, one dated July 1, 1918, for the purchase of garbage from Camp Green, situate at or near the city of Charlotte, N. C.; and the other dated September 3, 1918, for Camp Wadsworth, situate at or near the city of Spartanburg, S. C.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Strike out title I.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this is another omnibus bill from the War Claims Committee. Therefore all bills contained in this omnibus measure are old war claims, but this is the outstanding one of them all.

A man made a contract with the Government to take the garbage from a cantonment in North Carolina, and he bought himself a lot of little pigs to feed the garbage to. He claims some of this garbage was diverted and stolen. [Laughter.] Of course, it was diverted. It was diverted to the inner man of the soldiers. They did not believe in leaving anything on their plates to feed to pigs. So after the war was over he comes along and wants the Government to pay him $33,000 because he did not get enough garbage to feed the pigs he had purchased. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not now.

The War Department heard the case. This man had the right to go to the Court of Claims, if he desired. The Dent Act was in effect, which enabled him to be heard by that board.

In conclusion, I may say the board held that the War Department never promised the contractor to give him enough garbage to feed all the little pigs he might buy. So now he comes to the Congress, and the gentlemen on the War Claims Committee are very generous, but they are not generous enough to give him $33,000, and say, "All we are going to give you is $9,000." So they report the bill favorably, not to send the matter to the Court of Claims, not to have it reviewed by the Comptroller General, but to go into the Treasury of the United States and take out $9,000, at a time when we are trying to find money to pay some of the bills we have already passed. There is no Court of Claims involved in this measure. This is a direct payment out of the Treasury.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I simply want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this case did go to the Court of Claims and the Court of Claims dismissed it.

Mr. COCHRAN. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. The claim did go to the Court of Claims, according to the gentleman from New York, who is seldom wrong, and I know he is right now, because he has the papers before him, and therefore you are asked to appropriate $9,000 out of the Treasury.

Mr. RICH and Mr. BLANTON rose.

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], who was on his feet first.

Mr. RICH. Would it not have been a good thing if we had had a Secretary of Agriculture at that time like the one we have now to kill the little pigs?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. At one time the committee reported this bill for the full amount of $33,000. The gentleman, I am sure, will recall that.

Mr. BEITER rose.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will let the gentleman from the committee make his statement in his own time and I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against that. I do not believe that motion is allowed under the rule.

Mr. BLANTON. There is no change in the rules of the House in that respect.

Mr. BEITER. Under the rules only two amendments are allowed to be offered.

The SPEAKER. The motion to strike out the enacting clause is not an amendment in the sense contemplated by the rule. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion is in order and the gentleman from Texas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, unless we do like Joe Walsh once said and unhang the Treasury door from its hinges, and let everybody put their long, hairy arms into the Treasury and take out whatever they want, you are going to have to repeal this O'Connor rule that allows bills to come in here in omnibus fashion.

When the new rule was brought up here I called your attention to what it would do, and that under it, it would be impossible to defeat bad bills. I called your attention to the fact it would not work. I called your attention to the fact that the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], himself, then had a bill here involving $990,000 that could come in under an omnibus act, and if passed would set a precedent that could cost the Government at least $1,000,000,000.

Well, the rule was passed. The O'Connor bill that had been stopped time and again here in the House was brought up in an omnibus bill and passed. It went to the Senate, which passed it, and was sent to the White House and the President had to veto it.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order the gentleman is not addressing his remarks to the bill before the House. The gentleman is talking about other matters of ancient history and is not proceeding in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly, I am proceeding in order. I am talking about this omnibus bill that ought to have its enacting clause stricken out. This is just one of them. There are several of them involved, and this measure is just as pernicious as was the O'Connor bill. Why, this bill has been defeated on this floor time and time again. This garbage bill ought not to pass. It is an unjust claim. The Court of Claims has passed upon it and has turned it down.

I have seen bills come up here involving $1,000,000 that lawyers would fight over in a Federal court for 3 weeks, introducing evidence under the rules of the court and in accordance with law and fighting across the table to see whether or not the claim ought to be paid.

We bring it here in an omnibus bill with 5 minutes' debate on each side—bills taking the people's tax money out of the Treasury, some of it without legal process of law.

We ought to stop that. We ought to be sensible about it. I represent almost 300,000 people, and so do you—every one of you. These people are depending on us; they put their business in our hands and depend on us to represent them. We are not doing right by them when we bring in these matters in an omnibus bill. We should bring them in in separate bills and consider them on their merits. If they have merit, we should pass them. Let every bill stand on its own bottom.

I remember under the old method we passed bill after bill and did not scramble them all up together. Let us unscramble these bills and repeal this rule.

Let me tell you one thing, and that is that if I come back here next year, and before you pass the rules of this House, I am going to make a fight on the floor of this House to keep this omnibus rule from ever going into the rules again.

I leave it to the old Members if it was not a sensible way to pass these bills under the old rule.

I have seen the time when in one night session we passed 75 good bills right along, one after another, because they were good bills.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Under the rule we are working under I find these words:

Omnibus bills shall be read for amendment by paragraph, and no amendment shall be in order except to strike out or to reduce amounts of money or to provide limitation.

My inquiry is whether or not it is going to be in order for me to move to strike out the last word?

The SPEAKER. It will not.

Mr. BIERMANN. Is the gentleman from Texas out of order?

The SPEAKER. He is not. The gentleman from Texas moved to strike out the enacting clause. He did not offer an amendment.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion. I appreciate the fact that it is difficult to have rules under which we can consider these private bills efficiently, but I do not believe that the rules under which we are operating now deserve the kind of criticism they have been having from the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. I call attention to the fact that in considering one of these omnibus bills the Clerk reads a title, which is a private bill that has been ruled out by objection. The House then passes upon that title, which is the private bill referred to. The House votes it up or down. It has had its day in court; it has had its trial; and if it be agreed to in this House, the House then in effect passes that private bill for the time being. But after some titles or bills have survived the gamut of debate, they are bunched in a group—the last bill had only three left after debate—and the bills then are voted either up or down as a group. I do not think there is any style of bill which comes before this House which is so adequately tried as these private bills resolved into omnibus bills.

It amazes me to have the gentleman from Texas again and again assert his devotion to economy in the Government. He voted for $2,237,000,000 additional for a soldiers' bonus that is not due. About 2 or 3 weeks ago he voted for a $545,000,000 Army appropriation, and next week, I have no doubt, he will vote for a $550,000,000 Navy appropriation bill. That makes a total of pretty close to $3,300,000,000 saddled upon the backs of the American taxpayers with his help the past 2½ months. I venture to say that when we try to get a roll call on the Navy appropriation bill the gentleman from Texas will not ask for that roll call.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I will not yield. I will follow the practice of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will yield, I never straddled a vote.

Mr. BIERMANN. And while I am on my feet I call attention of the House to the fact that there is no one else who brags so much about his knowledge of the rules of the House and who violates the rules so persistently as does the distinguished gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. It is against the rules of the House for a Member in speaking to refer to another Member in a personal way and then not yield to him. It has always been customary in the House for the gentleman who refers to another to yield, and when I mention a gentleman's name I always yield to him.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules a gentleman is not permitted to indulge in personality. So far as one Member yielding to another, that is, of course, within the province of the Member who has the floor.

In further answer to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN], with reference to the motion to strike out the enacting clause, the Chair reads to the House a portion of paragraph 7 of rule XXIII:

A motion to strike out the enacting words of a bill shall have precedence of a motion to amend, and, if carried, shall be considered equivalent to its rejection.

The Chair thinks it clearly in order on these bills to move to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a question to the Chair as to whether or not all time on this motion has been exhausted.

The SPEAKER. All time has been exhausted on the motion. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced himself in doubt.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 63.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present and make the point of order that there is no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order that there is no quorum present and objects to the vote upon that ground. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-nine Members present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 116, noes 181, not voting 133, as follows:

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. HILL; the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. PLUMLEY; the gentleman from Hawaii, Mr. KING; the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. SHORT, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. FADDIS, are in attendance upon a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs, and for that reason are not able to be present to answer to this roll call.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the question now recurs to my motion to strike out title I, does it not?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The Chair was about to announce that.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the Cochran amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEAVER] is recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, it is with some trepidation that I undertake this afternoon to say a word in defense of this bill which has been so characterized by my friend from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] and my friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. Certainly, if it has the characteristics ascribed to it by them, it has no place upon the floor of this House. Yet I find that this bill has twice passed the Senate of the United States. I find that it has been favorably passed upon by five or six different claims committees of the House.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEAVER. I yield.

Mr. BEITER. In addition to that, the judge of the court of claims admitted the claimant has been mistreated and should be given some damages?

Mr. WEAVER. Yes. I wish to call that to the attention of this House.

Mr. Speaker, I think these bills should be dealt with on a fair basis. I realize that many of them are troublesome. This may be an old war claim, but it has been here for years because Members of this House had a right to object, and one or two men to absolutely control the situation.

Now, let us see what this claim is. If this bill is not right, I do not ask you to pass it. Not for one moment would I walk into this House before my colleagues and ask them to do something that I thought was unrighteous. During the war they had these various training camps over the United States. There was one at Spartanburg, S. C., and one at Charlotte, N. C. One of the problems was to remove the garbage from those camps, in a sanitary way, so as to do the utmost good. The War Department itself advertised for people to enter into these contracts. Upon the strength of those advertisements and the specifications contained in them, this claimant came in and entered into a contract to remove the garbage from those two camps. In the contract made with the War Department it was understood that this garbage was to be used to be fed to pigs or swine, and the garbage was to be loaded upon certain platforms provided by the commanders of the camps themselves. He entered into these contracts, and they required him to give a bond of $11,000 in each case to see that he did remove it daily from these loading platforms. He put his pigs in there. He went to the expense of buying them. He went to the expense of buying trucks. He hired men and provided equipment, all of which was satisfactory to the commanding officer.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, under date of February 17, a statement in regard to this bill, which is as unfair as the statements made upon the floor of the House today. I wish, therefore, in defense of the Senate of the United States, in defense of the one-half dozen reports made by different Claims Committee of the House, and in defense of myself, as an advocate of this bill, to state some facts that the House may know the basis upon which this appropriation is asked.

The gentleman from Missouri apparently did not read the opinion of the Court of Claims. He apparently did not know it had been before the Court of Claims. As a matter of fact, it has been, and I wish to confine myself to the facts as well as the law found by the Court of Claims itself.

In the decision rendered by this court, they found as a fact that this claimant entered into these contracts, for the removal of garbage at these two camps; that during the period covered by these contracts the average number of men at one of these camps was 11,000, and I think it is safe to assume that there was an equal number at the other camp. This would make 22,000 men, or a city of considerable size from which the claimant was to receive garbage of certain specifications.

He was required to give his bond in each case for $11,000, conditioned that he should daily remove this garbage from the loading platforms provided by the Government. It is well for the House to keep this in mind. He was never relieved from this obligation nor from the terms of these bonds. He purchased the necessary hogs. He provided the necessary equipment. He had a right to expect his Government to comply with its contract. As to whether these contracts were complied with was determined by the Court of Claims itself. In an opinion rendered in the case, among other things it finds as follows:

The complaint of the plaintiff centers exclusively around the fact that under the contracts he was to receive all the garbage of the specified classifications, to be delivered to him by the Government at certain transfer points fixed by the commanding officer of the camp, and this is precisely what the contract provided. Insofar as a nonobservance of this covenant is involved, the case is free from difficulty. It was not carried out. Large quantities of garbage which the plaintiff should have had were diverted, some of it stolen, and much of it sold to other parties. The plaintiff had established at approved points outside the camps, extensive pigsties, purchased a number of hogs, and was fully equipped to fatten the same upon the garbage he expected to receive. As a result of his inability to get the full quantity of garbage from the camp, the undertaking proved financially disastrous. Repeated complaints were made to the responsible officials, but all to no avail.

The War Department had held that because of the fact that the contract itself provided that the Government did not guarantee any specific number of pounds of garbage that, therefore, it was not obligated to deliver any. This position is so unreasonable that I believe it would not be necessary for me to argue this to any lawyer or to any layman of this House. The Government contracted to give him all of its garbage of certain classes, and the Court of Claims found it violated its contract.

Is it possible that American citizens cannot rely upon the covenants entered into with them by their Government, without resort to technical and ridiculous interpretations of contracts like this?

The court finds as a fact that these camps averaged around 11,000 soldiers each during the period of these contracts. According to the formula which the Government held out to persons to induce them to enter into these contracts, each soldier would produce a certain amount of garbage. This claimant had a right to expect the Government to live up to its agreement. The Court of Claims finds it did not live up to its agreement and that it resulted in financial disaster to this claimant.

Is Congress unwilling to accord to one of its citizens fair compensation for a violation of contracts of the Government? And yet this is what the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Missouri ask this House to do.

The case in the Court of Claims to which I have referred was brought for the purpose of recovering profits which the claimant might have received if the Government had complied with its contract. The decision of the Court of Claims in regard to profits was largely correct, as profits are always conjectural, and yet there are elements of damage which could have been easily ascertained. The opinion of the court states that the claimant was under no obligations to continue the performance of such contract and thus prolong and increase his loss, but it is only necessary to point out that at each camp he was held under a bond of $11,000 to remove this garbage daily whenever placed upon the loading platform.

The Senate committee and the House committee have both found that due to this failure of the Federal Government to deliver this garbage which, as stated in the opinion of the Court of Claims, was diverted and sold to other parties, financial disaster resulted to the claimant. It was necessary to provide other methods of feeding the hogs which he had purchased to be fattened on the garbage contracted to be furnished by the Government. He had to keep up his necessary equipment, employ the necessary number of men, and to keep in readiness to perform his contract with the Government under the penalties of these bonds. Not having received the necessary garbage he had to go into the open market and purchase corn at exorbitant prices. The Senate committee and the House committee have had the whole transcript of the case before them and have found that the amount of corn which it was necessary to purchase with which to feed these hogs, after deducting the contract price of the garbage which would have been necessary for the same purpose, was such that the claimant is entitled to the amount set out in this bill.

Notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman from Texas, no committee of the House or Senate has found damages more than this. The question here is, after the findings of the facts by the Court of Claims, whether or not this Congress will remedy a judicially ascertained breach of the Government's contract with this claimant.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEAVER] has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COCHRAN) there were ayes 79 and noes 51.

So the amendment was agreed to.

SOUTHERN PRODUCTS CO.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title II—(S. 929. An act for the relief of the Southern Products Co.)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Southern Products Co., Dallas, Tex., the sum of $13,051.19 in full settlement of all claims against the Government, for the cost of removal and of the cost of reconditioning 9,097 bales of good, merchantable cotton, from its place of storage in the Bush Terminal Co. warehouse, Brooklyn, N. Y., the damage being caused to the cotton by climatic and other causes during its enforced removal and while it was exposed to the weather after removal from the Bush Terminal Warehouse, Brooklyn, N. Y., as result of the commandeering the entire storage warehouse on January 3, 1918, by the Secretary of War: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Strike out title II.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I am going along very fast. This case was heard by the Court of Claims and a decision rendered on March 8, 1926, in which the claim of the Southern Products Co. was denied. This bill provides for appropriating money, paying it out of the Treasury of the United States, regardless of the unfavorable decision of the Court of Claims. Why should we not follow the findings of the Court of Claims in this case?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The statement of the gentleman from Missouri is, not intentionally so, of course, but is somewhat misleading. This cotton company had about 10,000 bales of cotton stored in a warehouse in New York. There is no dispute about these facts. The space was commandeered by the Government during the war and this cotton was thrown out. This claim has been examined by two agencies of the Government. Each of those agencies ascertained that the damage was in the amount incorporated in this bill. In order that we may know what we are talking about, may I read the findings of fact by the Court of Claims, and also similar findings of fact by another agency of the Government, into the Record?

The Court of Claims said:

During the removal of the cotton, and while it was on the dock to which it was removed, the cotton was exposed to the weather and some of it was so damaged that it was unmarketable and useless unless it was reconditioned. The cotton was reconditioned by the plaintiff * * *

And the court found that the damage was $15,744.15. This is also the amount found by another Government agency as the damage resulting from the act of the Government in commandeering this space.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. For a brief question; yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. I would kindly ask the gentleman to read the conclusion of law of the Court of Claims. I could have read it but I cut my statement short. Read where they made the plaintiff pay the costs.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. All right, I will read the conclusion of law. The conclusion of law is that this was not a taking of private property for a public use, so that the Government could be held for taking private property for a public use. They held, too, that it was not a settlement under the Dent Act, because the Government did not have a contract with these cotton people. The Government used the might of the great sovereign against a private citizen, from which two Government agencies found that the citizen suffered damages in the amount carried in this bill and no payment. Do I make myself clear?

Mr. COCHRAN. And the Court required the plaintiff to pay the costs.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I cannot yield further. The gentleman will not question my statement; I am going to repeat it: The Court of Claims found solemnly that the damage was the amount incorporated in this bill. The Court of Claims and all the agencies found that this company could not recover because damage did not arise out of any agreement between the Government and these cotton people. They were not asked to agree, they were thrown out on the street by the Government.

The sole question is, and it is upon the conscience of the Members of Congress, whether or not this Government can do this to a private citizen and the Congress will let it go without redress when two agencies of the Government solemnly determined that, as a result of the Government's act, a private citizen has suffered every cent that is asked in this bill. Can the Government do this and not pay for it? That is all there is to it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SUMNERS of Texas) there were—ayes 52, noes 64.

So the amendment was rejected.

UNION SHIPPING & TRADING CO., LTD.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title III—(H. R. 402. A bill for the relief of the Union Shipping & Trading Co., Ltd.)

That the claim of the Union Shipping & Trading Co., Ltd., against the United States of America for damages alleged to have been caused by a collision on April 25, 1918, near Pauillac, in the Gironde River, France, between the Spanish steamship Consuelo (at the time of the collision the British steamship Reims) and the American steamship Berwind, then in the transport service of the United States War Department, may be sued for by the said Union Shipping & Trading Co., Ltd., in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit (in accordance with the principles of libels in rem and/or in personam), and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages (including interest) and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the said Union Shipping & Trading Co., Ltd., or against the said Union Shipping & Trading Co., Ltd., in favor of the United States upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That at the trial of said suit the written report or reports concerning said collision made by the pilot, master, any officer or member of the crew of the steamship Berwind, who is not available to testify because he is dead or cannot be found, may be admitted in evidence: Provided further, That such notice of the said suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within 4 months of the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Strike out all of title III.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is for an $85,000 claim of the owners of a ship that was being used as a transport in 1918 and which was in collision with a foreign vessel.

I read the last paragraph of a report by the Secretary of War at that time, Dwight Davis:

While I believe that the formal written reports of the master and members of the crew of the Berwind lack the value of the oral testimony of witnesses in court and that the Government may, to that extent, be handicapped in its defense, I am of the opinion that the trial of the issue is now warranted and therefore recommend favorable action on the bill.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I was fair; I read the last paragraph of the summary.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I hope the gentleman will let me proceed. This shows how fair I am to the gentleman. I read the favorable words of the Secretary of War on this $85,000 claim. What more can you ask for?

This collision occurred in 1918; $85,000 is involved. It should have been settled years ago and your Government is going to be handicapped to be asked to defend this suit at this time.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. COSTELLO. Does the gentleman think we should authorize the Court of Claims to accept as evidence the written reports and statements of members of the crews of these ships where they are now dead or not available?

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not think so.

Mr. COSTELLO. In other words the Government would find itself in court without the opportunity of cross-examining or questioning various witnesses who have died subsequent to the time these statements were made?

Mr. COCHRAN. I think this House would be handicapping the Government by sending this case to the courts. The bill should be defeated.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, all I desire to do is to present the facts. The House may then pass on the measure. The crucial point involved is that raised by the gentleman from California. There was a collision between a British ship and an American ship. The British ship had anchored in a fog. The American ship came up and collided with it. This happened during the war. A notice was at once given that the British ship would assert a claim.

About 5 months after the accident the American ship, which was the offender, was torpedoed and lost, with all parties on board. It was then understood by the British ship that damages were recognized and negligence admitted. But subsequently negligence was denied by the United States.

A bill was first introduced about 1924 for permission to bring suit against the Government on this claim. There was objection to that bill because the witnesses for the United States Government were not available. They had been lost when the ship was torpedoed. Then this bill was introduced, which gave to the United States the right to introduce on its behalf all statements made by the master, the pilot, or any of the crew, those statements to be considered as testimony just as though taken in court.

Mr. Speaker, the question therefore is whether under those circumstances this Congress will permit the suit. This bill does not send the matter to the Court of Claims to be tried but to an admiralty court, which may weigh the evidence and determine the very fact that the gentleman from California raises. That court may determine whether these statements have the force and effect that should be accorded to oral testimony and weigh the Government's handicap. All of those facts may be considered. The sole question is whether you are willing that this matter shall be passed on by a court of our own country with this evidence before it, the Government's case being presented in the shape of written statements of the master, officers, and crew.

Mr. BUCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BUCK. Who is the claimant in this case?

Mr. BLAND. The Union Shipping & Trading Co., Ltd.
 Mr. BUCK. Is that a domestic corporation?
 Mr. BLAND. No; it is a British corporation.
 Mr. BUCK. They were the owners of the ship that was damaged?

Mr. BLAND. They were the owners of the ship that was damaged in the collision.

Mr. Speaker, with this statement I am perfectly willing to leave the matter entirely to the decision of the Members of the House.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and the Chair, being in doubt, the House divided, and there were—ayes 51, noes 38.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, it is rather late in the afternoon. We have a rather small membership present. There is a great deal of interest involved in these various claims. It is very apparent we cannot finish this bill this evening, which, of course, will preserve its status until the calendar is called again. Under the circumstances I think we might as well adjourn.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. I may say to the gentleman that we can finish this bill in 10 minutes. We can go through it very quickly. I can assure the gentleman I will not take more than a minute on each item.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am anxious to get these bills disposed of.

Mr. COCHRAN. Why not get rid of this bill? There are bills coming on that should pass, and there are dozens of them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will withdraw the suggestion for the moment.

DAVID A. WRIGHT

The Clerk read as follows:

Title IV—(H. R. 2713. A bill granting jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to hear the case of David A. Wright.)

That the Court of Claims be, and hereby is, given jurisdiction to reinstate, reopen, and rehear the case of David A. Wright, of Winona, Mo., against the United States, no. 261-A in said court, and upon the pleadings, evidence, and other proceedings in that cause, and such other proceedings, if any, as the court may deem necessary or proper, to readjudicate the same and determine the amount of costs or expenditures, if any, which the said David A. Wright may have expended or incurred in 1918 in the rehabilitation of a manufacturing plant (commonly called the Allis-Chalmers plant), at 1150 Washtenaw Avenue, Chicago, Ill., and in the beginning of production of heavy-duty lathes, to meet the needs, or the then anticipated needs, of the Ordnance Department for any gun-relining or gun-manufacturing project initiated and under way in the Ordnance Department of the United States Army, in reliance in good faith upon any promise or assurance given him by Maj. Charles D. Westcott, Ordnance Department, United States Army, or Howard Abbott, an engineer in the plant section of the production division of the Ordnance Department, that the said David A. Wright would receive a contract, or contracts, for the manufacture of heavy-duty lathes that would absorb such costs or expenditures, notwithstanding such Ordnance Department projects may have been contingent upon the continuation of the war and may have been abandoned because of the signing of the armistice of November 11, 1918, and notwithstanding section 3744 of the Revised Statutes: Provided, That the Court of Claims shall be of opinion that the said David A. Wright made or incurred such expenditures in reliance in good faith upon the belief that Major Westcott or Mr. Abbott possessed the authority to make such promise or assurance on behalf of the Ordnance Department and that he was justified in doing so under the circumstances.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out title IV.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this claimant lives in my own State, and, as a matter of fact, his nephew was in to see me Monday. I have gone into this matter very thoroughly. If you will read the bill, you will see this is the readjudication of the claim. It has already had its day in court under the Dent Act. The claim was denied by the Court of Claims. Why send the case back to the Court of Claims for a hearing when it has already been denied? There must be an end somewhere. If the court or Department had not considered the case, then there might be some grounds for favorable action, but the court has already said the Government is not obligated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, it is just a question in this bill whether or not we are going to permit a mere technicality to defeat a just and righteous claim. This claim has never been heard on its merits.

The claimant in this case in 1918 was engaged in the manufacture of machine tools in Chicago. He was invited to Washington by a representative of the War Department and was introduced to Major Westcott, and a Mr. Abbott, of the Ordnance Department, who appealed to him to use his force and his manufacturing concern for the purpose of manufacturing heavy-duty lathes that were at that time needed in the prosecution of the war. He told them he was not prepared for that kind of work. They even appealed to his patriotism and told him it was his duty to go ahead. He finally consented and went back to Chicago, where he purchased an old building and rehabilitated it. He started to equip this building to manufacture these tools that were so much needed by the War Department on the representation and on the condition made by these officers of the Ordnance Department that they would give him a contract to manufacture these instruments—the heavy-duty lathes—that were needed at that time for the purpose of relining the cannon that were in actual use in the war.

In accordance with this agreement and understanding, he finally equipped this building; and just as he had it ready to begin the manufacture of the lathes, the Armistice came; and, of course, the Government had no further use for the lathes and the contract was canceled. As a result of this agreement, Mr. Wright, the claimant in this case, had gone back and put into the building and the equipment of it all the money he had, all he could borrow; and when his contract was canceled he then, of course, could not meet his obligations and was sold out and today is living down in the Ozarks of Missouri on a little piece of land, penniless and destitute because this Government did not carry out its contract with him.

All this bill asks is that he be given an opportunity to go into the Court of Claims and present his claim there on fair, equitable, and just grounds and establish his rights.

He is not one of these men or corporations that have made something out of a war contract. On the other hand, he did not receive a single dollar, but lost every dollar he had in the world on account of this agreement with the agents of the Ordnance Department. He was led into it and was persuaded and was induced by the representatives of the Government to enter into this contract, and now the only reason they have for not paying him is that under a technical construction of the Dent Act the men with whom he was dealing did not have the right to make a contract in writing with him. It is not denied that they had a right to go out and offer these inducements and make these contracts to procure this material that was needed by the Government at that time, but there is simply the one proposition that they did not have the technical right, in writing, to make a contract. All he asks is to permit his claim to be permitted to be heard in equity and in justice, and I beg you to vote against this amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COCHRAN) there were—ayes 33, noes 54.

So the amendment was rejected.

FLORENCE BYVANK

The Clerk read as follows:

Title V—(H. R. 3694. A bill for the relief of Florence Byvank.)

That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the amount of the insurance under the Government life-insurance policy (no. K720604) of Clarence A. Byvank to Florence Byvank, his widow and designated beneficiary, in accordance with the terms of such policy, beginning with the first calendar month following the month during which this act is enacted, notwithstanding the lapse of such policy in December 1931. The insured, Clarence A. Byvank, applied for reinstatement of such policy in February 1932 and transmitted payment for back premiums thereon at the time of application, but died suddenly from monoxide-gas poisoning on March 30, 1932, before a report of his medical examination had been filed with the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Strike out title V.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand why this bill was sent to the War Claims Committee. It is a bill requiring the Veterans' Bureau to pay an insurance policy on a veteran. The bill should have gone to the Committee on Veterans' Legislation. This is paving the way by private bills to reopening cases of veterans of the World War with respect to insurance claims denied by the Veterans' Administration. This is all that I have against it.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. BIERMANN. This bill was first referred to the World War Veterans' Committee, and that committee said it had no jurisdiction, and it came back here and was re-referred to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman think the War Claims Committee has jurisdiction over veterans' cases?

Mr. BIERMANN. No; I thought the World War Veterans' Committee had jurisdiction, and it is not my fault it was referred to the War Claims Committee.

Mr. COCHRAN. The only point I make, I will say to the gentleman from Iowa, is the one I have just stated, as to the precedent you are setting. I do not say that the bill is not meritorious, but it is paving the way to the bringing in of thousands of claims growing out of insurance policies denied by the Veterans' Administration. Do you want to do that?

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Members will agree that the fact this bill was first referred to the World War Veterans' Committee and afterward re-referred to the War Claims Committee, ought to have no bearing on the vote this House is going to take now.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I fully agree with the gentleman. It should absolutely have no effect whatever, but I could not imagine how the bill got to the War Claims Committee. I fully agree with the gentleman that the only question is the principle involved.

Mr. BIERMANN. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri.

This bill involves a very simple proposition. A man named Clarence A. Byvank served during the war in this country and served overseas. He became hard up in the latter part of 1931, and, after having paid his insurance premiums for 14 years, he let them lapse because he did not have the money. The rules of the Veterans' Administration provide that within 3 months a veteran may reinstate his policy without physical examination.

Those 3 months were up on March 1, 1932. In February 1932 he sought reinstatement. That is brought out in the report. But he did not send his money to the Veterans' Administration at Des Moines. Why he did not send it I do not know. Whether he thought the letter reinstated him or not, no one knows, as the man is now dead.

He did not get the money in until March 10, 1932, 10 days after the time had elapsed.

The Veterans' Administration kept the premium and notified him that they had kept it and sent him a form for a health statement.

If a private insurance company had done that they would be estopped from denying the claim.

But before the veteran got back the health statement he was in his garage fixing his car. The doors blew shut, monoxide gas filled the garage, and the veteran died on the 30th day of March 1932.

The letter the Veterans' Administration had written him when they kept the premium lulled the veteran into a sense of security.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. TABER. What could he have done if he did not send them the money?

Mr. BIERMANN. He could have sent in his health statement.

Mr. TABER. He was behind time and it would not have made any difference.

Mr. BIERMANN. If the health statement had been filled out and he was in proper health he would have been reinstated.

Mr. TABER. Not unless he paid the money.

Mr. BIERMANN. He would have been reinstated, for he had paid the money.

Mr. TABER. Did they make a finding ultimately that he was in a proper state of health?

Mr. BIERMANN. The finding was that he was overweight. The man weighed 325 pounds when he got out of the Army. He weighed the same when he died. When he went into the Army he was far overweight, and no private insurance company would have found him an insurable risk. But the Army took him, and the Government insured him, overweight and all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado). The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to strike out the title.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were 15 ayes and 55 noes.

So the motion was lost.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 37. An act authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to settle and adjust the claims of subcontractors and materialmen for material and labor furnished in the construction of a post-office and courthouse building at Rutland, Vt.;

S. 1307. An act to establish the Homestead National Monument of America in Gage County, Nebr.;

S. 1453. An act to create a board of shorthand reporting, and for other purposes;

S. 1470. An act to provide a preliminary examination of Spokane River and its tributaries in the State of Idaho with a view to the control of their floods;

S. 3281. An act to amend the act of February 16, 1929, entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Public Health Service', approved June 10, 1922, as amended";

S. 3453. An act limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to certain counsel; and

S. J. Res. 165. Joint resolution directing the Architect of the Capitol to accept a copy of the painting Lief Eiriksson Discovers America.

JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 443. Joint resolution to amend Public Resolution No. 31 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, approved June 17, 1935, so as to extend its provisions to cover the National Boy Scout Jamboree now scheduled to be held in 1937.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. EVANS, indefinitely, on account of business.

To Mr. HOBBS, on account of important official business.

To Mr. STEAGALL, indefinitely, on account of illness.
 To Mr. TONRY, indefinitely, on account of illness.
 To Mr. ZIONCHECK, for 10 days, on account of important business.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BIERMANN. Pending that, what will be the status of this omnibus bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill will be the unfinished business the next time this calendar is called.

Mr. BIERMANN. And that will be a month from today?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Whenever the date is.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, March 18, 1936, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARING

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization in room 445, old House Office Building, Wednesday, March 18, 1936, at 10:30 a. m., on H. R. 11172.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

719. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of a bill to promote the efficiency of the Air Corps Reserve, which the War Department presents for the consideration of Congress with a view to its enactment into law; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

720. A letter from the chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, transmitting its report covering its operation for the fourth quarter of 1935, and for the period from the organization of the corporation on February 2, 1932, to December 31, 1935, inclusive (H. Doc. No. 426); to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

721. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated March 12, 1936, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers on a preliminary examination of Bayou Rigaud, La., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved August 30, 1935; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

722. A letter from the Archivist, transmitting a report submitted by the National Historical Publications Commission; to the Committee on the Library.

723. Carey	Johnson	Overton

Mr. VANDENBERG. I announce the necessary absence of my colleague the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], who is detained at his home by illness. I ask that the announcement stand for the day.

Mr. LEWIS. I regret to have again to announce the absence of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] because of illness. I announce further that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], my colleague the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] are unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] is necessarily absent.

Mr. FLETCHER. I announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] is detained on account of illness. I ask that the announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

GULF-ATLANTIC SHIP CANAL ACROSS FLORIDA

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask leave to insert in the RECORD a letter which I have just received which is pertinent to the discussion respecting the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal across Florida. The letter is addressed to me by a distinguished United States district engineer, retired, Col. Gilbert A. Youngberg.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., March 17, 1936.

Subject: Gulf-Atlantic Ship Canal across Florida.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: From a friend in Washington I have received a copy of a circular letter, dated March 12, carrying the signature, by rubber stamp, of Col. Frank B. Shutts, publisher of the Herald in Miami, Fla. I am informed that this circular letter is being mailed to every Member of the United States Senate. If my information is correct, then you will have received a copy thereof.

The outstanding paragraph in the letter of Colonel Shutts is quoted, as follows:

"In my judgment, if the Florida cross-State canal is completed, within 10 years, probably within your time and mine, the greater part of south Florida may be another great American desert, open only to the winds—a magnificent territory as it now exists; then lost to the world."

This judgment, as expressed, would be astonishing coming from anyone, but it is particularly astounding coming from Colonel Shutts, in view of his standing as an attorney and his undoubted ability to receive and weigh evidence. It might be inferred that he is hedging by using the word "may" to signify a remote contingent possibility rather than as a frequently accepted synonym of the verb "will." If, on the contrary, it is Colonel Shutts' real judgment as to the effects of this project, then it is clear that he has not familiarized himself with the evidence.

A special board of most competent engineers and geologists has recently rendered a report published as Senate Document No. 147, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session. With reference to the colonel's fears that south Florida may be another great American desert, the report states that:

"The pursuit of agriculture and the growth of vegetation, even in the area contiguous to the right-of-way where the ground water table will be lowered by the canal cut, will not be affected."

It states further that:

"The domestic water supplies of such cities as Jacksonville, Tampa, Palm Beach, or Miami will be entirely unaffected . . . by digging a sea-level canal."

Again, the report states that salt-water encroachment inward from the two ends of the canal, or by upward movement from the bottom of the fresh-water reservoir, cannot cause salted water to enter and thereby contaminate the main body of the readjusted ground-water reservoir against the fresh-water discharge into the canal.

Much reliance has been placed by the Miami Herald and other newspapers on statements alleged to have been made by Dr. Herman Gunter, State geologist, and by Mr. Harry Slattery, secretary of Mr. Harold Ickes, Public Works Administrator. Dr. Gunter has been misquoted and/or misinterpreted. His opinion, as expressed in letters to me, does not differ from that of the special boards of engineers and geologists.

Furthermore, Dr. Gunter states that his opinions were based on his knowledge of underground conditions accumulated over a period of years from observations made by him and casual records of the borings of artesian wells. The report of the special board of engineers and geologists is, however, based on many months of study and special investigations made at very considerable expense by employees of the United States with special reference to the ship canal.

I would add that the professional ability and the personal and professional integrity of the members of these numerous special boards of engineers and geologists are not one whit less than that of Colonel Shutts or other eminent practitioners of law.

In short, if Colonel Shutts will take the time and trouble to study the evidence accumulated on this cross-State canal project in the course of the last 30 years, he will find that the magnificent territory of south Florida as it now exists will not be lost to the world but, on the contrary, will be greatly benefited and will become even more magnificent than it now is.

In the first and last paragraphs of his letter, Colonel Shutts denies that he is actuated by ulterior motives. Of that I am, of course, not in a position to judge; but it is an interesting coincidence that the railroads were the first to advance the idea that the canal would intercept the water supplies of south Florida and that Colonel Shutts' law firm is counsel for one or more of these railroads.

It may be observed that many of the editorials appearing in Miami papers and much of the comment of special columnists embody more or less scurrilous personalities directed against your sincerity as a United States Senator and your ability to form judgments, and include as well attacks upon the professional and personal probity of eminent engineers who have had occasion, as employees of the United States, to study the question and to render to their client, the United States, their honest opinions. I doubt that Colonel Shutts is himself the author of these editorials or that his paid employees have any knowledge or appreciation of the ethics of the engineering profession. For their benefit, I would quote the distinguished engineer, Daniel W. Mead, who, when accused by a certain politician of having prepared a paper as the paid creature of the Power Trust, replied: "My services are for sale. My opinions, never!"

It is no more becoming for the employees of Colonel Shutts to attack the probity of the engineers employed by the United States to pass upon the cross-State canal project than it would be for the said engineers or their subordinates to attack the professional probity of Colonel Shutts as an attorney. There is such a thing as honor between professional men, and I respectfully submit that Colonel Shutts might well inculcate some recognition of this fact on the part of his journalists.

Very truly yours,

G. A. YOUNGBERG.

SITES FOR FEDERAL BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the act entitled "An act providing for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes", approved May 25, 1926 (44 Stat. 630), as amended, for the purpose of extending the area within the District of Columbia within which sites may be selected for the construction of suitable accommodations for the executive departments and independent establishments of the Federal Government, including suitable grounds, parking, and approaches, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

NEW YORK STATE HOUSING ACT—DECISION OF STATE COURT OF APPEALS

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the text of the decision rendered by the Court of Appeals of the State of New York upholding the constitutionality of the State Housing Authority Act, the decision being written by Judge Leonard C. Crouch. It involves the right of the State to condemn property for the purpose of slum clearance. It is a very important decision, the first of its kind rendered by the Court of Appeals of the State of New York.

There being no objection, the text of the decision was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of Mar. 18, 1936]

TEXT OF DECISION UPHOLDING THE STATE HOUSING LAW

The petitioner, a public corporation organized under the municipal housing authorities law (Laws of 1934, ch. 4, comprising secs. 60-78, inclusive, of the State housing law, being Laws of 1926, ch. 823), seeks to condemn certain premises in the city of New York owned by the defendant, Andrew Muller, the public use for which the premises are required is stated in the petition to be:

"The clearance, replanning, and reconstruction of part of an area of the city of New York, State of New York, wherein there exist, and the petitioner has found to exist, insanitary and substandard housing conditions."

As part of its project the petitioner has acquired by purchase properties contiguous on both sides of the premises in question. Acquisition of the defendant's property is therefore necessary for the carrying out of the project. The premises consist of two old-law tenement houses. The owner resists condemnation upon the ground that the municipal housing authorities law violates article 1, section 6, of the State constitution and the fourteenth amendment of the Federal Constitution, because it grants to petitioner the power of eminent domain for a use which is not a public use.

Briefly and broadly stated, the statute provides that a city may set up an authority with power to investigate and study living and housing conditions in the city, and to plan and carry out projects for the clearing, replanning, and reconstruction of slum areas and the providing of housing accommodations for persons of low income as a monthly rental, the maximum of which shall be $12.50 per room.

BOND ISSUES COVERED

It is empowered, under certain limitations, to issue and sell bonds which, however, shall not be a debt of the State nor of the city; and it may not in any manner pledge the credit of the State or city or imposed upon either any obligation. It is granted the power of eminent domain, to be exercised as provided, and it is exempted from the payment of certain taxes and fees.

In enacting the statute, the legislature, after thorough investigation, made certain findings of fact, upon the basis of which it determined and declared the necessity in the public interest of the provisions enacted, and that the objects thereof were "public uses and purposes for which public moneys may be spent and private property acquired" (sec. 61).

The facts found were that "in certain areas of cities in the State there exist insanitary and substandard living conditions owing to overcrowding and concentration of population, improper planning, excessive land coverage, lack of proper light, air, and space, insanitary design and arrangement, or lack of proper sanitary facilities; that there is not an adequate supply of decent, safe, and sanitary dwelling accommodations for persons of low income, and these conditions cause an increase and spread of disease and crime and constitute a menace to the health, safety, morals, welfare, and comfort of the citizens of the State, and impair economic values; that these conditions cannot be remedied by the ordinary operation of private enterprise."

It is true that the legislative findings and the determination of public use are not conclusive on the courts (Pocantico Water Works v. Bird, 130 N. Y. 249). But they are entitled at least to great respect, since they relate to public conditions concerning which the legislature, both by necessity and duty, must have known (Block v. Hirsch, 256 U. S. 135; People v. Charles Schweinler, 214 N. Y. 395).

The existence of all the conditions adverted to by the legislature was alleged in the petition and proved with reference to the area included in the project, of which the premises in question are a part.

The public evils, social and economic, of such conditions are unquestioned and unquestionable. Slum areas are the breeding places of disease, which take toll not only from denizens but by spread from the inhabitants of the entire city and State.

Juvenile delinquency, crime, and immorality are there born, find protection, and flourish.

Enormous economic loss results directly from the necessary expenditure of public funds to maintain health and hospital services for afflicted slum dwellers and to war against crime and immorality.

Indirectly, there is an equally heavy capital loss and a diminishing return in taxes because of the areas blighted by the existence of the slums.

HELD MATTERS OF STATE CONCERN

Concededly, these are matters of State concern (Alder v. Deegan, 251 N. Y. 467, 77), since they vitally affect the health, safety, and welfare of the public.

Time and again, in familiar cases needing no citation, the use by the legislature of the power of taxation and of the police power in dealing with the evils of the slums has been upheld by the courts.

Now, in continuation of a battle, which, if not entirely lost, is far from won, the legislature has restored to the last of the trinity of sovereign powers by giving to a city agency the power of eminent domain. We are called upon to say whether under the facts of this case, including the circumstances of time and place, the use of the power is a use for the public benefit—a public use—within the law.

There is no case in this jurisdiction or elsewhere directly in point. Governmental housing projects constitute a comparatively new means of remedying an ancient evil. Phases of the general subject were before the courts in Green v. Frazier (44 N. Dak. 395; affd. 253 U. S. 233), and in Willmon v. Powell (91 Calif. App. 1), where the power to spend public funds for such projects was upheld. (See also Simon v. O'Toole, 108 N. J. L. 32; affd., 108 N. J. L. 549.)

In United States of America v. Certain Lands in Louisville et al. (78 Fed. (2d), 684), it was held that, while such a project might be within the scope of a State's activities, it was not one which the Federal Government had power to undertake.

DRAINAGE CASES ARE CITED

The cases in this State which, perhaps, afford the closest analogy are the drainage cases, where land was permitted to be taken by eminent domain in the interest of public health, even where there was incidental benefit to private interests. (See e. g., Matter of Ryers (72 N. Y. 1); Board of Black River Regulating District v. Ogsbury (203 A. D. 43; affd., 235 N. Y. 600).)

"To take," said the court, "for the maintenance and promotion of the public health is a public purpose" (Matter of Ryers, supra, P. G. 7). Over many years and in a multitude of cases the courts have vainly attempted to define comprehensively the concept of a public use and to formulate a universal test. They have found here, as elsewhere, that to formulate anything ultimate, even though it were possible, would, in an inevitably changing world, be unwise, if not futile.

Lacking a controlling precedent, we deal with the question as it presents itself on the facts at the present point of time.

"The law of each age is ultimately what that age thinks should be the law" (People ex rel. Durham R. Corp. v. La Fetra (230 N. Y. 429, 450)).

The fundamental purpose of government is to protect the health, safety, and general welfare of the public. All its complicated activities have that simple end in view. Its power plant for the purpose consists of the power of taxation, the police power, and the power of eminent domain.

Whenever there arises in the State a condition of affairs holding a substantial menace to the public health, safety, or general welfare, it becomes the duty of the Government to apply to it whatever power is necessary and appropriate to check the menace.

SLUM MENACE LONG RECOGNIZED

There are differences in the nature and characteristics of the powers, though distinction between them is often fine (People ex rel. Durham R. Corp. v. La Fetra, supra, P. G. 444). But if the menace is serious enough to the public to warrant public action, and the power applied is reasonably and fairly calculated to check it and bears a reasonable relation to the evil, it seems to be constitutionally immaterial whether one or another of the sovereign powers is employed.

The menace of the slums in New York City has been long recognized as serious enough to warrant public action. The session laws for nearly 70 years past are sprinkled with acts applying the taxing power and the police power in attempts to cure or check it.

The slums still stand. The menace still exists. What objections, then, can be urged to the application of the third power, least drastic, but as here embodied probably the most effective of all?

It is said that private enterprise, curbed by restrictive legislation under the police power, is adequate and alone appropriate. There is some authority to that effect in other States.

A sufficient answer should be the page of legislative history in this State and its result referred to above. Legislation merely restrictive in its nature has failed because the evil inheres not so much in this or that individual structure as in the character of a whole neighborhood of dilapidated and unsanitary structures.

PUBLIC CONTROL CALLED SOLUTION

To eliminate the inherent evil and to provide housing facilities at low cost—the two things necessarily go together—require large-scale operations which can be carried out only where there is power to deal in invitum with the occasional greedy individual owner seeking excessive profit by holding out.

The cure is to be wrought not through the regulated ownership of the individual, but through the ownership and operation by or under the direct control of the public itself.

Nor is there anything novel in that. The modern city functions in the public interest as proprietor and operator of many activities formerly, and in some instances still, carried on by private enterprise.

It is also said that since the taking is to provide apartments to be rented to a class designated as "persons of low income", or to be leased or sold to limited dividend corporations, the use is private and not public.

This objection disregards the primary purpose of the legislation. Use of a proposed structure, facility, or service by everybody and anybody is one of the abandoned universal tests of a public use (Mount Vernon-Woodbury Cotton Duck Co. v. Alabama Interstate Power Co., 240 U. S. 30, 32; Strickley v. Highland Boy Gold Mining Co., 200 U. S. 527; Rindge Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 282 U. S. 700; Fallbrook Irrigation District v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 161-162).

LAW HELD TO PROTECT ALL

The designated class to whom incidental benefits will come are persons with an income under $2,500 a year, and it consists of two-thirds of the city's population. But the essential purpose of the legislation is not to benefit that class or any class; it is to protect and safeguard the entire public from the menace of the slums.

The so-called limited-dividend corporations referred to were provided for in the State housing law (Laws of 1926, ch. 823), and embody another and different attempt to solve the problems. The constitutionality of the scheme was unsuccessfully attacked in the courts (Mars Realty Corporation v. Sexton, 141 Misc. 622; Roche v. Sexton, 268 N. Y. 594; Cf. Matter of Mount Hope Development Corporation v. James, 258 N. Y. 510).

After 10 years of experiment its use, for economic reasons, has proved inadequate as a solution.

Nothing is better settled than that the property of one individual cannot, without his consent, be devoted to the private use of another, even when there is an incidental or colorable benefit to the public.

The facts here present no such case. In a matter of far-reaching public concern the public is seeking to take the defendant's property and to administer it as part of a project conceived and to be carried out in its own interest and for its own benefit. That is a public benefit and therefore, at least as far as this case is concerned, a public use.

The order and judgment should be affirmed.

WILD WATERFOWL PROBLEMS—PAPER BY JOHN C. HUNTINGTON

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, at the recent North American Wildlife Conference there was presented by John C. Huntington, vice president, More Game Birds in America, Inc., a paper which is both interesting and illuminating, and gives pertinent conclusions with respect to our wild waterfowl problems. I ask unanimous consent to have the address printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WILD DUCK FACTORY NEEDS REPAIRS

Ever since a serious shortage of wild ducks has made itself felt on the North American Continent, numerous efforts have been made to halt the downward trend in our duck supply. Most such efforts have taken the form of restrictions on the shooting of ducks.

Sound administration of our waterfowl resources requires that the annual losses from all causes, including shooting, be kept well within the annual production so that we may have a continuing increase in the number of ducks which go north to breed each spring.

We must recognize, however, that all the regulations in the world cannot restore duck breeding grounds. It is on the restoration of the former nesting areas which have been ruined that the future duck supply depends.

An overwhelming percentage of the annual continental duck crop has probably always been produced in the vast prairie region, which includes the Dakotas and parts of the bordering States, a portion of Manitoba, most of Saskatchewan, and Alberta, and extends in the northwest territories to Great Slave Lake. This area of about 630,000 square miles is the main source of supply of ducks for practically all parts of the United States. Four hundred and fifty thousand square miles, or slightly over 70 percent of this continental duck factory, lies in Canada.

That portion of the former breeding range of ducks which lies in the United States has virtually lost its importance as a duck-producing area due chiefly to agricultural development and drought. Under the program recommended by the President's Committee on Wildlife Restoration, the Biological Survey has acquired a number of areas, principally in the Dakotas, and is restoring these areas as duck-breeding grounds. Completion of these projects and possibly others in the same locality and their proper management will materially increase the annual output of ducks. But it seems doubtful whether maximum production of all the breeding grounds in the United States will ever again supply a sizable percentage of the continental duck crop.

While the program for the restoration of duck-breeding grounds in the Dakotas, and elsewhere in the United States, should be prosecuted as rapidly as time and funds will permit, it is the breeding grounds of Canada that hold the key to the future of ducks.

What is the situation on the Canadian breeding grounds today? Why are parts of this area producing only a small fraction of the number of ducks they yielded only a generation ago?

During the work on the 1935 international wild-duck census members of the staff of More Game Birds had an excellent opportunity to view the duck situation in Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and the Northwest Territories from the Canadian border to Great Slave Lake. In the course of our work we traveled approximately 30,000 miles by automobile and over 14,000 miles by airplane. The airplane offers a bird's-eye view of such vast dimensions that hundreds of square miles can be minutely examined in hours as against weeks and months of travel by any other means.

The northern half of this Canadian area, which lies roughly north of the fifty-third parallel and contains about 240,000 square miles, is still largely untouched by civilization. For the most part the country is wooded and has an abundance of water. This northern half of the Canadian waterfowl breeding grounds had a population of approximately thirty-one and one-half million ducks during August 1935, or slightly more than three-fourths of the total duck population of the Canadian prairie breeding region. On some of the large, compact breeding grounds in this part of the territory, ducks were so numerous and so concentrated as to raise the question, "Where do they find a sufficient supply of food?"

Prior to the influx of settlers, the southern portion of the Canadian prairie area was literally studded with lakes, ponds, and marshes as well as countless sloughs and potholes which, together, constituted an ideal duck factory. During each breeding season it produced an apparently inexhaustible supply of many species of prairie nesting ducks.

Settlement and utilization of the land (principally for agriculture) have brought about changes in this part of the producing plant which have been truly disastrous to the ducks. In the wake of the plow approximately 80 percent of all duck-breeding places have dried up. Of those that remain, many have become so unattractive to the ducks that they are no longer used by them.

During the summer of 1935 the southern half of the Canadian prairie area, containing approximately 210,000 square miles, had a population of approximately five and one-half million ducks, less than one-seventh of the total population of the whole area. Those figures—thirty-one and one-half million ducks in 240,000 square miles, and five and one-half million ducks in 210,000 square miles—prove that our western nesting ducks, the bulk of the present international supply, are literally being driven to the wall by the inroads of civilization on their ancestral breeding grounds. Year after year they have been forced farther and farther north up against two impassable ecological barriers—the Rocky Mountains on the west and that great rock formation, the Canadian shield, on the east. These natural barriers converge toward Great Slave Lake which forms the apex of the last remaining unspoiled natural breeding ground of the entire prairie nesting region. Here the prairie nesting ducks are making their last stand.

With those figures before us, we do not have to be expert mathematicians to understand, first, that we have all too few eggs, and, second, that entirely too many of them are in the same comparatively small basket. If some natural calamity, such as an epidemic disease, should occur on this northern portion of the territory during the breeding season, the curtain would be rung down on ducks for many years, if not forever.

Viewing the Canadian prairie duck region as a whole, and using business terms, we may truthfully say that the producing plant is still there but half of it is virtually in ruins. Until the unspoiled northern half is made safe against the fate which befell the southern half, and the damage at least partially repaired in the southern portion, we simply cannot expect any great increase in our continental duck supply, irrespective of what takes place in the less important duck-producing areas.

All too long we have collectively played the role of Micawber, hoping that something would turn up which would again restore our ducks to their former abundance. It is high time that we realized that unless and until some competent agency does a businesslike job of restoration on Canadian duck-breeding grounds, no substantial and permanent increase in the continental duck supply can be expected. Man has progressively ruined the most productive portion of the natural duck-breeding territory on the continent until Nature is powerless to restore it unaided. A cycle of abundant rainfall would improve duck conditions temporarily by filling dried-up potholes and ponds but, at best, the results would be meager and temporary.

Those sincerely interested in waterfowl restoration are faced with two questions: First, what can be done? And, second, Who shall do it? On the answer to these two questions depends not only the future of wildfowling as a sport in the United States but the very existence of some of our most valuable species of wild ducks.

I have been asked to give our answer to these two questions, based on our rather comprehensive study of the subject during the past 3 years:

First. What can be done?

Obviously, the preservation of the more important duck-breeding grounds in the northern area is of vital importance. All the duck-shooting restrictions the United States could ever make will not halt the destruction of wild-duck habitats by the advance of civilization. We might stop all shooting, and still witness the disappearance of our ducks. These northern areas should be protected against the fate which befell the former preferred duck-breeding grounds farther south. Competent management of these areas would insure a continuance of their present high rate of productivity. Practically all of the land in the northern area is Government-owned, and Canadian officials concerned are willing to cooperate by setting such areas aside as permanent sanctuaries, providing the necessary cooperation on the balance of the program is forthcoming from the United States.

In the southern half of the Canadian prairie breeding territory, lying generally south of the fifty-third parallel, there are many areas which formerly produced excellent crops of ducks, but which are now devoted to other purposes. Many of these areas are not particularly valuable for their present use, and these should be acquired and restored as duck-breeding grounds. An ample and permanent supply of water is of vital importance, and this would necessitate the building of dams, dikes, ditches, storage reservoirs, and other water-control work which will insure the usefulness of the restored areas even during periods of severe drought. Each one of these producing areas should be placed under competent management. Unless such areas are properly supervised, protected, and developed by trained men, they cannot be expected to produce satisfactory duck crops.

In addition to water, wild ducks need an abundant food supply and nesting cover on their breeding grounds. Under proper management these necessities could be built up and maintained.

Nesting wild ducks are particularly vulnerable to natural enemies. Predators such as crows, snapping turtles, and coyotes destroy tremendous numbers of the eggs and young of wild ducks which otherwise would reach maturity. Adequate protection against natural enemies on the restored breeding grounds is an important part of the work involved.

In restoring former duck breeding grounds and placing them under efficient management other losses which now seriously reduce the annual crop will be eliminated or at least substantially reduced. I refer to such things as the trampling of eggs by grazing cattle and horses, the destruction of nests and breeding birds by fire, and the loss of a tremendous number of birds by disease on contaminated areas.

If the work which I have just briefly outlined is done promptly and well the southern portion of the Canadian prairie region will again become the most important duck-producing area on the continent. Its present annual production of about 5,000,000 ducks can be tripled, quadrupled—in fact, increased almost without limit—if funds are made available for the work.

A preliminary study indicates that with a fund of $500,000 annually much of the necessary work could be accomplished within a period of 5 years.

This brings us to the second question: Who can do this work?

Certainly the United States Government cannot do it for the good and sufficient reason that Federal funds are not available for expenditure in Canada or any other foreign country for such a purpose. The Canadian Government has fulfilled its obligations under the migratory-bird treaty in very fine shape. They could, of course, and probably would be willing to do the work, but the necessary money is not available and there is no earthly reason why Canada should provide it.

That, it seems to me, puts the problem squarely up to those who reap the benefits from the wild-duck crop produced in Canada—sportsmen in the United States and those industries which profit from the sport of duck shooting in this country. To them the restoration of Canadian duck-breeding grounds is of truly vital importance. On the proper development and management of this area depends the continuance and improvement of the sport of wildfowling, which in turn directly affects the numerous business enterprises patronized by duck shooters which furnish them with equipment, transportation, and other needs.

There is every evidence that a duck-restoration project such as I have briefly outlined would receive the whole-hearted cooperation of the people of Canada, including high Government officials.

It is squarely up to the duck shooters of the United States and the industries profiting from the continuance and expansion of the sport of wildfowling to take the initiative and to decide promptly whether or not this necessary job should be thoroughly done now before it is too late.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 2664. An act to aid in defraying the expenses of the Third Triennial Meeting of the Associated Country Women of the World, to be held in this country in June 1936; and

S. 3173. An act for the relief of certain formerly enlisted members of Battery D, One Hundred and Ninety-seventh Coast Artillery (Antiaircraft), New Hampshire National Guard.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11035) making appropriations for the military and non-military activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes.

Mr. COPELAND obtained the floor.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question.

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Taking the committee's report on the pending bill, I find on pages 5, 6, 7, and 8 the proposed allocations under the bill for river and harbor projects. I note that above the column of figures are the words "Proposed tentative allocation." I should like to ask the Senator just what that means.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, we had a long discussion in the committee with the Army engineers as to what, in view of the fact that no money had been appropriated for flood control, should be done for rivers and harbors. By request of the committee, the Army engineers furnished the list which is printed on the pages of the committee's report indicated by the Senator from Minnesota. I think it is unfortunate that the particular language, to which reference has been made by the Senator, appears at the head of the column of figures showing the allocation to each project, but I may assure him that this is the list of projects which the Army engineers stated could be and would be carried out during the present year.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If this bill becomes a law, the proposed allocations will be the sums allocated by the Congress; they will not be allocated after the law is passed at the will of anyone else?

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator is correct. All these projects were proposed, submitted to the appropriate committees, referred to the Army engineers, approved, brought back to the Congress, and acted upon by the Congress. These are all approved projects, and if this bill becomes a law these projects will be carried out as included in the list.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Congress makes the allocations by passing a bill?

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] made a very interesting statement concerning a publication authorized by the War Department, to which I referred as one of ancient vintage, and stated that I did not feel that I could express what I really thought I knew about it. This morning I took up with the Secretary of War the question of the pamphlet on citizenship which was referred to yesterday by the Senator from Washington and from which he read excerpts, some of which, I am sure, were quite startling to us.

The Secretary of War called attention to the fact that the Senator from Washington did not go quite far enough in his reading and did not read the final conclusion of the Department regarding the matters stated in the pamphlet on citizenship. But we do not need to consider that further, I am sure, because I have this memorandum from the War Department regarding the pamphlet from which the Senator from Washington quoted. I read:

A citizenship manual for use by instructors in the C. M. T. camps was prepared under direction of the War Department and issued for trial use in June 1927. The actual preparation of the manual was done by Chaplain C. F. Fuchter, in collaboration with the American Citizenship Foundation.

In 1928 this manual was revised by Chaplain Fuchter under the supervision of the War Department, and was distributed for use in the 1929 camps.

This is the article on citizenship referred to yesterday by the Senator from Washington:

Following its distribution, some commendatory letters were received from citizens, but there were a very large number of letters criticizing the pamphlet, which continued during the next year or two. Most of the criticism was directed toward the paragraph on democracy, which failed to be read in conjunction with the succeeding definition of a republic.

It was that matter relating to democracy upon which the Senator from Washington enlarged last night. Here is the meat of the War Department letter:

The War Department, realizing that an instructional pamphlet of such a controversial nature should not be continued in use, on September 2, 1932, directed that the manual be withdrawn from circulation and its further use as a military textbook should be discontinued. A copy of the General Staff memorandum directing such action is attached.

I ask that the General Staff memorandum may be included in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Memorandum for The Adjutant General.
Subject: Training Manual 2000-25, November 30, 1928.

SEPTEMBER 2, 1932.

The Secretary of War directs:

I. That corps area and department commanders be informed by letter as follows:

Training Manual 2000-25, November 30, 1928, is withdrawn from circulation and its further use as a military textbook will be discontinued.

II. That TR 2000-25 will not be listed in TR 1-10 when the latter is next revised.

EDGAR T. COLLINS,
Major General,
Assistant Chief of Staff.

By ERLE M. WILSON,
Lieutenant Colonel, General Staff,
Executive.

Mr. COPELAND. Therefore the most effective point used in the argument by the Senator from Washington is now disposed of by the fact that the document to which he referred is not official and has not been in use for 4 years in the Army or the camps of the sort under consideration.

As for the amendment itself, I sincerely hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. FRAZIER obtained the floor.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield while I ask the Senator from New York a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield for that purpose?

Mr. FRAZIER. I do.

Mr. BONE. I have in my hand the letter written by the General Staff of the Army, to which the Senator from New York referred a moment ago, which indicates the pamphlet to which I referred yesterday was withdrawn from the use of the camps and which indicates that the manual was prepared by Chaplain Fuchter "under the supervision of the War Department" and distributed for use in the 1929 camps. I should like to ask the Senator what is the American Citizenship Foundation, if he knows? What is that outfit?

Mr. COPELAND. I do not know.

Mr. BONE. It must be a concern which has very little use for democracy or for public ownership. I am wondering if the Senator from New York or the War Department can apprise us why they call on some outfit like that for the preparation of such a pamphlet, in view of the opinions which it entertains?

Mr. COPELAND. Does it say the chaplain referred to them?

Mr. BONE. It says the chaplain prepared the manual in collaboration with the American Citizenship Foundation. I am curious to know what the foundation is.

Mr. COPELAND. I am not a member. I do not know who the members are. I am not in sympathy with what they suggested. In general I approve much of what the Senator from Washington said yesterday.

The only point in discussion this morning is to make clear that this pamphlet, offensive to the Senator from Washington, was withdrawn from official use in 1932, and is not now in use in any camp or organization under control of the United States Army.

Mr. BONE. I want the Senator from New York to understand it is not because it was offensive to me that I criticized it, but in my judgment it was an assault upon the very things for which men have bled and died in this country. I cannot imagine the War Department assuming responsibility for putting out a pamphlet of that kind. What right has the War Department to attack public ownership under the guise of teaching young men how to use rifles? It is that sort of thing that makes me suspicious of military training which is made compulsory in schools.

I thank the Senator from North Dakota for yielding to me.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, in view of what the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] has just said about the pamphlet referred to by the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] last night in regard to citizenship, the pamphlet having been issued by the War Department, may I say that a few moments ago I was handed a copy of a letter written by a boy in one of the universities of the South which has compulsory military training? He said:

Exactly 28 minutes ago I walked from a classroom (military science) in which the instructor denounced all workers for peace as joining up with the Communists in an effort to reduce arms—

And so forth. Then the writer of the letter refers to the instructor by saying "that he must either be a fool or a monumental liar." Further on in his letter he expresses surprise at the churches taking a stand for peace and against military preparedness. In closing he said:

This theory of international brotherly love is fine in theory, but I as sure as — do not love everybody I meet.

That was supposed to have been stated in the class on military tactics by the major sent from the War Department to that school to teach military tactics. This teaching is up to date at the present time so far as military science is concerned.

Mr. President, yesterday, in the course of the debate, there was some discussion about the number of colleges which have military training. This morning I got in touch with The Adjutant General's office and asked for some information. General Conley, Adjutant General of the War Department, called me back on the telephone in a few moments and gave me the following information:

He said there is a grand total of 51 land-grant colleges in the United States, all of which offer a course in military tactics; that in 49 of those land-grant colleges military tactics is a required subject.

In other words, there are only two land-grant colleges in the United States in which military science is not a required subject. Those two land-grant colleges are located in Wisconsin and Minnesota. Unfortunately, I have not a list of the land-grant colleges in the various States, but I understand there is at least one in each State.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. BENSON. Is it not a fact that until the time Minnesota and Wisconsin abolished compulsory military drill in their land-grant colleges and made it optional, for all practical purposes the people in those States believed that military drill was compulsory in all the land-grant colleges, and that the Federal Government was requiring that it be made compulsory?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; I think that was the general understanding. I myself thought so until I got into a discussion a few years ago on the floor of the Senate, and during the course of the debate a letter was read from the then Attorney General and also from the then Secretary of War, from which I shall quote a little later, in which they explained that the compulsory feature was not on the part of the United States Government or the War Department.

I desire to continue with the information which I received from The Adjutant General of the United States. General Conley also reports that there are 139 junior military training units, of which 43 are in private institutions and 96 are in public high schools. In some cities there are several such junior units. In other cities, such as Chicago, where there are 20 or more schools which teach military tactics, all are included in one unit. There are 38 units known as the 55-C class, and the schools of the city of Washington come in that class, where the War Department does not furnish officers, but does furnish a small amount of material, such as guns and some ammunition for military training. The requirement of the War Department is that a school must have at least 100 students taking military science or tactics before an officer and material for military tactics may be furnished by the War Department. General Conley also states that of the 96 high-school units, 55 schools have an elective course in military tactics, and in 41 high schools the course is required.

In all fairness to The Adjutant General I will say that he objected to the term "compulsory military training." He said that it was a required subject, just the same as English might be, or mathematics, or some other subject of that kind; and, of course, that is perfectly true. But to all intents and purposes military training is required; and I was greatly surprised to know that 41 high schools of this Nation require students to take military training in order to graduate from them.

In Bangor, Maine, a boy 14 years old objected to military training because his father was a minister, and I suppose the boy had been brought up to believe that military training and preparation for war were not right; and he objected to it, and did not want to take military training. The school authorities threatened to expel him from school. The matter was taken up with his father; and finally, as I understand, the boy was expelled. His father went to the school board and said, "The State law of Maine requires that I send this boy to a public school. Where am I going to send him?" It was a case of either setting aside his religious scruples and taking military training or violating the State law and not going to school at all.

The purpose of the amendment, it seems to me, is to assure that the money of the Government of the United States shall be spent as logically as possible, and not be wasted. The question was raised yesterday by a Senator as to the cost of military training per individual in schools and colleges. I find that in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 14, when this measure was under discussion in the House of Representatives, Representative MARCANTONIO, of New York, put in a table, which is found on page 2092 of the RECORD of February 14, from which I wish to quote:

The greater efficiency of elective R. O. T. C. units, as against compulsory units, both with respect to number of potential Reserve officers produced and cost of their production, is shown by the following tables:

1. Compulsory R. O. T. C. units.

The table does not give all of them, but it gives a number of them. I wish to read just a few.

At the University of Maine, 517 students are enrolled in the basic course—that means, as I understand, the first 2 years—and 39 in the advanced course. That is, 39 out of the 517 decided to go through with the R. O. T. C. I presume they liked military drill and wanted to go through with it, and took the rest of the course.

The personnel pay at the University of Maine was $21,958.80. That means that that amount of money was divided up among those boys to pay for their uniforms and belts and one thing and another, and to encourage them to take military training.

The maintenance cost at the University of Maine was $15,691.24.

The total expense of the Government at that one school was $37,650.04.

The average cost per potential Reserve officer—and of course that means each of the 39 who went through with the last 2 years of R. O. T. C. work—was $965 per capita.

Those are the figures for the University of Maine.

Next is Rutgers University. The average cost per potential Reserve officer there is $636.

At Penn State College, 1,694 students were enrolled in what are termed the basic R. O. T. C. classes. Out of that number, 107 took the advanced course. The cost in that school for those who finished the R. O. T. C. course was $1,000 per capita.

At the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College there were 74 students who completed the course, and the average cost for those who completed the course was $1,023 per student.

The total expense to the Government at Penn State College was $107,028.86.

At the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College the total cost to the Government was only $75,722.99.

Now I wish to give the statistics of some of the universities where military training is elective and not compulsory, to show the difference in the cost.

At the University of Pennsylvania, where the course is elective, the number who completed the course was 152, and the average cost per capita was $338, as compared with $1,000 at Penn State College.

At the University of Michigan, where the course is elective, the average cost per capita was $292.

At the University of Wisconsin, which is a land-grant college, where for some years the course has been elective, there were 117 who finished the course, and the average cost was $408.

Where the course was compulsory, and the Government had to pay the expenses during the first 2 years of those who did not wish to take this course, or many of them who did not wish to take it but were compelled to do so, and only a few went through the last 2 years, the expense, as stated here, ranged from a little over $1,000 per capita down to a little over $600 per capita. Where the course was not compulsory, the cost ranged from $408 to a little over $300.

So, Mr. President, if this money that we are appropriating is to be used for the purpose of educating these boys as Reserve officers, it should be remembered that only those who take the 4-year course, the last 2 years of which are elective, are the ones who go on the Reserve officers' list; and the cost, as shown by this table, is much greater where the military course is compulsory than where it is elective. Of course that is quite naturally true.

Mr. President, yesterday I referred to some editorials written by college boys and entered in a prize contest sponsored by this young men's organization against compulsory military training. I read yesterday from one of them, and today I desire to quote two or three passages that some of these boys wrote. They are boys who are taking military training. I wish to give the Members of the Senate a chance to understand just what their opinion is.

Here is an editorial written by Roger E. Chase, of Columbia University, New York. I shall read only a paragraph or two:

It is not at all alarming to the superpatriots that "citizenship", as promoted in the R. O. T. C., has meant the negation of science and democracy, that the training corps have been as culpable as any other group in the revival of American college vigilantism.

What that "citizenship" implies was once illustrated in an official R. O. T. C. manual (withdrawn from circulation, thanks to student protests, 10 years ago).

This is right along the line of the remarks of the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] on yesterday, and I should like to have the Senator from New York, in charge of the bill, listen to this paragraph from an editorial written by one of the students for which he was given first prize by the organization which promoted the contest. In speaking about citizenship he said:

What that citizenship implies was once illustrated in an official R. O. T. C. manual (withdrawn from circulation, thanks to student protests, 10 years ago).

Of course, the Senator from New York may say this is ancient history, but it was in the manual when I went to the university and took this training.

One passage read:

This inherent desire to fight and kill must be carefully watched and encouraged by the student.

Talk about good citizenship and the R. O. T. C.! Let me read this again. This is from the pamphlet:

This inherent desire to fight and kill must be carefully watched and encouraged by the student.

I read another quotation:

To finish an opponent who hangs on or attempts to pull you to the ground, always try to break his hold by driving the knee or foot to his crotch and gouging his eyes with your thumbs.

Talk about citizenship! The Senator from New York says he is on the side of the angels because he is for good citizenship, promoted by an organization which only 10 years ago instructed the boys as follows:

This inherent desire to fight and kill must be carefully watched and encouraged by the student.

I wish to read from two or three others of the editorials written by these students. Here is one written by a student who was awarded second prize, Elmer J. Lewis, Riverside Junior College, Riverside, Calif.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I have known many doctors who, too, have written essays. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRAZIER. I wish to quote from this young man who wrote from Riverside, Calif.:

The argument that military drill is superior to physical education for furthering physical development has been so completely repudiated by authorities in physical-education work that we seldom hear it mentioned today. Lt. Col. Herman J. Kochler, founder of the West Point system of physical training, has this to say:

"The use of the musket as a means of physical development of anyone, be he man or boy, is worse than worthless. It is, in my opinion, positively injurious. Permit me to suggest that if a change is contemplated you should endeavor to have a thorough course of gymnastic training substituted."

When I attended the university and took military training we had shiny bayonets on the ends of our old muskets, and we were taught to "fix bayonets", to "right parry thrust" and "left parry thrust", to execute all the commands in the use of the bayonet, how to stab it into an opponent, and so on.

When I was Governor of North Dakota, during the World War, I went to the military training camp at St. Paul, having been invited to visit the camp, and a captain from my own State furnished me a special guide for the day. They were putting on an exhibition to show us how the men were being trained to be officers in the World War, and they staged a bayonet charge on dummies, gunny sacks stuffed with hay, or something of the sort, hanging on ropes. The soldiers charged and jabbed their bayonets through the sacks, and pulled the trigger and shot a charge. I said to the officer who was with me, "Do you mean to say that the boys are instructed to shoot when they jab their bayonets into their enemies?" He replied, "Oh, yes; we might just as well finish the job and not give them any chance."

That is what they taught in the way of military training when I went to the university, a number of years ago, but because there was so much criticism of the bayonet practice, the bayonets have been taken off the old muskets furnished to the students in high schools and universities during the last few years.

I wish to read a few more paragraphs, which are very interesting, coming from young men who know what they are talking about. Here is an editorial which won third prize for Gilbert Harrison, University of California, Los Angeles, Calif. He says:

Education for a democracy is education of men to think for themselves.

I believe every thinking democratic Senator will agree with that statement.

It is not education by command. It is not education by dictation. It is not education by propaganda. It is not education which preaches any brand of doctrine, nor is it education for the popularization of any school of opinion. Education for a democracy teaches men to consider opinions wisely.

Compulsory military training is not concerned with the wise consideration of the problems of war and peace. It is not concerned with inquiring into the causes of war or into the ways for realizing peace. It is not interested in investigation of the value of war or that of peace. It is concerned with the technique of killing. It has for its business the selling of that technique to its students. Its aim is the development of military-minded youth.

There is no denial of that statement. I do not think even the Senator from New York will deny it.

Those schools which conscript students into the military course violate the soundest principle of democratic education.

That is worth reading again:

Those schools which conscript students into the military course violate the soundest principle of democratic education.

"Conscript students into military training." That is what it means. It is a violation of the Constitution of the United States itself.

Now I shall read from another editorial, written by a boy who was not one of the three highest on the list, but who got honorable mention. His name is Mark Clutter, and he wrote as a student at the University of Wichita, Wichita, Kans. He makes some very good statements, and I wish to read a few of them. He says:

I. Is compulsory military training in our schools practical as an auxiliary to the national defense?

Then he answers:

Granting for argument's sake that in the present madhouse of nations a strong Army and Navy are necessary to our welfare, it does not follow that peacetime conscription among college youths can have anything but an evil effect. The R. O. T. C. has as its primary purpose the training of students toward becoming Reserve officers in the Army. The requirements of a good officer include discipline, an interest in the work, and a broad knowledge of things military. It is obvious that students bent only on gaining the required credit in a distasteful course will never acquire these traits.

II. Can the United States afford to betray its ideals of individual freedom for the doubtful gain of a few poorly trained college soldiers?

That is his question, and I wish to read a part of his answer:

It is believed in this Republic and in all liberal countries that religious freedom is an inalienable right. To the American mind, religious intolerance backed by the sanctions of the State seem as outmoded as cannibalism. Yet in many of our tax-supported schools this ugly monster from the past has dared to show itself again. Quakers and others are required to violate their ideals if they are to attend schools which may be best fitted to their needs in other respects.

He also says:

The conscientious objector may be wrong in his views. That remains for the future to decide. But, right or wrong, he has a right to his views.

I believe the Senator from New York, who has charge of the bill, will agree with that:

But, right or wrong, he has a right to his views.

That is the democratic teaching of Washington and Jefferson and all the others of our forefathers to whom we are supposed to look.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am in full accord with the statement made by the Senator.

Mr. FRAZIER. I am glad to hear the Senator make that statement. This young man goes on:

He is a member of an intellectual minority such as in times past have brought forth most of the world's progress. He lives in a country founded by dissenting minorities, and founded on the principle that all such minorities should have the freedom and protection granted to the majority. Unless we wish to depart altogether from our traditional ideals, we must grant the trouble-making pacifist his rights. Those superpatriots who demand a return to the principles of Washington and Jefferson and at the same time wish to force compulsory military training upon our schools stand self-condemned of hypocrisy.

I believe that needs another reading. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] has just come into the Chamber, and I shall be very glad to have him hear it. I wish to say to the Senator from Tennessee that The Adjutant General of the Army, General Conley, informed me this morning that out of a total of 51 land-grant colleges, 49 of them—all but 2—have a required course in military training. So if the State of Tennessee, from which my friend hails and so ably represents, has a land-grant college, which I assume it has, then there is compulsory military training in that college. The General did not say "compulsory." He used the expression "required military training."

Mr. McKELLAR. In the land-grant college?

Mr. FRAZIER. In the land-grant college.

Mr. McKELLAR. What did the General say about the R. O. T. C.?

Mr. FRAZIER. I did not ask him.

Mr. McKELLAR. Most of the students who are trained in the R. O. T. C. are in the public schools, in smaller institutions. I do not believe in compulsory military training. There is no Federal law which provides for it. If it is given, it is given under a local rule, and not by reason of a Federal law.

Mr. FRAZIER. I understand from The Adjutant General that there are 41 high schools in which military training is required.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am surprised to know that. It ought not to exist. There is no Federal law providing for compulsory military training.

Mr. FRAZIER. I understand that, of course. I desire to reread the sentence I just read from the editorial written by a youth in a college in Wichita, Kans., the State from which the able Senator [Mr. CAPPER] sitting to my left comes. This youth says:

Those superpatriots who demand a return to the principles of Washington and Jefferson and at the same time wish to force compulsory military training upon our schools stand self-condemned of hypocrisy.

I believe the young man is right.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I desire to ask the Senator from North Dakota if the high schools he refers to as having compulsory military training are high schools which are military schools in their nature. Are they in the nature of boarding schools of various kinds?

Mr. FRAZIER. No. According to The Adjutant General, 41 high schools require military training in their courses.

Mr. President, I desire to read another paragraph or two from this young man's statement. I think he knows what he is talking about. The State of Kansas is a progressive State, and the people in that State do a great deal of thinking for themselves. He asks another question:

3. Would not such a betrayal set a dangerous precedent which might lead to further destruction of liberty?

He answers it:

The existence of compulsory military training in our schools has the bad effect of conditioning the public mind to the idea of peacetime conscription. A small but clamorous group favors extension of the system. If they should have their way, it is not inconceivable that more and more compulsory military training would ultimately lead to universal conscription after the European pattern.

Of course, there is a certain class of people that advocates compulsory military training of all citizens within certain ages in the country.

The young man goes on:

Militarization of a people is an unqualified evil. Political tyranny and intellectual sterility is the inevitable result. A nation schooled in unquestioning obedience loses its courage for criticizing the existing government and for demanding reform. "Yes, sir," becomes the motto of the majority instead of "I think" and "I will." Any wrong, when dressed in the uniform of proper authority, can exist unhampered.

I read that last sentence again:

Any wrong, when dressed in the uniform of proper authority, can exist unhampered.

Has the soldier any right to complain about conditions, or about an order which he receives, or about anything else he is required to do? Oh, no! He must simply obey orders. This young man makes a few more observations, which I read:

Let us be reasonable about this matter of compulsory military training. We have little to gain by continuing the system, and much to lose if, as it seems, it has a tendency to stifle intellectual and personal freedom.

Compulsory R. O. T. C. is in itself relatively unimportant, but, as a tendency in the wrong direction, it is tremendously important. Whether college boys of today have to drill 2 hours a week is a small matter, but whether the youth of tomorrow will be free and intellectually courageous, or merely unquestioning cogs in a war machine ruled by whatever dictator may be in power, is a very serious matter.

I think the young man is very logical in that argument again. He further states:

The move against compulsory military training is not fostered by organized pacifism but by organized common sense * * *.

Here is a wrong that needs to be righted. Here is an injustice against the youth of America and a travesty on the purpose of the American educational system.

Compulsory military training is un-American.

I think he is correct in that statement also. I can imagine nothing more un-American than to tell an American youth who wants to go to high school or to a college or to a university that in order to graduate he must take at least 2 years of military training. That is what the proposed amendment seeks to prevent.

Mr. President, all the amendment does is to provide that the money available under this particular appropriation shall not be used in colleges or schools not strictly military in which the course in military science is compulsory. In other words, in order to get a share of the money appropriated such schools will be required to make their course in military tactics elective and not compulsory. The land-grant colleges will continue to have military training, of course, because that is required under the Morrill law; but it is not required to be taught every student. At least that is what a former Attorney General of the United States has said, and also a former Secretary of War.

I have that statement among my papers. I intended to read it, but I neglected to do so. I am sure I can find it if anyone is interested in it. I remember putting those articles in the RECORD some years ago.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator, if he can do so without any inconvenience, read the letter of the former Attorney General.

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not have the full letter, but I have a quotation from it here some place. I will look that up. I do not have the full letter.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator state its substance?

Mr. FRAZIER. It was to the effect that the Morrill Law did not provide that military training must be taught to every student, but that, of course, such training must be offered. The Adjutant General said in his communication, received this morning, that the position of the Department was that, of course, military training in these colleges must be offered, but that it was the local boards of education, or the bodies in control of such schools, which made it compulsory.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand—and that is why I was anxious to have the former Attorney General's letter read—the Federal law provides that in order to share in this money the land-grant college must offer a course in military training.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. But such training does not have to be compulsory.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. Under the State law the colleges can do as they please about military training. No one attending the school can be required to take a military training course. It is entirely voluntary with the student whether he takes it or not. Is that correct?

Mr. FRAZIER. That is correct so far as the Government is concerned.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I mean.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I believe it was understood prior to the action of Wisconsin and Minnesota making military instruction elective that land-grant colleges had to require military training in order to obtain funds under the Morrill Act. If my memory serves me correctly, when the Wisconsin act was pending in the legislature those who opposed it predicted that its enactment would result in the States losing the support coming from the Government under the Morrill Act. As a matter of fact, when the State finally took action it did not result in the aid being withdrawn.

Even now there are many people who think the Morrill Act does require that military training shall be compulsory.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator from Wisconsin is correct in his statement.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The purpose of my question was really to make plain the actual condition. I thought I understood it before, but as to the general idea which I think prevails in many of the States that the military-training course must be compulsory, I wanted the knowledge diffused so that those holding that opinion would understand that that is not necessary. Whatever may be the fate of this amendment, of which I am heartily in favor, if this discussion brings to the States and the legislatures of the States the information that a compulsory course in military training is not necessary in order to get this money, it will have accomplished great good, regardless of whether we put the amendment in the law or not.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, as I remember, it was about 10 years ago when the opinion was handed down by the Attorney General, and also by the Secretary of War at that time, stating that the Government did not require military training to be compulsory; but there have been, I am reliably informed, in many instances threats made, or at least insinuations made—I think insinuations would be the better term—by Army officers unless the course in military training was compulsory that their favors would be withdrawn at least to a large extent.

In North Dakota the State board of administration, consisting of five members, who have charge of all the State educational institutions, as well as some other institutions of a charitable and penal character, brought this question to a vote a year or two ago and lacked but one vote of making the military-training course in the university and in the agricultural college elective instead of compulsory. The vote was 3 to 2 to sustain the compulsory feature of military training. I understand that the same thing has occurred in some of the other States. I was informed that in the State of Oregon the board lacked but one vote of changing the compulsory feature of military training in their land-grant colleges.

I have just received a list of the land-grant colleges in the United States. I did not previously have that list. As I have stated, there are 49 land-grant colleges that require military training out of a total of 51. I was looking for Tennessee. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] yesterday was quite sure there was no compulsory military training in Tennessee educational institutions, but I find the University of Tennessee at Knoxville, Tenn., which is the land-grant college of that State, requires military training. The Senator from Tennessee is not at the moment on the floor, but I will call it to his attention when he returns to the Chamber.

The only two land-grant colleges in this list which do not have the compulsory feature in connection with military training out of the 51 are those in Wisconsin and Minnesota.

I have shown that the expense of the Government in training college students to be Reserve officers is much less where the course is an elective course than where it is compulsory. That is perfectly natural, because, under a compulsory course, the great majority of the young men taking it fall out of the course at the end of the 2 years; they do not complete it; they do not go through with the last 2 years, which fits them for commissions as Reserve officers. It costs about three times more to prepare college students for Reserve officers in the institutions where military training is compulsory than it does in those where military training is not compulsory.

Then, as to the high schools, I cannot understand for the life of me how any Senator can vote to appropriate money for military purposes for expenditure in any high school where the high school provides for a compulsory military training course.

The Senator from New York infers that anybody who is against compulsory military training does not belong to the angel class. I cannot quite agree with the Senator from New York in some things, and this is one of them. He says he prefers to belong to the angel class. I am glad he has that very good opinion of himself. I know other Senators have a very high opinion of the Senator from New York, but some of us object to being put in the other class just because we are against compulsory military training in 41 high schools and 49 colleges of the Nation, which are land-grant colleges, supported by the Government of the United States.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think that the RECORD will show that I said I wanted to be an angel or expected to be an angel.

Mr. FRAZIER. But the Senator wanted to be on the side of the angels.

Mr. COPELAND. I said I wanted to be on the side of the angels.

Mr. NORRIS. We will all be angels pretty soon. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRAZIER. At some time; yes.

Mr. President, I know it is useless to speak longer on this subject, because there are only a few Senators on the floor. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Clark] this morning said to me that if we could keep Senators on the floor of the Senate to hear the discussion there would be no question about the amendment being adopted; but, with only a handful of Senators on the floor, other Senators come in and vote with the committee, and that is perfectly natural, of course.

I am very much interested in this matter; I feel very deeply about it. I have read from the expressions of boys who have written from the colleges themselves. They know what they are writing about. There has been vote after vote and poll after poll taken in the universities and high schools, and a majority have, so far as I know, in every instance voted against compulsory military training. Polls have also been taken by churches throughout the various States, and the majority has been against compulsory military training.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a quorum call?

Mr. FRAZIER. I have concluded.

FUNDS FOR UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there should be a quorum on this occasion, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark	Keyes	Pittman
Ashurst	Connally	King	Pope
Austin	Copeland	La Follette	Radcliffe
Bachman	Costigan	Lewis	Reynolds
Bailey	Davis	Logan	Robinson
Barbour	Dickinson	Loneragan	Russell
Barkley	Donahey	Long	Schwellenbach
Benson	Duffy	McAdoo	Sheppard
Bilbo	Fletcher	McGill	Shipstead
Black	Frazier	McKellar	Smith
Bone	George	McNary	Steiwer
Borah	Gerry	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Gibson	Metcalf	Townsend
Bulkeley	Glass	Minton	Truman
Bulow	Guffey	Moore	Vandenberg
Burke	Hale	Murphy	Van Nuys
Byrd	Harrison	Murray	Wagner
Byrnes	Hatch	Neely	Walsh
Capper	Hayden	Norbeck	Wheeler
Caraway	Holt	Norris	White
Carey	Johnson	Overton

Mr. LEWIS. I reannounce the absences of certain Senators and the reason therefor as given by me upon a previous roll call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The President's message will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the message, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

In my Budget message of January 3, 1936, I reserved making a recommendation for an appropriation for the relief of unemployment, stating that an estimate and recommendation could be better made at a later date. I am now prepared to submit such a recommendation, and this message should be regarded as supplemental to the Budget message.

In asking the Congress for an appropriation to meet the needs of the destitute unemployed during the coming fiscal year, certain facts should be clearly set forth:

First. Since the spring of 1933 there has been a gain in re-employment in each successive year. At least 5,000,000 more people were at work in December 1935 than in March 1933.

Second. In spite of these great gains, there are at present approximately 5,300,000 families and unattached persons who are in need of some form of public assistance—3,800,000 families and unattached persons on the works program and 1,500,000 on local and State relief rolls. Every thinking person knows that this problem of unemployment is the most difficult one before the country.

Third. These figures, large as they are, do not, of course, include all those who seek work in the United States. In none of these figures is included the many unemployed who are not on relief but who are experiencing great difficulties in maintaining independent support. Neither are there included many others not on the relief rolls who are content with occasional employment; nor some who are so constituted that they do not desire to work; nor many young people who cannot get work and are obliged to share the livelihood earned by their parents. Because of the impossibility of an exact definition of what constitutes unemployment, no figures which purport to estimate the total unemployed in the Nation can be even approximately accurate.

Fourth. Nearly all the 1,500,000 unemployable families or unemployable unattached persons are being cared for almost wholly from State or local funds. A very small number of these families or individuals have begun to receive a comparatively small amount of Federal aid under the provisions of the Social Security Act.

The foregoing figures indicate the problem before us. It is a problem to be faced not merely by the Congress and the Executive, not merely by the representatives of government in the States and localities, but by all of the American people. It is not exclusively the problem of the poor and the unfortunate themselves. It is more particularly the problem of those who have been more fortunate under our system of government and our economy.

It will not do to say that these needy unemployed must or should shift for themselves. It will not be good for any of us to take that attitude. Neither will it do to say that it is a problem for the States and the localities. If we concede that it is primarily the duty of each locality to care for its destitute unemployed, and that if its resources are inadequate, it must then turn to the State for help, we must still face the fact that the credit and the resources of local governments and States have been freely drawn upon in the last few years and they have not been sufficient.

It has been said by persons ignorant or careless of the truth that Federal relief measures have encouraged States, counties, and municipalities to shirk their duty and shift their financial responsibilities to the Federal Government. The fact is that during 1935 State and local governments spent $466,000,000 for emergency relief, which was 13 percent more than these governmental bodies spent in 1934, 49 percent more than they spent in 1933, and 58 percent more than they spent in 1932. Let it also be noted that the great majority of State and local governments are today taking care not only of the 1,500,000 unemployables, but are also contributing large amounts to the Federal works program.

To expect that States and municipalities should at the present time bear a vastly increased proportion of the cost of relief is to ignore the fact that there are State constitutional limitations, and the fact that most of our counties and municipalities are only now emerging from tax delinquency difficulties. Let us further remember that by far the largest part of local taxes is levied on real estate. To increase this form of tax burden on the small property owners of the Nation would be unjustified. It is true that some States, fortunately few, have taken an undue advantage of Federal appropriations, but most States have cooperated wholeheartedly in raising relief funds, even to the extent of amending State constitutions. It is not desired in the next fiscal year to encourage any States to continue to shirk. The Federal Government cannot maintain relief for unemployables in any State.

The Federal Government, then, faces the responsibility of continuing to provide work for the needy unemployed who cannot be taken care of by State and local funds.

During the current fiscal year the cost of relief actually paid out of the Treasury will amount to approximately $3,500,000,000.

During the next fiscal year, 1937, more than $1,000,000,000 will be spent out of the Treasury from prior year appropriations. Practically all of these expenditures will be from allocations made to large projects which could not possibly be completed within this fiscal year. In addition to this amount, the Budget contains estimated expenditures aggregating $600,000,000 from appropriations recommended for the Civilian Conservation Corps and various public works.

If to this total of $1,600,000,000 there were added $2,000,000,000 to be expended for relief in the fiscal year 1937, the total for this purpose would just about equal the amount that is being now expended in the fiscal year 1936. An appropriation in this amount would be within the limit set by the Budget message and would in effect provide for the third successive year a reduction in the deficit.

This statement as to the Budget program, of course, depends upon the action of the Congress with respect to the substitute taxes, the reimbursement taxes, and the new taxes which I have recommended to replace the lost revenues and to supply the new revenue made necessary by the decision of the Supreme Court invalidating the Agricultural Adjustment Act and by the action of the Congress in appropriating for the immediate payment at the 1945 value of the veterans' adjusted-service certificates. This latter action, as you will recall, requires additional revenue in the amount of $120,000,000 annually for 9 years. The agricultural program requires annual substitute taxes of $500,000,000, and there must be raised within the next 3 years $517,000,000 of revenue to reimburse the Treasury for processing taxes lost in this fiscal year by reason of the Supreme Court's decision.

I am, however, not asking this Congress to appropriate $2,000,000,000.

I am asking only for an appropriation of $1,500,000,000 to the Works Progress Administration. It will be their responsibility to provide work for the destitute unemployed. This request, together with those previously submitted to the Congress to provide for the Civilian Conservation Corps and certain public works, will, if acted upon favorably by the Congress, give security during the next fiscal year to those most in need, on condition, however, that private employers hire many of those now on relief rolls.

The trend of reemployment is upward. But this trend, at its present rate of progress, is inadequate. I propose, therefore, that we ask private business to extend its operations so as to absorb an increasing number of the unemployed.

Frankly, there is little evidence that large and small employers by individual and uncoordinated action can absorb large numbers of new employees. A vigorous effort on a national scale is necessary by voluntary, concerted action of private industry.

Under the National Recovery Administration, the Nation learned the value of shorter hours in their application to a whole industry. In almost every case the shorter hours were approved by the great majority of individual operators within the industry. To the Federal Government was given the task of policing against the minority, who came to be known as "chiselers." It was clear that "chiseling" by a few would undermine and eventually destroy the large, honest majority. But the public authority to require the shorter hours agreed upon has been seriously curtailed by limitations recently imposed by the Supreme Court upon Federal as well as State powers.

Nevertheless, while the provisions of the antitrust laws, intended to prohibit restraint of trade, must and shall be fully and vigorously enforced, there is nothing in these or any other laws which would prohibit managers of private business from working together to increase production and employment. Such efforts would, indeed, be the direct opposite of a conspiracy in restraint of trade. Many private employers believe that if left to themselves they can accomplish the objectives we all seek.

We have learned the difficulties of attempting to reduce hours of work in all trades and industries to a common level or to increase all wage payments at a uniform rate. But in any single industry we have found that it is possible by united action to shorten hours, increase employment, and, at the same time, maintain weekly, monthly, or yearly earnings of the individual. It is my belief that if the leaders in each industry will organize a common effort to increase employment within that industry, employment will increase substantially.

Insofar as their efforts are successful, the cost to the Federal Government of caring for the destitute unemployed will be lessened, and, if the employment gains are substantial enough, no additional appropriation by the next Congress for the fiscal year 1937 will be necessary.

The ultimate cost of the Federal works program will thus be determined by private enterprise. Federal assistance, which arose as a result of industrial disemployment, can be terminated if industry itself removes the underlying conditions. Should industry cooperatively achieve the goal of reemployment, the appropriation of $1,500,000,000, together with the unexpended balances of previous appropriations, will suffice to carry the Federal works program through the fiscal year 1937. Only if industry fails to reduce substantially the number of those now out of work will another appropriation and further plans and policies be necessary.

It is the task of industry to make further efforts toward increased output and employment; and I urge industry to accept this responsibility. I present this problem and this opportunity definitely to the managers of private business; and I offer in aid of its solution the cooperation of all the appropriate departments and agencies of the Federal Government.

My appeal is to the thinking men who are assured of their daily bread. However we may divide along the lines of economic or political faith, all right-minded Americans have a common stake in extending production, in increasing employment, and in getting away from the burdens of relief.

Those who believe that Government may be compelled to assume greater responsibilities in the operation of our industrial system can make no valid objection to a renewed effort on the part of private enterprise to insure a livelihood to all willing workers. Those, on the other hand, who believe in complete freedom of private control without any Government participation should earnestly undertake to demonstrate their effectiveness by increasing employment.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 18, 1936.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message will be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11035) making appropriations for the military and non-military activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the pending amendment, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the courses for which funds are hereby appropriated shall be elective unless required by the administrative officers responsible for the government of the institution where the Reserve Officers' Training Corps is established.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I think the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is infinitely preferable to the original amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER].

I do not know any subject pending before the Congress of the United States at the present time about which there has been more misunderstanding, and I may say more misinformation, than has been disseminated in the attacks which are made on the R. O. T. C. units in the various colleges and schools of this Nation.

A carefully studied effort apparently has been made to create in the minds of the American people the impression that there is some act of Congress or some requirement of the War Department or some action on the part of the Federal Government making this course of training compulsory upon the young manhood of this country in the high schools and in the colleges.

There is absolutely no line of any Federal statute making military training compulsory in any educational institution of this country. There is no limitation or condition on the appropriation or allocation of any Federal grant to any school that is contingent upon compulsory military training in any of the institutions which receive these Federal funds.

The issue here, as I see it, as presented by the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] is very simple.

Under the Morrill Act it is necessary that the so-called land-grant colleges shall maintain a course in military science. There is absolutely no provision that this course of military science shall be compulsory, or that any institution shall require all the students to take the course. That is a matter which is wholly within the hands of the local governing body of each institution, whether it be a land-grant college or whether it be a high school, such as those to which the Senator from North Dakota has referred.

I have no objection to any Senator or any other individual going before the various boards of trustees or boards of regents that control educational institutions in the United States and urging that military training in those institutions be elective. I do object to the Congress of the United States invading the campuses of this country and telling the various boards of trustees and boards of regents what they can or cannot prescribe as courses of study and instruction in those institutions.

The University of Georgia, located in my State, the oldest chartered State university in the United States, has for a great number of years had a cadet corps and has required that every student in the University of Georgia, taking certain courses, shall be a member of the corps of cadets. Why should we here, by legislative enactment, say to the regents of the university system of Georgia, "We take from your control the rules and regulations that shall govern that institution", merely because someone has raised some false scare here in regard to compulsory military training and conscription of the youth of this country?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. FRAZIER. I understand that the high school at Athens, Ga., also requires military training as a part of its curriculum.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should not be at all surprised. I am glad I come from a section of the United States where the uniform of the soldier of this Republic is not looked on with disdain, and where the men and women who control the schools and colleges of that section hold to the conviction that some slight training in the military arts is no disgrace to any young man. The people of my State still have a spirit of reverence for the flag and our institutions.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BENSON. Equally I desire to say that I am very proud to be here in the United States Senate, coming from a State where we do not feel that compulsory military training is a prerequisite to an American education, and where young men are not required to take 2 years of military training in order to attend a State university where they may obtain free education in a free country.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have absolutely no quarrel with the Senator from Minnesota on that score. I should not undertake to secure any action by Congress, nor should I vote for any measure, that would require the authorities of the University of Minnesota to take any action in regard to this matter they did not deem meet and proper. I merely ask that the Senator from Minnesota be as liberal as I am and not undertake to dictate to the boards of regents of my State as to what shall or shall not be required in the educational institutions of my State.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BENSON. I wish to say that for all practical purposes since 1862 the people in all the States of this country have been laboring under the impression that military training was compulsory in land-grant colleges, because high-ranking officers of the United States Army have paraded over the country and have made the people believe that military training was compulsory in these schools; otherwise, they would not have it. The Senator may be very sure of that.

Mr. RUSSELL. I hope and trust that the Senator from Minnesota will not attempt to place on my shoulders responsibility for all of the ignorance and all of the misunderstanding of the people of the United States in regard to the laws of the United States. The laws appear in the statutes of the United States and are available to anyone who desires to read them. It is amazing that people could have been kept in ignorance of the truth from 1862 to the present time in regard to the Morrill Act.

Mr. FRAZIER. One of the purposes of the amendment is to make military training optional. I want to make it optional.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is to wipe out the autonomy that is vested in the board of trustees of every institution of education in this country at the present time. It can have no other object nor can it have any other effect.

We have gone a long way here in wiping out State lines under the stress of a great emergency. Some of the legislation having that tendency I have supported, but I say that it is going altogether too far when there is an attempt to have the Congress of the United States prescribe what shall or shall not be taught in any educational institution in this country.

Talk to me about conscription, talk about regimentation and "goose-stepping!" What is being prescribed here, if we adopt this amendment, but regimenting and conscripting all of the institutions of this country by a Federal power attempting to tell them what they shall or shall not do?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I think the Senator from Georgia is laboring under a misapprehension. All my amendment requires is that none of the money shall be used in a school or college where there is compulsory military training.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understand the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. FRAZIER. If a school or college wanted the money from the War Department, it could not continue compulsory military training.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from North Dakota can do as he chooses in his State in regard to compulsory military training and still secure the Federal funds provided under the Morrill Act, but, not content with that, he wishes to have Congress go to all the States and say to them, "We will take these funds away from you unless you follow the edicts of the Congress in regard to matters which should be peculiarly sacred to the campuses of the various educational institutions."

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I have no quarrel with the Senator from Georgia. If he believes in "Prussianizing" our public schools, high schools, and colleges, compelling military training, all well and good; but I cannot agree with him.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from North Dakota always falls back to statements about "Prussianizing." What I am seeking to do is to avoid "Prussianizing" and regimenting the schools. Leave this matter where it belongs, in the hands of the various boards of trustees of the educational institutions of this country, and do not seek to "Prussianize" and regiment from Washington by telling the trustees of every institution what may or may not be taught in the institution.

The Senator from North Dakota has read some statements which he says were made by individual students in regard to joining these R. O. T. C. units, and he says that one after another indicates that everyone is opposed to these R. O. T. C. units and any compulsion.

Mr. President, at the present time there are pending in the War Department of the United States, 51 applications from these "poor, oppressed" high schools and colleges to which the Senator makes such touching reference, asking that the Government of the United States reach out and give them the benefits of the R. O. T. C.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I should like to ask the Senator why these poor high schools are asking for R. O. T. C. units.

Mr. RUSSELL. Because they believe that they are very beneficial to the students of their institutions.

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, no. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. RUSSELL. I will yield, but I should like to proceed with my statement.

Mr. FRAZIER. There are many high schools and colleges at the present time which are having a very hard time getting money with which to continue, and they are asking for R. O. T. C. money in order to help them maintain their schools.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is the conclusion reached by the Senator from North Dakota. I might say that the high school units do not receive any funds from the Federal Government. They get their equipment, but the students are not paid a dime. That applies only to the senior units in the colleges.

Mr. FRAZIER. General Conley, the Acting Adjutant General of the Army, told me this morning over the telephone that 41 high schools are considered as junior units, and require military training, and officers are assigned to them just as is done at the universities.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am speaking of the difference in what the students receive. The high-school student receives nothing from the Government.

Mr. FRAZIER. The school receives it.

Mr. RUSSELL. It receives nothing on earth except instruction in military training, the equipment used in drill, and the uniforms of the students in school.

Mr. FRAZIER. That part of it is correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from North Dakota will concede that there is no compulsion anywhere on any board of trustees of a high school to come in and ask for the benefits of these R. O. T. C. units.

Mr. FRAZIER. Of course, no compulsion, but if the Government furnishes an instructor in military tactics, he takes the place of an instructor in a gymnasium, or some other physical training.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator from North Dakota will think of the fallacy of his last statement after he takes his seat, I am sure he will withdraw it, because the school does not ask for any instructor to take the place of another in military training. The training and the benefits from the course of instruction provided by the War Department is what these 51 institutions are seeking. No compulsion forces them to Washington to petition for these units in their respective schools.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I should like to know whether the Senator from Georgia or any other Senator knows whether or not the legislatures of any of the States have prescribed compulsory military training in their agricultural colleges.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am not advised on that point; but if the legislature of any State has prescribed compulsory military training in any one of these agricultural schools, the proper method of correcting that is to go back to the legislature of the State and have the law repealed.

Mr. PITTMAN. What I desired to suggest to the Senator was that the State has jurisdiction over the subject, and if the State, by an appropriation act or otherwise, has made military training compulsory, then the law could not be changed until the legislature met; and the adoption of the pending amendment would prevent the use of the money.

Mr. FRAZIER and Mr. BENSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield first to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. FRAZIER. In reply to the question of the Senator from Nevada, let me say that, so far as I know there is no

State legislature which makes a course in military tactics in the land-grant colleges compulsory. The State Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, however, passed a law providing that there should be no compulsory military training in the schools of that State.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have not had occasion to look into the matter, but if the legislature of my State has passed a law requiring universal military training, I should dislike very much to have the schools of the State deprived of the money they might receive under this appropriation pending the time the legislature may meet and change the law. I am very much in favor of the elective system.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me now?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BENSON. I may answer the Senator from Nevada in this way: In Minnesota for many years we did have compulsory military training. In attempting to change to an elective system we met with tremendous opposition from the United States Government, through high-ranking officers of the United States Army. They paraded all over the State and made public speeches, and arranged that information should be printed in our daily newspapers which carried the inference, at least, that should Minnesota decide not to have compulsory military training in its university it would no longer receive this Federal aid. For that reason, if for no other, it seems to me the pending amendment should be enacted into law, in order to make it very definite that military training shall be elective.

Mr. RUSSELL. I presume the Senator has not heard read by the clerk the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. BENSON. No; I have not.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I think it would be very much better to have Congress pass a resolution stating that the military training course is elective, and not compulsory.

Mr. RUSSELL. That would place us in the very anomalous position of passing a resolution declaring again what the law of the land already provides.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BENSON. If the Senator from Nevada will take into consideration the fact that since 1862 Army officers have been parading over the country, and that other Federal officials have been doing likewise, and sending out information in an effort to convince the people that military training is compulsory, he will appreciate what a difficult position he will find himself in if he tries to change that situation today.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will pardon me, I have no doubt that that is the general impression with regard to the law, and I have no doubt that a great many have been actuated, in requiring compulsory military education in the colleges, by that belief; but I am satisfied that if they are convinced that that is not necessary, the people themselves, having a majority in the State, will influence the trustees of the university, or, if not, the legislature, to change the system. I fear we may find States which, through their legislatures, have acted on this matter, believing that they had to have compulsory military training, and, of course, it would require a legislative act to change the law. I entertain the hope that they will not be deprived of some share of the appropriation by reason of that condition.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, in this country the officers of the Army or the officials of the War Department do not make the laws, and any statement of an officer of the Army as to what the law might be does not have any force whatever. The Congress of the United States and the legislatures of the various States still make the laws, and certainly because some officer of the Army has made some misleading statement somewhere as to what an act provided should not be urged as an argument for this drastic, far-reaching invasion of every campus in the United States where there is an R. O. T. C. unit. Under no circumstances can such an argument be justified.

The Morrill Act has been on the statute books of the United States since 1862, and I venture to say that there is no city or town or community in the United States where there is not some book which contains that statute, and certainly the States which desire to retain this feature in their educational system should not be penalized or punished because of some irresponsible officer of the Army who has gone around making statements which were at variance with the law as enacted by the Congress.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it not true that under this amendment North Dakota would get the money for aid under an elective system, but my State, which has a military college in which every student is supposed to take military training, would not get a cent?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Texas is eminently correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. What business is it of the Senate to dictate to these colleges? Why not let each State have aid, if it has a military school in which military training is compulsory? It is the State's business and not ours. Furthermore, in a boys' school, where the students live in barracks, it would be impractical to have half of them under military discipline and the other half walking around as untrained rookies.

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not take exception to such training in strictly military schools.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator is sincere, why not prescribe military training in all the schools? Why provide that the university does not have to have it, when the military school which may be across the street is obliged to have such training. Why make fish of one and fowl of the other?

Mr. FRAZIER. A private military school, of course, is obliged to have such training.

Mr. CONNALLY. Or a State institution.

Mr. FRAZIER. Or a State institution. I have no objection if the boy wants to take military training.

Mr. CONNALLY. Students do not have to go to a school providing military training if they do not want to do so.

Mr. FRAZIER. Of course, they can stay at home and not go to school at all.

Mr. CONNALLY. They can go to schools in North Dakota.

Mr. FRAZIER. In North Dakota we have two State institutions, both of which give a college course, both are land-grant colleges, and both require military training.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is fine.

Mr. FRAZIER. The boys cannot go to other States. They do not have the money to attend schools in other States.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not think my university has military training at all.

Mr. FRAZIER. Is the Senator's university a land-grant college?

Mr. CONNALLY. No. We pay for it ourselves.

Mr. FRAZIER. There is a land-grant college in Texas?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes. The Agricultural and Mechanical College is strictly military. Everyone who goes there ought to take military training. Why spend money on military training at all if we are not going to train the students to fight if necessary? There is not a Senator on the floor more devoted to peace than is the Senator from Texas, but I do not think it is a crime to train young Americans to bear arms, because in the present disturbed state of the world we never know when we are going to have to fight. I am not in favor of saying it is a crime to train a young man to be a soldier if he has to be one, because if he is trained he will be a good one, and it is to his own advantage and benefit that he be trained.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BENSON. I think the Senator from Texas has answered the question. If we want to train soldiers, let us train them in military schools and not force military training upon them in our State universities and land-grant colleges.

Mr. CONNALLY. We are not forcing it upon them. We are letting each State institution decide for itself. The Senator from Minnesota wants to say whether or not colleges in my State shall have military training.

Mr. BENSON. No; because in Texas you have a military college, and the proposed amendment does not affect such colleges.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; but we also have other colleges.

Mr. BENSON. The Senator does not answer the question.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. DUFFY. The Senator from Georgia touched on a point a few minutes ago as to which I should like to have a little further information. I recall last year when this amendment was offered, and was defeated, that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] made the same argument that I heard him make this morning, which is that in the high schools that have military training they have it not because they want military training but because there is some financial advantage if a training unit is installed. If I understood what the Senator from Georgia said a little while ago, there is absolutely no financial advantage which goes to high schools by having such units installed. Merely equipment and an instructor are furnished, but that does not help them financially in any way. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. RUSSELL. The only financial advantage that a high-school student or that the school itself could possibly secure from one of these R. O. T. C. units is the uniform which is furnished to the student. The school does not receive 1 dime in cash. There is absolutely no penalty on earth that could be inflicted on any school for not having any compulsory training in the high school. It has the training merely because the board of trustees of that institution wishes to have that form of training.

As I pointed out, Mr. President, there are now 51 additional institutions which are down at the War Department today asking to be allowed to secure the great benefits of having one of these institutions to build up young men physically and spiritually and morally through the course of training that is prescribed by these R. O. T. C. units. There can be no element of compulsion in any high-school unit unless it is prescribed by the local board of trustees, because the Government only grants them an officer to train the youth, the uniforms that the boys wear, and the equipment necessary for the cadet corps.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. President, I presume the spiritual training to which the Senator refers comes from the bayonet practice the boys get at the schools.

Mr. RUSSELL. There have been times in the history of this Republic when knowledge of military science, of how to use a bayonet in the hands of the American soldier, was very, very important to the preservation of this Nation and to its welfare. Every citizen enjoys as his most sacred possession rights and liberties which were won at the point of the bayonet. I pray we may never have another war, but the time may come when knowing how to use a bayonet will be most important.

Mr. President, I do not seek to militarize the youth of this Nation. I would not for one second tolerate the support of any such system of compulsory military training as is in vogue and effect in the nations of Europe today. I do say that we are going too far in the Congress if we seek to tell individual governing bodies of the schools of this country what they may or may not do on their respective campuses, and that is the issue which is involved in this amendment. There is no question of militarization, there is no question of compulsion, except that prescribed locally by those having jurisdiction.

Let those Senators interested in this subject go back to their respective States or to their respective boards of trustees and have these compulsory restrictions changed. I do not object to that. I do object to their coming into my State and telling my board of regents what they can prescribe as a course of study in the University of Georgia, or coming to the fine little city in which I live, a town of 3,500 people, and telling my board of trustees what they can or cannot do with the course of study of the high-school students of that city. That is the thing I object to.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota. He has been very generous in yielding to me.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Congress, of course, is responsible for the money it appropriates, and the money that goes to these schools because of R. O. T. C. units is supposed to be for the purpose of training Reserve officers for the Army.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is not true of the high-school units, because the students are not commissioned out of the high schools. They merely afford a form of healthful exercise and education to the youth of the high school.

Mr. FRAZIER. It is along that same line, however. It is called the R. O. T. C., Jr. It costs more, according to the figures I have given—and I think the statement can be borne out by any figures Senators may find—to train boys for the Reserve officers in the schools where the training is compulsory than it does in the schools where it is elective. It is naturally so, because there are some boys who would not take the course if it were not required. The Government has to pay for that. We are responsible for these appropriations, and it seems to me we ought to be interested in cutting down the appropriation as much as possible.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I regret that I cannot accept at full value all of the statements and figures offered by the Senator from North Dakota in regard to this specific subject. The Senator from North Dakota has spoken about the fact that there was a great wave of sentiment that has swept this country, condemning the R. O. T. C. courses in the high schools, and quoted from letters from young men who pointed out horrible instances of "conscription of youth." That, of course, is ridiculous on its face, because there is nothing to compel the young men to go to such schools.

I desire to give Senators some figures which have been gathered from those who have had R. O. T. C. training in this country. These are not figures which emanate from the War Department that is referred to here today as some horrible overshadowing power that is forcing a military system on the people of the United States. These were figures gathered by the Office of Education in the United States Department of the Interior. This Bureau sent out 16,000 inquiries to young men who had graduated between the years of 1920 and 1930, from institutions that had these R. O. T. C. units. They received a phenomenally large number of replies to a voluntary communication. Out of 16,000 letters they received 10,136 replies from men who had graduated from these colleges. Here are some of the questions that were asked:

1. In your opinion, has the R. O. T. C. military course of study a definite educational value of its own?

In response to that question addressed to 10,000 men who had graduated from these institutions, 97.1 percent answered "yes", that the course had a definite educational value, and 2.9 percent answered "no."

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I desire to call attention to the fact that the letters were sent out to those who had graduated; not to the boys who were in the schools at the present time. Quite a difference will be found between those two classes.

Mr. RUSSELL. I stated that the letter was sent out to those who had graduated. I made that statement.

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes. There is quite a difference between the two classes.

Mr. RUSSELL. The second question was:

2. Did the R. O. T. C. contribute anything important or unique to your education?

In response to that question 94.9 percent of these young men answered "yes" and 5.1 percent answered "no."

The fourth question was as follows:

From your own experience was the time you spent on the training justified by the results obtained?

Of the young men who had had military training 94.9 percent answered "yes" and 5.1 percent answered "no."

Here is a question that was addressed to men who had had this training, and who should have been able to answer it better than those who merely had a great many preconceived opinions on the subject—

7. In your opinion, does the R. O. T. C. course of instruction tend to produce a militaristic attitude inimical to world peace?

The answer to that question in the affirmative was confined to 6.4 percent, whereas 93.6 percent of those who had had the training answered no. I think that this is the most authentic poll that has ever been made on that subject.

Mr. President, I did not arise to address myself to the question as to whether or not the R. O. T. C. course in the schools and colleges was beneficial or helpful to the youth of the land. I think it is one of the finest and most praiseworthy things sponsored by the Federal Government. The question may be debatable. Many pacifists say that it is positively injurious; many of those who have studied the schools in actual operations say it is very helpful; but the poll of those who have graduated after having taken the prescribed course of study shows that by a great majority they answered that military training had contributed a great deal to their college education after having experienced it first hand.

I wish merely to point out further one additional fact, namely, that while taking military training in land-grant schools and colleges the students receive 25 cents a day subsistence and receive a new uniform every 2 years. In many of the wealthier States perhaps $71.25 a year may appear very insignificant to those who know something of expensive college education, but there are sections of the country, Mr. President, where $71.25 means the difference between a young man's being able to attend college and his inability to equip himself for the battles of life. This is a real item to be considered in our examination of this subject, because the funds thus made available are very helpful in keeping in college many poor boys who could not afford an education without the benefit of this small amount.

I do not desire to attempt to dictate as to what is to be done in any other State, though I believe, heart and soul, in the benefits to be derived from R. O. T. C. training. I would not here support any bill that would write into the Federal law the slightest element of compulsion on any campus anywhere. I do, however, object as strenuously as I can, with every power of my being, to the Senate of the United States writing into this bill a provision that will invade the precincts of the campuses in my State and wipe out the autonomy of the governing bodies of the University of Georgia and other institutions that desire to have military training. There may be States which have legislative enactments requiring a course in military training to be compulsory in the State schools. It is my view that those who are interested should go back to such States, to their State legislatures, and have the State law repealed if they object to it; but, without regard to that, a State that should find itself in that situation, with a statute requiring military training in their land-grant college, would find, if we adopted the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, that the Federal appropriation was cut off under the Morrill Act unless the Governor were to call an extra session to repeal the law.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FRAZIER. Under the Morrill Act, as I understand, land-grant colleges are put on the list to receive this aid from the War Department.

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course.

Mr. FRAZIER. As I understand, they would not be cut off even if the amendment were adopted. All the amendment would do would be to require that the course in military training shall not be compulsory.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator from North Dakota will think for a minute, he will appreciate that his amendment provides that if the military-training course in a college is compulsory such college will not receive a dime of the funds under the Morrill Act. Is not that correct? If there is an act of the legislature in some State making military training a compulsory course in the college, by the adoption of the pending amendment the State would be automatically cut off from participation in the funds appropriated under the Morrill Act, when the question of the course of education is a matter with which we here have nothing to do. I am in favor of the Federal Government's supporting education in this country, but I do not think the Congress should attempt to legislate for the conduct of every high school and college in the land. If we go this far in this movement, there may be raised a real specter of intolerance. We hear much about the insidious forces that are at work. If we go this far, and strike down the autonomy of all local school districts and of all local boards of regents and boards of trustees that are charged with the first responsibility for the administration of these institutions, we can go further and write into the law that this or that or the other subject shall be taught or not taught or the school will be deprived of their Federal funds.

Mr. ADAMS and Mr. FRAZIER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield first to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. Would not the effect of this amendment, if adopted, be to offer a premium to those schools which do not give military training?

Mr. RUSSELL. In one way it would have that effect, in my opinion.

Mr. ADAMS. Would the college which gave no military instruction share in the fund?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; it would not.

Mr. ADAMS. If a school or college makes military training compulsory—and it is information I am seeking—it will not, if this amendment shall be adopted, share in the funds provided?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Colorado is correct.

Mr. ADAMS. Therefore the effect of the amendment is, by offering a reward, to strike down military training in all schools where it is compulsory?

Mr. RUSSELL. I might say to the Senator from Colorado that I think the amendment is unquestionably a step in that direction.

As I have said, Mr. President, I merely plead with the Senate to leave control of these matters where it properly belongs, in the local governing bodies of the educational institutions. We are doing a dangerous thing when we undertake by congressional action to dictate what shall be the course of study prescribed anywhere. Merely because we are dealing with a military matter today is no assurance that we will be confined to a military matter in the future.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator from Georgia has raised a hypothetical case, if the State legislature has passed legislation in regard to compulsory military training. So far as I know—and I think I am very safe in saying—no legislature has passed any such act.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does the Senator from North Dakota make that statement on his responsibility as a Senator—that no State has such a statute?

Mr. FRAZIER. So far as I know—and I have been in this fight for a number of years—the question was never raised until the Wisconsin State Legislature passed the act providing that compulsory military training would not be allowed in the State institutions.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the individual State so desires, no one could properly have objection to any State passing such an act. Neither would objection to any board of regents or any board of trustees anywhere prescribing that any course in an educational institution shall be optional instead of compulsory be tenable. I do, however, think that the Congress would go entirely too far were it to attempt to legislate on this subject and tell local governing bodies what they might or might not do.

Mr. AUSTIN obtained the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. AUSTIN. I will yield to the Senator from Nebraska if he desires me to do so.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no desire to proceed now. I will wait until the Senator shall have concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, it is my impression that the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is inconsistent with the Morrill Act, the act of 1862, the act of 1920, and the act of 1926.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I was not aware of a pending substitute. Has it been printed?

Mr. AUSTIN. I understand that the amendment in the nature of a substitute has just been presented and is on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, if I may do so at this time, I desire to raise a point of order against the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah as being new legislation offered to the pending appropriation bill. The amendment, as I see it, if adopted, would do no good anyway, because it would simply leave the situation in status quo. If my amendment should not be adopted, of course the situation would be just the same as it would be if the proposed substitute were adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield for the purpose of enabling the Senator from North Dakota to make the point of order?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. FRAZIER. I make the point of order on the ground stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] is in the nature of a limitation on the expenditure of funds, while the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is clearly legislation and prohibited by rule XVI of the Senate Rules. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, at this juncture I wish to call attention to a brief legislative history of the Morrill Act as bearing upon the question whether there is a condition attached to the grant that would be violated by the adoption of the pending amendment. I will try to be brief.

Mr. Morrill commenced his efforts to secure this legislation in 1857, introducing in the other House the land-grant college bill. That bill was adversely reported in 1858. It made no mention of military training. In December 1861, persisting in his efforts, Mr. Morrill introduced a second bill of the same character and to the same effect, except that, after specifying the leading objects of the bill, these words were added:

Without excluding military training.

In May 1862, Senator Benjamin F. Wade, of Ohio, introduced a similar bill in the Senate, which made the language concerning military training mandatory in form, reading—

And including military training.

That phrase remained in the bill as it was finally enacted and approved. I read from section 4 of the Morrill Act:

That all moneys derived from the sale of the lands aforesaid by the States to which lands are apportioned, and from the sales of land scrip hereinbefore provided for, shall be invested in stocks of the United States or of the States, or some other safe stocks; or the same may be invested by the States having no State stocks in any other manner after the legislatures of such States shall have assented thereto, and engaged that such funds shall yield not less than 5 percent upon the amount so invested and that the principal thereof shall forever remain unimpaired: Provided, That the moneys so invested or loaned shall constitute a perpetual fund, the capital of which shall remain forever undiminished (except so far as may be provided in section 5 of this act), and the interest of which shall be inviolably appropriated, by each State which may take and claim the benefit of this act, to the enjoyment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions of life.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the grant of land and land scrip hereby authorized shall be made on the following conditions, to which, as well as to the conditions hereinbefore contained, the previous assent of the several States shall be signified by legislative acts.

There is more in section 5 which I omit, but I come directly to the paragraph marked "Third" in that section and read as follows:

Third. Any State which may take and claim the benefits of the provisions of this act shall provide, within 5 years, at least not less than one college, as described in the fourth section of this act, or the grant to such State shall cease; and said State shall be bound to pay the United States the amount received of any lands previously sold, and that the title to purchasers under the State shall be valid.

Thus we see what appears on its face to be a grant clogged with a condition and a forfeiture in the event of breach of the condition. That condition is that there shall be maintained at least one institution in the State in which a course is taught whose principal object is the teaching of agriculture, the mechanic arts, and military tactics.

That act had legislative construction by the shifting of phrasing in 1916. The Congress, dealing with the subject of the military institution in contemplation of the Great War, enacted the following section relative to the Reserve Officers' Training Corps. I read a section which was enacted June 3, 1916, and reenacted June 4, 1920, with some slight changes in it. It is found in Thirty-ninth Statutes, page 191; Forty-first Statutes, page 776. The edition from which I am reading, however, is the United States Code, title 10, section 381. This section represents both of those enactments of 1916 and 1920, and reads as follows:

Establishment of training corps: The President is authorized to establish and maintain in civil educational institutions a Reserve Officers' Training Corps, one or more units in number, which shall consist of a senior division organized at universities and colleges granting degrees, including State universities and those State institutions that are required to provide instruction in military tactics under the act of Congress donating lands for the establishment of colleges where the leading objects shall be practical instruction in agriculture and the mechanic arts, including military tactics.

I discontinue reading from the section because the remainder of it would rather confuse than bring out in bold relief the point for which I have read this part of the section, which is that the words "including military tactics" occupy a different position in this section than they do in the original Morrill Act. Senators may have observed the peculiar relationship of those words to the rest of the section which might possibly justify a confusion. I read them as they appear there:

Where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts.

The claim which I make is that those two acts of Congress, passed long years after 1862, one of them during the period of the World War, the other after the World War was over, and when we were considering the establishment of military education with reference to a peacetime situation, are legislative construction of the Morrill Act showing that the condition of the grant of these funds to the several States was for the maintenance of colleges where the leading object should be practical instruction in agriculture and the mechanic arts, including military tactics.

That is not the end of the legislative story. There is another act of Congress dealing with and repeating the same words which occurred in section 4 of the Morrill Act as originally enacted. I turn now to United States Code, title 7, section 304, relating to agriculture, and read only that part of the section which relates to this condition.

The remainder of the section appears to me to be identical with the original act save only with respect to the rate of interest which was required to be guaranteed by the States on the advances, the rate in the original act being 5 percent and the rate established by the act of 1926 being a fair and reasonable rate of return instead of 5 percent. In all other respects Congress reenacted section 4 of the Morrill Act in haec verba, which signifies the understanding of Congress that the grant was made upon a condition that the States must follow inviolably.

So when we approach an amendment of the law, especially when we approach an amendment of an appropriation act such as the one now pending, it seems to me we are not dealing with the subject as we ought to do if our purpose is to change the relationship between the Federal Government and the several States in respect to these contracts.

I read from section 304 of title 7, United States Code:

Provided, That the moneys so invested or loaned shall constitute a perpetual fund, the capital of which shall remain forever undiminished (except so far as may be provided in section 305 of this chapter), and the interest of which shall be inviolably appropriated, by each State which may take and claim the benefit of sections 301 to 308, inclusive, of this chapter to the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading object shall be without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts.

Now, Mr. President, I conclude. I do not intend to repeat what I said yesterday, my purpose being only to get in the RECORD, while we are still discussing the matter, this fragment of the history of this legislation, because I think it is pertinent to the question of the policy to be adopted by Congress at this time.

If we have the objective of changing the relationship between the Federal Government and the several States, if our purpose is to remove the condition of the grants, if we are to assume that we are the sole persons interested in the conditions prescribed and that we have the right at any time to change those conditions, cancel them, waive them, do what we please with them, the point I make is that we should not do it upon an amendment to an appropriation bill, brought to the floor of the Senate without any consideration by a standing committee, without any study, without any record back of it. It is a subject of sufficiently great importance to be entitled to careful thought before we undertake to make such a complete change in our policy.

Therefore, I am opposed to the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish briefly to discuss this amendment from a somewhat different viewpoint than has been taken by most, if not all, of the Senators who have discussed it. Before doing so, however, I wish to refer to what the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] has just said in giving his idea of the Federal law which exists, and which governs these schools.

As I understand, the Senator from Vermont takes the position, that, taking all these statutes together, we must draw the conclusion that it was not the intention of Congress in any of these acts to give any of this money to land-grant colleges unless they did provide for a compulsory military-training course.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I fear there might be a misunderstanding if that statement should stand just exactly as made by the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I shall be glad to have the Senator correct me if that is not correct.

Mr. AUSTIN. The word "compulsory", as used by the Senator from Nebraska, I believe refers to the obligation which the university places upon all its male students to take this subject.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no; I do not mean that. I mean that the student, taking the course prescribed, would have to take military training as one of the subjects in order to receive the degree that would come to him upon graduation. I do not mean that everybody attending the school would have to take military training.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the Senator yield further for a clarification of my position on that point?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. My theory is that in order to be able to carry out the terms of that condition, a university must maintain at least one course which contains in it military tactics.

Mr. NORRIS. That far I do not disagree with the Senator at all; but I do disagree if we must draw the conclusion that that particular course is compulsory. This amendment, as I understand it, concedes that the school receiving these benefits must have a course that includes military training, but that no obligation rests upon the State to make this particular course compulsory.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further—

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. My theory is that it is to a certain extent compulsory, namely, to the extent that any student who seeks to get a systematic education in that course, who matriculates in the agricultural course, for example, where these studies are made prescribed studies, must submit himself to the discipline of the institution which prescribes military tactics as a part of the course in agriculture and mechanic arts; and if he starts in and fails to attend the prescribed classes, of course, he is subject to discipline, and to that extent he is under compulsion. He is under discipline.

Mr. NORRIS. I think there is really no disagreement, after all, between the position I take and the one taken by the Senator from Vermont, as I understand it; but, whatever may be the position taken by myself or by any other Senator, I think it must be conceded that the course in military training does not necessarily have to be compulsory, because two States—Wisconsin and Minnesota—where the course is not compulsory, are already receiving the benefits of this Federal fund. I assume, however, that in each one of the colleges in Wisconsin and Minnesota they have military training in the course. The student may take it or not, just as he sees fit. In other words, it is not compulsory. In all the other States which are getting this benefit from the Federal Government the course is compulsory.

One word, now, about the amendment. It may not be the right way to legislate. It is, however, a common way in Congress, sometimes the only way; and this is probably an instance in which the question can be reached by an amendment such as this is. It is not legislation. This amendment does not attempt to legislate. It is a limitation on an appropriation bill. If it undertook to legislate, it would be subject to a point of order, and would undoubtedly go out. It is a provision of law which applies only to the appropriation in this bill. It goes no further. It will not be the law at the expiration of the life of this appropriation bill, which will be 1 year from next July. It is not permanent law, and is only a limitation on an appropriation bill which Congress has the power to place upon any appropriation, whether or not it is conceded to begin with that the appropriation is perfectly legal in every respect. Congress has the right to deny the appropriation of money for any purpose it may see fit.

Now let me take up the question, as I said, from a different viewpoint than that from which most other Senators have discussed it.

As I see the matter, fundamentally we are not concerned, so far as this amendment goes, with whether military training is a good thing or a bad thing. Much time has been taken up on that phase of the matter, and I have my ideas about it just as all of us have; but, as I see the matter, whether I believe in military training or whether I do not is immaterial so far as my vote on this amendment is concerned. The effect of this amendment will be, as I see it, to extend the democratic idea to a State university and permit the students there to do as they please. Under existing law in all the States but two the students do not have the choice; they must take military training.

If we wish to be fair, it seems to me we must concede that the American people are divided upon this question of military training in the public schools. I do not know how nearly equally they are divided. I do not know which side has a majority of the people on it; but a large number of conscientious, honest citizens are on each side of that question. I think no one will dispute that fact. Those who believe in military training ought, therefore, to respect the ideas of those who do not; and the reverse should be true. Those who do not believe in military training ought to concede that those who do should have the right to be trained in these institutions according to their own ideas on the subject.

But if we want to respect the opinions of these two great masses of people for the next year, the only thing to do is to put this amendment on the bill, because as it stands now the millions of people sending their boys to these colleges and who want them trained in military tactics, and the millions of other people who are sending their boys to these public institutions who do not want their boys trained in military tactics, do not share equally. In other words, those who do not believe in military training are compelled, if they send their boys to these institutions, to have them trained in military tactics, just the opposite of what they want. We should not deny them the right to have their boys go to a State university, let us say, and either take military training or not, just as they see fit.

This amendment will enable them to take their choice in the matter. They can send their boy to a land-grant college and have him trained in military tactics or not, but if we do not adopt this amendment and they want to send their boy to the State institution, that boy must be trained in a military class and study military tactics.

To my mind, we are not now called upon to decide whether military training is advantageous or not. If we were a State legislature, passing on a question relating to our State universities, then that would be the question and the subject we would have to decide. I believe this to be true, that in practically all the States of the Union the legislatures, if they were deciding the question on its merits, would leave to the student himself as to whether he should take military training or not. As it is now, all the hundreds and thousands of students who desire to attend these institutions must either stay out of the institutions entirely or they must take military training.

I submit that is not fair; that is not democracy; that is contrary to the fundamental principle underlying all our institutions. I am not now saying anything against military training; I am not now claiming that it is not a good thing; but I am claiming that the parents of the boys who go to these schools, who have different ideas on the subject, ought to be able to say, "We want our boys trained in military tactics" or "We do not want our boys trained in military tactics. We do not want them to be driven out of the land-grant colleges, and the high schools, in some instances, simply because we have conscientious scruples against military training."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REYNOLDS in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Is it not an unusual remedy, however, for the Federal Government to go into a State or into a municipality and say, "Unless you change your law in the State, or unless your school board adopts a different rule, you will not get any of this money"?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has a right to make that claim, but I do not think it is a fair claim to make. We say by this amendment that the people who go to the schools have a right to decide whether they will take the military training or not. That is the effect of the amendment, as I see it, and I think that is a fair thing to put up to them.

Suppose we just reversed the situation, and said, "We will not give you any money unless you discard military training." I should not favor that kind of an amendment. If the people controlling the universities want to teach military tactics, I think they ought to be allowed to do so, but I think, for the same reason, that the other side, constituting perhaps one-half of the people, possibly more, possibly less, ought to have the right to refuse to take military training. I do not know how the people are divided on this question, but we all know that a very large percentage of our people are opposed to making military training compulsory in our schools.

Personally, I feel deeply on the subject. If we were passing on that question in the legislature of a State, I should be in favor of refusing to make the training compulsory. I do not mean to say that I would abolish the military training, but I would not compel a large number of people to take military training if they did not want to do so. It appears to me that is the question we are called upon to decide.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The thing which appeals to me strongly about this matter, as we have argued it, is that I would not favor compulsory military training in a high school, in a local school, where the pupil had no choice, where that was the only place where he could go. There might be large groups of families in the community which did not want their children to have military training.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly.

Mr. COPELAND. I can see that in such a case we would be party to an imposition upon the families entertaining such beliefs. But when it comes to college, that is an entirely different thing. There are so many colleges in this country that if, for any reason, a student or his family may be against military training there are plenty of other colleges where he can go.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE rose.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me answer the Senator from New York first, and then I will yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

What the Senator has said is true; if one does not want to go to the universities, he may go somewhere else. That is practically what we say to these people, "If you do not like the university which compels the students to take a course in military training, you can go to some school which does not have military training." But that is a cruel thing to do, as I see it.

I have a great pride, for instance, in my own State university. I think practically every citizen of the State in which I live has a similar pride in our university. But I would not want the law to go so far as to provide that one-half of the people of the State in which I live should not go to that school unless they would agree to take military training, and that is what we are going to do if we defeat the amendment. That will be the effect, as I see it. It is true that such a rule applied to the high schools would mean that we would say to the pupils, "If you do not like this military training, do not go to school; go somewhere else; get along without an education." I do not think we want to pass legislation of that sort.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to make one further observation, in view of the suggestion made by the Senator from New York to the effect that if a student did not desire to take military training he could go to some other college where it was not compulsory. The fact is that most of the State universities admit a resident student under a very low or nominal tuition; but if he enters as a nonresident, or goes to some privately maintained institution, he has to pay a very high tuition, and to many boys it would mean the difference between their being able to get a college education and having to forego it if they were to be compelled to choose between their State university and some other institution.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, what the Senator says is true, but that is not the only objection. A State university, existing under the laws of any State of the Union, gets its main sinews of life from taxation. To say to the taxpayers, "You cannot send your boys to the State university unless they study military tactics and take military training" is unfair. It is not just, as I see it, to the taxpayers.

As I have said before, the parents and the boys of a State have a pride in their State university. If parents want their boy to get a degree, or to be educated in the State university, if that is their choice, why should they not have that privilege, it being a school supported by taxation, by public money and public funds, and why should we say, "You cannot take advantage of your own school, built out of your own money, unless you will agree to have the boy undergo military training"?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Once more I suggest it would seem to me that we are making use of unusual power when we attempt to have the Federal Government correct an evil which the people of the State can correct. If they do not want compulsory military education in my State, or in the Senator's State, the people have the remedy; they can correct it. They can say, "We do not want compulsory military training."

Mr. NORRIS. I admit that to be true, but—and I think it is almost useless to repeat this—the truth is that a large portion of the American people, a large number of the legislatures, believe, and have believed in the years that are past, that in order to get this Federal money they must make the military training course compulsory. That is the reason I said a while ago for the RECORD while the Senator from North Dakota was speaking, that the present discussion will do a great deal of good even though the amendment shall be defeated. But if the amendment is adopted, it will show to the States that the Federal Government is not insisting upon compulsory training; that the Government is going to require of the States that they make military training elective instead of compulsory. I believe that is not an unreasonable thing to do.

CONSTITUTIONAL GUARANTIES AGAINST SEARCH AND SEIZURE

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in our Constitution there is probably no feature around which clusters more romance or the memorials of which give us more fascinating glimpses of bygone days than the fourth and fifth amendments. In all our jurisprudence there is no other principle that has been more definitely put into position or more joyously accepted by Americans than the principle of the fourth and fifth amendments. They are intimately related; each lends strength to the other and, notwithstanding their apparent nonchalance, they sustain and protect the very essence of constitutional liberty and security. They guarantee repose and the privacies of life.

These noble amendments are as follows:

ARTICLE IV

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized.

ARTICLE V

No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

A gentleman calling upon me once asked, "Did you ever read Lord Coke's famous maxim in Semayne's case?" to wit, "The house of everyone is to him as his castle and fortress, as well for his defense against injury and violence as for his repose." I said, "I am familiar with Coke, but that was law 1,000 years before my Lord Coke adorned the bench."

Before the English conquest of Britain the English people lived in a country now called Schleswig, a district in the heart of the peninsula that separates the Baltic from the northern seas.

The dwellers in this particular locality were an outlying fragment of what was called the Engle or English folk, the bulk of whom probably dwelt in what was later called Lower Hanover and Eastphalia and Westphalia. These Engles in the heart of this peninsula set up their forms of government; they met in the forests, and with their loud and guttural yeas and nays, and sometimes by clashing their spears against their shields as a substitute for a viva voce vote, they adopted their laws.

One of the principles they set into positive law and adopted before Hengist and Horsa, two of their warrior leaders, landed in Britain in A. D. 449 was the provision that a man's house was his castle, and that therein he was and ought to be secure and free from unreasonable searches and seizures. So we perceive that when the Engles migrated to Britain they took with them those English fundamentals of the liberty of the citizen or subject, and they planted them deep and strong in the island of Britain.

English history may, therefore, with some degree of accuracy be said to have begun with the landing of this war band, led by Hengist and Horsa; at least this event marks the close of Roman influence in the island of Britain and the commencement of that of the Saxons, and from the very inception of Saxon or Angle influence the domicile was secured against searches and seizures.

The years glided into the centuries, and this civil polity guaranteeing personal freedom from the encroachments of tyranny was observed by most English monarchs until King John so outraged and violated the laws of his country that there occurred his quarrel with his barons. This quarrel led to one of the most famous of all conferences in the annals of English liberty, but it was really a diplomatic face saving for King John, a mere cloak to cover John's unconditional submission.

An island in the Thames River between Staines and Windsor was selected as the place of conference. The King camped on one bank whilst the barons occupied a marsh or meadow on the opposite bank called Running Mede or "Runnymede", which at various times theretofore had been a place for national assemblies. Their respective delegates met on this island, and on June 15, 1215, the Great Charter (Magna Carta) was written, adopted, engrossed, and signed.

The Great Charter in and of itself did not establish many new constitutional principles, but did distinctly mark the transition from the epoch of traditional rights, observed in the nation's memory, to the age of muniments of liberty, of written legislation, of parliaments, and statutes which were soon to come. The great reforms of past reigns were thus recognized; for example, the court of common pleas was no longer to follow the King in his meanderings over the realm, but was to sit in a fixed place.

But, say the pundits, Magna Carta says nothing about freedom from unreasonable searches and seizures. Let us examine this statement and see how much thereof is accurate.

The original and individual articles of Magna Carta, as they were prepared and offered seriatim, were written in Latin; but when the entire Carta was adopted and engrossed and was ready for the King's signature, it was written in Norman-French, and we must read it in the light of what its words meant 721 years ago.

I read paragraph 24 of Magna Carta:

No sheriff, constable, coroner, or other our bailiffs shall hold pleas of the Crown.

We must view that language in the light of what it then meant. At that time sheriffs, coroners, constables, bailiffs, and King's minions, in the guise of holding court, had been in the habit of going to the thatched cottage of the peasant and to the castle of the baron as well, to invade that cottage or castle; and these officers and minions would command that the householder open the strong box, the larder, or the pantry; they would pry open the chest in which he kept his relics, his heirlooms, his private papers, and his title deeds and muniments showing his right to occupy the premises, the penalties which these officers, sheriffs, bailiffs, and King's minions inflicted were degrading and painful and were contrary to law.

By section 24 of Magna Carta sheriffs, constables, coroners, and other bailiffs were not allowed to hold court.

Some years after the granting of the Great Charter a doubt arose as to the precise meaning of some of its sections although it was pointed out by the lawyers of that day that the guaranties in Magna Carta were sufficient to secure the liberty of freemen; nevertheless, in the reign of Edward I, in 1297, the Confirmatio Chartarum was promulgated.

The Great Charter signed in 1215 and the Confirmatio Chartarum which was signed in 1297 must be read together; the one dealt particularly with the citizen's personal liberty and the other dealt especially with his property rights. No man since that time has succeeded in the English-speaking world, or wherever it has been pretended there was a government of law instead of a government of men, in questioning the rights of freemen as set out in these two documents.

The leading English case on searches and seizures is that of Entick against Carrington and Three Other King's Messengers, reported at length in Howell's State Trials. In this case officers of the law had broken in and seized books and papers belonging to the plaintiff under color of a warrant issued by the Secretary of State. Action was brought for trespass against the officers making the seizure. The defendants attempted to justify under the warrant. It was conceded that such warrants had been issued for many years and executed without question. The case was argued before a full bench, and Lord Camden, at the Michaelmas term in 1765, delivered the decision holding that such a seizure could not be justified except by a warrant issued by a court upon proper proof, and that even on a warrant issued by the secretary of state it was utterly in violation of the English common law.

This was, therefore, the law of England when our Federal convention met in 1787 to form the Constitution of the United States.

It was understood by all the Colonies to be the law.

The makers of our Federal Constitution and the framers of the first 10 amendments were never tired of quoting the immortal words of the elder Pitt, used in his speech on The Excise:

The poorest man may in his cottage bid defiance to all the force of the Crown. It may be frail; its roof may shake; the wind may blow through it; the storms may enter; the rain may enter—but the King of England cannot enter. All his forces dare not cross the threshold of the ruined tenement.

When the ratification of the Federal Constitution was pending before the Virginia convention, called to pass upon that momentous question, Virginia was a pivotal State—a diamond pivot—on which mighty events turned. Patrick Henry, who Lord Byron said was "the forest-born Demosthenes who shook the Phillip of the seas", was a delegate to the Virginia convention; and although the proposed Federal Constitution had come forth with the sanction of the revered name of General Washington and therefore justly carried with it the vast prestige which the name of Washington could not fail to attach to any proposition, Patrick Henry did not approve the Constitution and, to use his own expression, he was "most awfully alarmed", as he considered the document to be threatening to the liberties of his country—amongst other reasons because it lacked a bill of rights—and Mr. Henry challenged the view of Mr. James Madison, he of the superb intellect; Mr. Henry challenged the Wythes, the Pendletons, and the Innesses, and that splendid galaxy of scholars and statesmen who enriched the annals not only of Virginia but all America; and he demanded to know why a Bill of Rights, guaranteeing the privileges and immunities of the citizen, had been omitted from the Federal Constitution. The Virginia State convention, after a prolonged debate, was able to ratify the Federal Constitution by a majority of only 10 votes, so ably did Patrick Henry argue against it because it did not contain the Bill of Rights which English liberty had affirmed for centuries.

James Madison pledged his word that at the earliest opportunity he would use his energy toward placing into the Federal Constitution the requisite amendments guaranteeing the citizens' rights, privileges, and immunities, and as soon as the Virginia convention had finished the work of ratification it adopted resolutions expressing its desire for the Bill of Rights, demanded by Patrick Henry. These resolutions were forwarded to the governors of the various States, and as far as men could be bound in faith and honor, as far as men could be bound in statesmanship and in politics, the amendments guaranteeing the citizen's individual rights and his liberties were by common consent agreed to, and it was generally understood that these amendments would be proposed to the States by the First Congress.

The first bill to be considered by the First Congress under the Constitution was quite naturally a bill to raise revenue to pay the expenses of the Government; but on July 21, 1789, James Madison, who was a Member of the House, arose and asked the House to indulge him in further consideration of amendments to the Constitution, and he pointed out that the faith and honor of Congress were pledged; that the faith and honor of public men everywhere were pledged to amendments securing to the citizens such guaranties as were comprehended within the first 10 amendments.

The Bill of Rights amendments were then proposed to the States, including of course the fourth and fifth, and were ratified within 2 years and 15 days. Thereafter, as far as Americans are concerned, and as far as the Constitution itself is concerned, they were and are a part and parcel of the original Constitution, as much so as if they were signed on the 17th of September, 1787, when the main instrument itself was signed.

In the case of Boyd v. The United States (116 U. S. 616), the opinion by Mr. Justice Bradley reviewed Lord Camden's opinion and gave a history of the fourth and fifth amendments.

I read from the syllabus:

It does not require actual entry upon premises and search for and seizure of papers to constitute an unreasonable search and seizure within the meaning of the fourth amendment; a compulsory production of a party's private books and papers to be used later against himself or his property in a criminal or penal proceeding or for forfeiture is within the spirit and meaning of the amendment.

It is equivalent to a compulsory production of papers to make nonproduction of them a confession of the allegations which it is pretended they will prove.

I call attention to the case of Gouled v. United States (255 U. S. 298-307). In that case a man was suspected of acts which concerned his loyalty. In such circumstances the temptation to obtain evidence by any means was great. Likewise the temptation to a court to sustain the legality of the seizure was great. Officers of the United States Army succeeded in placing a man in the defendant's establishment who purloined certain of his papers.

The Court states:

It was objected on the trial, and is here insisted upon, that it was error to admit these papers in evidence, because possession of them was obtained by violating the rights secured to the defendant by the fourth and fifth amendments to the Constitution of the United States. The fourth amendment reads:

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and persons or things to be seized."

The part of the fifth amendment here involved reads:

"No person . . . shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself."

The court comments:

It would not be possible to add to the emphasis with which the framers of our Constitution and this court in Boyd v. United States (116 U. S.), The Silver Thorn Lumber Co. v. United States (251 U. S.), Weeks v. United States (and various other cases cited), have declared the importance to political liberty and to the welfare of our country of the due observance of the rights guaranteed under the Constitution by these two amendments.

The effect of the decision cited is: That such rights are declared to be indispensable to the "full enjoyment of personal security, personal liberty, and private property"; that they are to be regarded as of the very essence of constitutional liberty; and that the guaranty of them is as important and as imperative as are the guaranties of the other fundamental rights of the individual citizen—the right to trial by jury, to the writ of habeas corpus, and to due process of law. It has been repeatedly decided that these amendments should receive a liberal construction so as to prevent stealthy encroachments upon or "gradual depreciation" of the rights secured by them, by imperceptible practice of courts, or by well-intentioned but mistakenly overzealous executive officers.

I conclude this address by remarking that one of the choicest fruits of our American civilization is its unlimited valuation of individual liberty and its respect for the natural immunities that accompany free men.

The plan, purpose, and object of the fourth and fifth amendments (indeed, of the first 10 amendments comprising our bill of rights) is that they preserve the liberty of the citizen against the assaults of opportunism, and the expediences to which men resort in an hour of impatience.

Sheltered and defended by the radiant standards of the fourth and fifth amendments, American liberty becomes visible and vocal, audible and actual.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9863) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 8, 10, 11, and 12 to the bill, and concurred therein, and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9 to the bill and concurred therein with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION IN WEST VIRGINIA

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, the President of the United States sent a message to the Congress today requesting an appropriation of $1,500,000,000 for relief. I have discussed the relief situation for a number of days. I did so as outlined in the speech delivered on the 28th day of April 1935, by the President of the United States, in which he said:

The most effective means of preventing such evils in this work-relief program will be the eternal vigilance of the American people themselves. I call upon my fellow citizens everywhere to cooperate with me in making this the most efficient and the cleanest example of public enterprise the world has ever seen. It is time to provide a smashing answer for those cynics who say that a democracy cannot be honest and efficient. If you will help, this can be done.

I am offering my help now, and I have tried to offer it for some time.

The President continues:

I therefore hope you will watch the work in every corner of this Nation. Feel free to criticize. Tell me of instances where work can be done better or where improper practices prevail.

Then the President said:

Neither you nor I want criticism conceived in a purely fault-finding or partisan spirit, but I am jealous of the right of every citizen to call to the attention of his or her Government examples of how the public money can be more effectively spent for the benefit of the American people.

I tried to do that, and I asked for an investigation of the Works Progress Administration in the State of West Virginia. Mr. Hopkins, through one of his agents, conducted an investigation. I told the Senate what I thought of it. I told about the whitewash bucket he used. Frankly, he used the whitewash brush so much that he wore it clear down to the handle, and he used a whole bucket of whitewash that he had intended to use for a number of years. If Mr. Hopkins is honest, if Mr. Hopkins has any respect for the integrity of Government itself, he cannot in any way oppose a thorough, searching Federal investigation of his own department. I am not afraid of anyone searching me for stolen goods. If I had stolen something, if I had committed a crime, I would immediately run away from an investigation. Why do those defending the Works Progress Administration feel free to say that there is no need for an investigation? The best way to disprove charges, if they are not true, is to have an investigation and prove them false. Therefore there is a necessity on the part of all of us who believe in honest administration of Government to vote for a senatorial investigation of the entire relief program.

Oh, they charge me with many things. They say that I am mad because I cannot get the patronage and that I have done these things in West Virginia.

If that is so, my critics can silence me and my critics can defeat me by calling these witnesses before a senatorial committee and proving that is the case. They dare not do it, because they cannot defend the Works Administration in its entirety.

I thought the W. P. A. was not as bad as it has been pictured in the other 47 States. I knew it was rotten, I knew it was corrupt, I knew it was extravagant in West Virginia, but I did not believe that was the responsibility of the National Government. However, when I found Mr. Harry Hopkins, the chief of the whole staff, defending it in West Virginia, I became very doubtful of the condition in the other 47 States, because if West Virginia is lily white and pure I feel sorry for the other 47 States which are not so lily white and so pure in their entirety. If those things are untrue, as Mr. Hopkins says they are all untrue, then let him get behind the senatorial investigation and prove the untruthfulness of my remarks.

Harry Hopkins may sit and wisecrack, Harry Hopkins may try to laugh it off; but if he is put under oath, he cannot deny these facts, and neither can his agents. He sent down to West Virginia a man by the name of Johnstone to investigate relief conditions. Here is a letter I received from one of the most prominent South Carolinians where Mr. Johnstone formerly resided. Let me quote from this letter:

I have also been told that there has been a pretty thorough investigation made of Richland County and conditions have been found possibly worse than those but kept in the background.

Listen to this. Here is the man who went down to make an investigation in West Virginia:

I understand that Alan Johnstone is the big boss of those counties and that his brother, T. K. Johnstone, is particularly in charge of Richland County. The padding of pay rolls seems to be one of the chief issues there.

This is the man who went down to investigate the things I charged. This letter comes from a man whose name, if I should mention it—but I shall not because he asked me to hold it confidential—is known to many Senators. Many Senators know him by his first name.

Mr. Hopkins says there is no politics in West Virginia. Let us have an investigation to prove that. He said they only found 379 official endorsements in the State. That is only six per county. I went to one place and easily found 21 endorsements from my colleague from the records in one office, not counting the other six offices in the State, and many I did not or could not see. If Mr. Johnstone and his staff could not find politics and could not find these letters, could not find these memoranda in the files of the Works Progress Administration offices in the State of West Virginia, I would advise the public utilities to employ these fellows to tell them how to get rid of their records, because the records were there and they could be found, although it has been charged that Mr. McCullough went to Huntington and took out of the records a particular letter where my colleague had requested that a man be fired because he would not go along. That has been told to me.

There is no need to repeat what I have told Members of the Senate before. Thursday I charged there was a letter written as follows, and I want to read it again:

DEAR MR. OLDHAM: I hand you herewith a list of doctors in Ohio County. Kindly separate the Democrats from the Republicans and list them in order of priority so we may notify our safety foremen and compensation men as to who is eligible to participate in case of injury.

That is signed by the Administration assistant. Here is the original letter itself saying they are going to send injured men to the Democratic doctors and directing that the doctors be listed in order of priority.

To make it more thorough, I got the original list of doctors and have it. It reads:

List of county doctors. Instructions. Democratic doctors are listed on the left-hand side and Republicans on the right.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HOLT. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I did not have an opportunity to hear the Senator's speech some days ago. What is the trouble with this letter? What is the complaint about the letter referring to doctors?

Mr. HOLT. It is claimed there is no party politics at all, but here in this letter—

Mr. CONNALLY. If there is any patronage in West Virginia, does the Senator advocate turning it over to the Republican National Committee?

Mr. HOLT. No; I do not.

Mr. CONNALLY. What is the Senator's complaint, then, about having Democratic doctors? If the people down there want to get well, they ought to have Democratic doctors.

Mr. HOLT. My complaint is that the relief program, as President Roosevelt said, should be kept out of politics, and there should not be any danger, if a man is hurt, that he would not be able to get the doctor he wants to get.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator recommended, as I understand, a great many people to this administrator for appointment. Were they Democrats or Republicans?

Mr. HOLT. Who is that?

Mr. CONNALLY. The junior Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. HOLT. I named some Democrats, and I named some Republicans, because I never thought a man should be allowed to starve to death because he believes in a political doctrine different from mine.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not talking about works jobs. I am talking about political appointments. Does the Senator from West Virginia mean to say that he split his recommendations, half Democrats and half Republicans?

Mr. HOLT. No; I did not say half Democrats. I said a number of Republicans, and I am not ashamed of it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did the Senator get any appointees on the W. P. A. works?

Mr. HOLT. The few I did get have been discharged since I made my talk on the floor of the Senate. [Laughter.] I should like to demonstrate that from the Parkersburg Sentinel, a Democratic paper, where the headline reads:

Fire all Holt men from W. P. A.

That was March 12, 1936.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not interested in West Virginia at all.

Mr. HOLT. I understand that.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am interested in the attitude of the junior Senator from West Virginia when he was talking about the Works Progress Administration and about the appointment of doctors.

Mr. HOLT. I say it has come to a pretty plight when politics should be taken into consideration in the treatment of a man who is injured.

Mr. CONNALLY. I did not understand that the politics of a man injured was under consideration.

Mr. HOLT. The politics of the man who treats him was under consideration. Why should there be any politics in the question of choosing a doctor?

Mr. CONNALLY. If I had two doctors and both of them were good doctors, and one was a Democrat, and I had a Democratic job to fill, I would be pretty sure to give the job to a Democrat. I thought that was the attitude of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. HOLT. I am glad the Senator admits there is politics in West Virginia.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is not politics so far as I am concerned. I was talking about the appointments which the Senator from West Virginia may have gotten—some appointments on the W. P. A.

Mr. HOLT. I am ashamed I had anything to do with it.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas has not endorsed anybody and has not had anybody put on the W. P. A. payroll. The Senator from West Virginia seems to take the attitude that it ought to be political, and I understand he recommended a lot of people, and then when they lost their jobs he thought it ought not to be political any longer. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLT. The Senator from Texas hit the nail on the head when he said Democratic doctors should be employed; that Democratic people should be employed; and that a man with a broken leg should be permitted to starve to death if he could not get a Democratic doctor; that if he broke his leg he should have to wait until a Democratic doctor could come and set it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I hope the Senator from West Virginia wants to be fair.

Mr. HOLT. I have been very fair with the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator mean what he said?

Mr. HOLT. I do mean just what I said.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator mean to say if a man were seriously injured the Senator from Texas would rather let him die than have a Republican doctor?

Mr. HOLT. From the past record of the Senator from Texas, I believe he would. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, the Senator from West Virginia knows all about the past record of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HOLT. No; it would take me too long to study it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought the Senator knew all about it. I was not trying to embarrass or heckle the Senator from West Virginia. I did not have an opportunity to be present when his other speeches were made, and I was anxious to know his attitude with regard to that matter.

Does the Senator think it is quite fair to attack the administration—for this is the administration? This is the President's responsibility. The legislation we enacted turned this matter over to President Roosevelt. He detailed certain people to carry it into effect. Why does not the Senator take it up with the President? Why should he go to the men responsible for the W. P. A. in West Virginia? What good does it do to take it up with people in West Virginia? Why does he not take it up with the President? Has the Senator ever talked with the President about it?

Mr. HOLT. I have not talked with the President about it. I have talked to Mr. Harry Hopkins, who has defended his administration. I will say that if Mr. Harry Hopkins were to swear to the things he put in his report about West Virginia he could be found guilty of perjury.

Of course, there is no politics about it at all when the president pro tempore of the State senate was put in as financial director of the Progress Administration in the Parkersburg district. His salary was cut to $2,400 when every other finance director in the State of West Virginia drew $2,900, because my colleague distinctly told him in the reception room out here that he would not tolerate him getting more than $200 a month because he did not vote for a certain one as president pro tempore of the State senate, and I challenge him and I can produce an affidavit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please be in order.

Mr. HOLT. I have been trying to get order in the W. P. A. for a long while.

Now, let me go ahead and say this:

There has developed in West Virginia a reign of terror, in this way: If John Jones or Bill Smith makes any complaint in any way, of any political nature whatever, he is dismissed from his job. He is demoted from his duty. He is forced out of the organization. They went so far in the Parkersburg district, which is my home district, as to go down and fire a colored messenger, who drew around $60 a month, because he had come from my home city and had been a friend of mine. Why is it that these men who were appointed in that district have been thrown out since I made these charges public? If these men were inefficient before, the responsibility lies upon the State administration that they should have been dismissed before the attack was made. If these men are efficient, why should they be discharged because of any speech I might make?

Let me repeat that: If the men were inefficient, they should have been discharged a long time ago. If they were efficient, why should they be made to suffer because of any attack I might make?

I can name the instances of quite a number of men who are absolutely the sole support of their families who have lost their jobs because of personal friendship to me in this particular fight.

I will tell you how far the W. P. A. goes. You know, the utilities could learn from the W. P. A. organization in West Virginia, because when the W. P. A. was set up they went down to Fairmont, to the managing editor of the Fairmont Times, Sutton Sharp, who was on the pay roll of the Fairmont Times, who the directory of Fairmont will show was the managing editor of the Fairmont Times, and they put him on the W. P. A. pay roll at $2,100 a year, I think. I think that is the figure. He is getting that salary at the same time that he is editor of the paper. He does his duty as editor of the paper, and draws $2,100 as liaison officer in that particular thing. Oh, no; they did not want to control the press at all.

They go down to Morgantown and get the editor of the Morgantown Dominion News—and they are the only two daily papers in the whole State of West Virginia, Democratic or Republican, that I have seen, that have defended the W. P. A. This is the way they defend it: They go down and get Bill Hart, who is editor of the Morgantown Dominion News, and allow him, with a committee of two others, to pass on applicants for Monongalia County. If you will look at last Thursday's Record, you will see his name. He says it is terrible that I should have attacked the W. P. A. It is terrible because I pulled the curtain, and behind it he was helping to manipulate the scenes.

They are the two papers that are defending the W. P. A. The editor of one is in charge of the committee, and the managing editor of the other is on the pay roll; and not only did they seek to control the press, but they went and got George Gow, a radio announcer who works for station WMMN, and put him on the pay roll at a figure approximately around $3,000 a year, I understand, and every night he gives a news report. He is known as Robert's News Reporter, and in the past 3 weeks he has been telling about the attack I am making on the W. P. A. No wonder; he is drawing part of his salary from the W. P. A., and $3,000 is not a bad salary.

Not only have they done that in West Virginia but they learned from Mr. Harry Hopkins. You know I referred to him the other day as "Cockey Harry, the wisecracker of the administration." Here is what he has done: We find that he has set up an organization there to give out press statements. Do you know how many men he has employed down there just to tell how big a man Harry Hopkins is? The New York Times said last Sunday that between 250 and 300 men were employed down there in the W. P. A. to give out news releases about Harry Hopkins and the W. P. A. Now, think of that—from 250 to 300 men to tell these boys up in the press gallery what they ought to write about the W. P. A., and give them "canned" statements! Oh, of course, they would not want to control the press at all. No; they are doing that, you know, "as a means of public relation", so that you can find out anything about the W. P. A. If I would go down there, I could not find out the number of a project, because they said I should get the information otherwise.

All right. Now, let us go a little bit further.

When I hold this up, this is no boondoggling thing at all. This is not a boondoggling scheme of Harry Hopkins. This is just a group of editorials from the Nation's leading papers about the famous whitewash that Harry Hopkins had in regard to the death of the veterans down on the Keys in Florida. You know what the veterans' convention said about this. Hopkins sent his own men down there, and they came back and said, no; there was nothing wrong. This is just a group of editorials that I intend to speak on a little later; not this afternoon but a little later in the course of the session.

Not only that but Harry Hopkins has asserted that my charge about the wire was ridiculous; the charge that this famous piece of wire, that I am going to show you, cost $38.75 a foot, was ridiculous.

Mr. President, I frankly admit that Harry Hopkins told the truth. It is ridiculous, it is more than ridiculous, that we should pay $38.75 a foot for that wire. Here is a piece of wire of which it would cost approximately $93,000 to put three strands around an acre lot. If anyone wants to see it, I have brought along with me a photostatic copy of the actual purchase order. Anyone can see where they bought it, and who signed for it. I admit that Mr. Hopkins' statement is correct. It is more than ridiculous. Of course, he can put plenty of baled-hay wire around this, but he cannot cover up the affair.

All right. Now, let us go a little bit further into the charges and see if they are not true.

Mr. Hopkins said that the district attorneys have nothing to do with the naming of political patronage. May I refer to a letter of March 4, from the district attorney of southern West Virginia? Here is what he writes to me. You know, they charged him with naming all the patronage; and here is what he said:

I think I can safely say that fully one-half, and I think much more than one-half, of the appointments made in the Huntington office have been made without my recommendation.

He did not name all of them; he just named half of them for the whole district of West Virginia. Here is an actual, original letter he sent to me.

Here is a letter from the district attorney of northern West Virginia, where a man was an applicant for a job. He was told to come in and see the district attorney, and he would see if he could place the man or not. I read from a letter of October 23, as follows:

I understand that the airport project in Harrison County, just east of Bridgeport, will get under way in the course of the next week or 10 days, and will probably last about a year.

If you think that the work would not be too far away for you, I would like to know if you would be interested in a position as timekeeper at the project, so that I can recommend you for that post.

Sincerely yours,

HOWARD L. ROBINSON.

And the man had no connection with him; he never went to Howard Robinson. How did Howard Robinson get his name? He says there is no politics!

Let me quote now from the personnel director of the Fairmont district:

The time to correct mistakes is before they are made, if possible. Consequently, we do not want anyone on these jobs who is not right. The hundreds of applications going in should be taken around to the designated leaders in each county and sorted.

I do not know what they mean by "sorted", but you can imagine.

Then the local leaders can't blame the personnel office if the right boys are not on. This, to my mind, is paramount if this organization is to accomplish what it has to do in the next year.

What do they mean by "the next year"? Well, you can understand.

Here is what he says, further:

Since the requisitions for labor so far have been made up in this office, we have, since this happening in Brooke County, religiously placed as foremen and timekeepers on the projects the names of men suggested by our advisers.

And then he tells about putting certain ones on and kicking certain ones off.

Now, I want to go further and tell you about another charge I have made.

I charged that the administration of the Works Progress Administration in the State of West Virginia is extravagant and reckless with the people's money. They have built a huge system. On top of this system is a State machine. Under the State machine is a district machine. Under the district machine is an area machine. Under the area machine is a county machine. Under the county machine is a project machine. All those boys have to be paid before the man with the pick and shovel gets a penny; and when there is any shortage of funds, or any running out of money, you do not see those men losing their jobs. They put out John Jones and Bill Smith, at the bottom.

Look at the number of projects closed down in West Virginia, and you will see that the first men who lost their jobs are the men down in the pick-and-shovel class, for whom the relief act was meant. They are the ones who lost their jobs, not the fellows up at the top. It was the man down at the bottom who had to pay the cost. Here are people begging, asking for the right to live, and farmers with large farms, merchants, and professional men are put on as timekeepers and foremen, at pitiful sums of $100 and up. This keeps some poor fellow down the line from getting employment in the State of West Virginia.

I told you a few days ago, and I am going to repeat it now, that in one $90,000 project in Cabell County there were 64 bosses. I have the names of the bosses here with me to show anyone who cares to challenge that statement. There are two pages of it—64 bosses on a project of $90,000!

I named a number of others of those projects. I showed where a man who promised to do right by the political set-up was put on. Now, something must be done about that; and if these charges are not true, why not have a Senate investigation and prove them untrue? Why not bring them out in the open and prove that I am not telling the truth? That is the way to dispute my argument. I defy them to bring out the facts as they were.

Here is an order that I will read. Those who are "on the draw" in West Virginia are told to believe the W. P. A. is all right. Here is an order from the State administrator, through his deputy, to the district director and to the people at work:

Information has reached this office that on Saturday afternoon, March 14, from 2:30 to 3 p. m., Mr. Harry L. Hopkins will broadcast over the Columbia network on the subject "Discussing the W. P. A. Program."

It is suggested that you publicize this information throughout your entire administrative and field forces. I am sure we will all hear something which will be of considerable value and benefit to us in our work.

In other words, these people had to quit their work and listen to Harry Hopkins for 30 minutes. He has wasted millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money; now he is wasting the time of the employees of the W. P. A. and has them listening to what a great man Harry Hopkins is. Read his speech in New York, and it will be found that he said that Harry Hopkins did this and Harry Hopkins did that and Harry Hopkins did something else. It is time that someone else in that organization was doing something. There is too much on his shoulders, if he has done all the things his publicity crowd have said he has done. The people want something to eat. They do not want Harry Hopkins' wisecracks in my State, and they are going to prove that when election time comes.

Being connected with the W. P. A. in West Virginia is like having leprosy. Everyone stays away from it. Of course, the W. P. A. leprosy is a disease that is getting under cover and is being spread only because of contact with those affected. Running for Governor. There is a man to run for the United States Senate, and it is even going deeper than that. There is a foreman and timekeeper running for constable, someone running for assessor, or running for county court, or running for the legislature, telling the men, "We all work for the W. P. A. You know we have to keep this organization together." Then there are officers running for the State legislature. I can name the men if I am called before a senatorial committee, and I will tell just what they have done.

Oh, of course, they are rewarding the men properly. Senators will remember my colleague reading a telegram, when he spoke on the floor of the Senate a number of days ago, from Robert Roth, of Fairmont, in which Roth said there was no politics and praised the W. P. A. administration.

Mr. Roth has been paid well. Since he sent that telegram he was put on the pay roll again under the W. P. A., as district director of the Parkersburg district, at $3,200 a year.

That telegram was certainly a valuable one for Mr. Roth. Of course, there was no politics behind it at all.

Those who brought in information have been given increases, and those who told have been decreased. They just found out they needed decreases in the Parkersburg office, and they found they needed increases elsewhere.

They have started so many projects that one man in West Virginia said he is getting tired of going up the street and barking his shins on the uncompleted projects of the W. P. A. They have dug holes that are not finished. They start projects and do not complete them. They start work on streets and sidewalks, and there is no money left because the "brass hats" up at the top get it.

Mr. President, is it not time we were getting to some permanent policy of spending? We spend hundreds of millions and billions of dollars and where are we? Are we any better off in solving the relief program in 1936 than we were in 1933?

We find that in 1934, 12,420,000 people were out of employment. We find that in January 1936, 12,626,000 were out of employment. Two hundred and six thousand more people were out of employment in January of this year than were out of employment in March 1934.

Is it not time, when we are spending billions of dollars, to adopt some permanent policy of relief and some permanent policy of spending the taxpayers' money? Is not the way to do that to have an investigation of the R. F. C., the C. W. A., the F. E. R. A., the W. P. A., and all the other alphabetic agencies affecting relief, so that we can in the future, when we appropriate money, get the benefit of an investigation?

The only investigation that has been made of the W. P. A. or any other relief agency in West Virginia, or in any other State, has been made by Harry Hopkins or one of his appointees. It is high time that the Senate of the United States, spending billions of dollars, has a right to see where this money goes and a right to see what they are doing with the money.

Let us wipe out this red tape they are following. Let me tell the Senate of one of their famous rules. If a man was not on relief on the 1st day of May 1935, he can starve to death in March 1936, but if a man was on relief in May 1935, and was put on the W. P. A. pay rolls, and inherits a lot of money, he can be kept on the W. P. A. rolls. Let us make our relief policy apply to the United States as it is affected in March 1936, and the future, and not at any other time. Relief should be determined by the relief needs today, not by the relief needs in 1935.

Let me give an example taken from one community in my State. There was a factory in that community which employed a number of men. These men worked, and they went to work day after day. The plant burned down, and because those men were not on relief in May 1935 they cannot get any W. P. A. work in 1936. What are they to do? Such a policy is destroying the initiative of people to go into private employment, because they realize that if they quit the W. P. A. they cannot get back on the W. P. A. pay roll. Is it not time we were opening their eyes? Is it not time to get to some permanent policy of relief, with 12,500,000 people unemployed, instead of turning over billions and billions of dollars to "Wisecracker Harry" to spend, to give out in allotments as he desires?

Many are fearful of Harry Hopkins' wrath and fearful of his striking down projects within their States. In other words, if any Senators say anything, Harry Hopkins has the power to stop a project in the Senator's State, and the State suffers. I know they do it in our State. I know that projects which have been started have been stopped. Sometimes it was political redress against certain people.

The fact that so many people are unemployed, the failure to complete our projects, the fact that we need some permanent policy for the future mean that we need a senatorial investigation, not by Harry Hopkins' men, not by Alan Johnstone, not by those who always put the blame on someone else.

Harry Hopkins has two famous excuses if there is anything wrong. One is that it is the result of an act of God; the second is that it is the fault of some dumb politician. I do not know how wide a latitude he wants, but those are the two famous expressions of Harry Hopkins. It is either some dumb politician or an act of divine Providence.

I have made charges, and I expect to repeat them and to continue to repeat them until they are cleaned up, and if they are not exposed it is a sign that someone is trying to cover up something. There is no danger in looking at the sunlight. The sunlight destroys disease, and the W. P. A. is suffering from a political disease. The expenditure of billions of dollars by "Wisecracker Harry", or "Cocky Harry", will not satisfy starving American people, and it is our duty to look into the real problem of unemployment and into the policy of spending the taxpayers' money.

PAYMENT OF CERTAIN CLAIMS FOR DAMAGE

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2603) to authorize the Attorney General to determine and pay certain claims against the Government for damage to person or property in sum not exceeding $500 in any one case, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Attorney General of the United States may consider, adjust, and determine any claim accruing after January 1, 1934, on account of damages to any person or damages to or loss of privately owned property, caused by the Director, any Assistant Director, Inspector, or special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice acting within the scope of his employment, and such amount as may be found due to any claimant, not exceeding $500 in any one case, shall be certified to Congress as a legal claim for payment out of appropriations that may be made by Congress therefor, together with a brief statement of the character of each claim, the amount claimed, and the amount allowed: Provided, That this authorization shall not be construed to apply to cases of persons in the employ or service of the United States while acting within the scope of such employ or service: Provided further, That no claim shall be considered under this act unless presented to the Attorney General within 1 year from the date of the accrual of said claim; except that any claim accruing between January 1, 1934, and the date of the approval of this act may be presented within 3 months after the date of such approval: And provided further, That acceptance by any claimant of the amount determined to be due him under the provisions of this act shall be deemed to be in full and final settlement of such claim against the Government of the United States.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide for the adjustment and settlement of certain claims arising out of the activities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation."

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, what is the amendment?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as the Senate passed it, Senate bill 2603 gave the Attorney General power not only to ascertain, but to pay certain claims which came under his cognizance up to $500. The House amended the bill so as to provide that he could ascertain the amount of any claim, and then certify the same to the Congress for payment. We believe that is the wiser course to pursue.

Mr. ROBINSON. So that the Congress will have the opportunity of passing upon the matter finally?

Mr. KING. The language is that it "shall be certified to Congress as a legal claim."

Mr. ROBINSON. What classes of claims are embraced in the bill?

Mr. KING. Claims "on account of damages to any person or damages to or loss of privately owned property, caused by the Director, any Assistant Director, Inspector, or special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice acting within the scope of his employment." Many of the Federal agencies and departments are authorized to pay claims up to $500.

Mr. ROBINSON. I was just about to say that I recall that the War Department is authorized not only to adjust but to pay claims up to that amount. What is the ground for the distinction made in this instance?

Mr. KING. The House committee went into the matter very carefully and amended the Senate bill, and the Attorney General has approved it.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator himself is satisfied that it is a proper amendment?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah, which is that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 9863, the independent offices appropriation bill, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,

March 18, 1936.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 7, 8, 10, 11, and 12 to the bill (H. R. 9863) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, and concur therein; and

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 9 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"Sec. 2. To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of sections 7 to 17, inclusive, of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, approved February 29, 1936 (Public, No. 461, 74th Cong.), including the employment of personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, printing and binding, purchase of lawbooks, books of reference, periodicals and newspapers, and other necessary expenses, $440,000,000, together with not to exceed $30,000,000 of the funds made available under the head 'Payments for Agricultural Adjustment' in the Supplemental Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936, approved February 11, 1936 (Public, No. 440, 74th Cong.); to be immediately available and to remain available until June 30, 1938, for compliances under said act in the calendar year 1936: Provided, That no part of such amount shall be available after June 30, 1937, for salaries and other administrative expenses except for payment of obligations therefor incurred prior to July 1, 1937: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, from time to time transfer to the General Accounting Office such sums as may be necessary to pay administrative expenses of the General Accounting Office in auditing payments under this item."

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think the Senator should explain the amendment in which concurrence is asked.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be glad to do so. I think it would be well for the clerk first to read the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and then such questions as may be asked will be answered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment of the House to the Senate amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In lieu of the matter inserted by Senate amendment numbered 9, it is proposed to insert the following:

Sec. 2. To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of sections 7 to 17, inclusive, of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, approved February 29, 1936 (Public, No. 461, 74th Cong.), including the employment of personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, printing and binding, purchase of lawbooks, books of reference, periodicals and newspapers, and other necessary expenses, $440,000,000, together with not to exceed $30,000,000 of the funds made available under the head "Payments for agricultural adjustment" in the Supplemental Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936, approved February 11, 1936 (Public, No. 440, 74th Cong.); to be immediately available and to remain available until June 30, 1938, for compliances under said act in the calendar year 1936: Provided, That no part of such amount shall be available after June 30, 1937, for salaries and other administrative expenses except for payment of obligations therefor incurred prior to July 1, 1937: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, from time to time transfer to the General Accounting Office such sums as may be necessary to pay administrative expenses of the General Accounting Office in auditing payments under this item.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will explain the principal changes. After the words "To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of", the words "sections 7 to 17, inclusive, of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act" were added by the House. It is now proposed that the Senate agree to that change. The language was inserted to make the provision specific. It was largely a question of verbiage.

In the first proviso the date was changed to "June 30, 1938", instead of June 30, 1937." The language now is:

June 30, 1938, for compliances under said act in the calendar year 1936: Provided, That no part of such amount shall be available after June 30, 1937, for salaries and other administrative expenses except for payment of obligations therefor incurred prior to July 1, 1937.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall be glad to have further explanation in regard to this matter. I should like to know whether the amendment authorizes increased expenditures; whether it extends the period within which payments may be made. In other words, what are the distinctions?

Mr. McKELLAR. The principal difference is that the House amendment extends the period to 1938 instead of 1937.

Mr. KING. Why?

Mr. McKELLAR. Because it was thought to be absolutely necessary in order to carry out the purposes of the act referred to in the amendment. I will say to the Senator that there is no more money provided by the amendment. There have been no changes in those provisions of the bill. I have stated the principal differences between the provision as adopted by the Senate and what is now proposed by the House.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does the Senator object to having the conference report go over until tomorrow to give us a chance to examine it?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, ordinarily I would not; but, as everyone knows, the President is going out of town tomorrow. The matter should, therefore, be acted upon today, in order that the bill may be placed in his hands tomorrow. It is a very important measure. In order to be really effective the bill will have to go into effect immediately. I hope the Senator will not ask that the amendment go over. If we do not take action upon it this afternoon, the President will either be delayed in making his trip or the bill cannot become effective immediately.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I concur in the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee that final action on the bill should be disposed of today. I hope the Senator from Utah will not object.

Mr. KING. I want to ask the Senator again to explain—and perhaps I find it necessary because of my unfamiliarity with all the details of the bill and its many ramifications—just what the effect is of the extension of the period?

Mr. McKELLAR. It gives another year in which to carry out the purposes of the act which has been passed.

Mr. KING. In the meantime, what becomes of the act?

Mr. McKELLAR. The act is in full force and effect, of course. It just adds to the time during which it can be carried out.

Mr. KING. The act, as I understand it, is a continuing act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; but there is not a continuing appropriation. The amendment makes the language dealing with the appropriation conform absolutely to the act as passed by the Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON. It does not increase the amount of the appropriation, but merely gives more time for the application of the fund.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and it makes the appropriation here granted conform with the terms of the act of Congress which has already been passed.

Mr. KING. I think with that explanation I shall not ask for delay. I am opposed to the measure, and I shall, of course, vote against the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate no. 9.

The amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate no. 9 was concurred in.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11035) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I do not want Senators to get the idea that we are near the close of the afternoon session. We are going to have a roll call in a moment and have many Senators here.

I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I shall submit but a few sentences in regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota. I shall vote for the same, although it is not quite in the form that I desired. In supporting the amendment I do not mean to indicate that I am opposed to all military training; indeed, there are some advantages to be derived by young men from proper and reasonable military training. My position in part is reflected by the course which I pursued with respect to my son who, 2 years ago, attended the public schools here in Washington. A few hours each week were devoted to military drill. It was his desire to take part in the class drill and to receive such instructions as were imparted. I approved of his view and believe that he was benefited from the instructions received. I am opposed, however, to compulsory military training, though I concede that there are some advantages from a physical standpoint, if not from a moral and health standpoint, in receiving reasonable military discipline and training. It is the compulsion that I object to.

I doubt the power of the Government to compel military training in private or public schools. Certainly, it ought not to attempt to exercise such power in peacetimes, and particularly when there are no imminent threats of war. In case of war an individual may be required to give not only property but life in the defense of his country and flag. Even then certain exceptions may be made in behalf of individuals or groups. The views of the fathers and mothers, as well as those who enter schools, should be respected in the matter of military training and military discipline; and, as I have stated, no compulsory system should be inaugurated or maintained.

I do not think the confused conditions existing in Europe, or the military activities in the Orient, should influence us in abandoning a policy under which our Nation has grown and become a liberal and democratic force in the world. This Republic stands for peace and world order; for a spirit of brotherhood and good will. It should not be frightened from a sane and wise course by the cries of militarists or by the eloquent or violent appeals of those who contend that world conditions demand unprecedented expenditures and the adoption of military plans of such magnitude as may or will engender fear or apprehension upon the part of other nations.

Mr. President, I make no criticism of the work of the R. O. T. C. in the schools. From all that I can learn, benefits have been derived by many young men, but I can only repeat that, in voting for the amendment, I am merely registering my opposition to a policy of compulsory military training.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER].

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a list of higher educational institutions having courses in military training. The list was prepared by the War Department April 20, 1935. I notice that the institutions designated with a star have elective courses, and those without that designation have what are termed the compulsory feature.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The list is as follows:

NOTE.—The War Department list includes Cornell University Medical College, Harvard Medical School (1932), Jefferson Medical College, Vanderbilt University School of Medicine, and Western Reserve University, but the military training courses have been dropped by these institutions in 1935.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, when I was talking a short time ago, I neglected to quote a paragraph which I had intended to quote from one of the college students who had written an editorial with regard to compulsory military training. It is from Elmer J. Lewis, who received second prize. He is a student at Riverside Junior College, Riverside, Calif. He makes the statement:

In a bulletin published by Scabbard and Blade, the national R. O. T. C. honorary fraternity, the following is said of the late and much-beloved Jane Addams:

"For the past 20 years her efforts have been directed to international and subversive channels until today she stands out as the most dangerous woman in America."

That, it seems to me, shows the attitude of the military group that favors compulsory military training.

This young man says further:

Compulsory military drill is especially unfair to those members of an ever-increasing number of churches that have renounced the entire war system and preparation for it. Let us have an America that is tolerant of the religious views of others.

Mr. President, I hope we may have a record vote on this amendment. It is to some of us very important, and there is a great deal of interest being taken in regard to it. If the Senate is ready to vote, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I should like very briefly to answer a statement made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] a few moments ago, when he said that he was not quoting from any record of the War Department regarding a poll which had been had concerning the attitude of young men who had taken military training in various schools of the country. It is very true he was not quoting from any record made by the War Department or from any poll taken by the War Department regarding that matter; but he might have said that the poll was taken by Major Bishop and that the necessary money was furnished by an organization interested in military training. He might also have said that the poll was not taken of students taking courses or having taken courses in military training at land-grant colleges, where such courses are maintained, but that it was taken of the graduates of the R. O. T. C.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BENSON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I may say to the Senator from Minnesota that I stated distinctly that the poll was taken of graduates of schools which had R. O. T. C. units. I made that statement, and the RECORD will bear me out.

Mr. BENSON. That is entirely different from the subject we have under discussion. We have under discussion whether or not we are going to permit the land-grant colleges to insist upon military training of all male students attending such colleges, and not whether or not they are going to join R. O. T. C. units for the purpose of receiving commissions in the Reserve Corps. That is an entirely different question and an entirely different subject, and should not be brought in here. I wanted to make that clear.

Furthermore, Mr. President, it seems to me that the present administration, which at this time is stressing very decidedly the need for economy, might very well show a little economy in regard to the money expended in the training of men in preparation for military service; and in doing that they might establish, we will say, one additional school similar to West Point and train officers there who will come out prepared actually to be in service to the country in case of attack by a foreign foe, rather than impose such military training upon those who are unwilling to accept it at the various land-grant colleges and State universities throughout the United States.

Mr. COPELAND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	King	Pope
Ashurst	Copeland	La Follette	Radcliffe
Austin	Costigan	Lewis	Reynolds
Bachman	Davis	Logan	Robinson
Bailey	Dickinson	Loneragan	Russell
Barbour	Donahay	Long	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Duffy	McAdoo	Sheppard
Benson	Fletcher	McGill	Shipstead
Bilbo	Frazier	McKellar	Steiger
Bone	George	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Brown	Gerry	Maloney	Townsend
Bulkley	Gibson	Metcalf	Truman
Bulow	Guffey	Minton	Vandenberg
Burke	Hale	Moore	Van Nuys
Byrd	Harrison	Murphy	Wagner
Byrnes	Hatch	Neely	Wheeler
Capper	Hayden	Norris	White
Caraway	Holt	O'Mahoney
Carey	Johnson	Overton
Clark	Keyes	Pittman

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER]. On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARKLEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], who is absent. I understand if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FRAZIER (when Mr. NYE's name was called). On this question my colleague the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] is paired with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. Both these Senators are unavoidably absent. I understand, if present, the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] would vote "nay." If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], if present, would vote "nay."

I also announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] are detained on account of illness; and that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are detained in important committee meetings.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE] the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and my colleague the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] are unavoidably detained.

Mr. HATCH. I announce that my colleague the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is unavoidably detained.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD (after having voted in the affirmative). The senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] is necessarily absent. I am informed that if present he would vote as I have voted. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] to the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 59, as follows:

YEAS—18

Benson	Costigan	McGill	Shipstead
Bone	Frazier	Murphy	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Holt	Neely	Wheeler
Capper	King	Norris
Clark	La Follette	Pope

NAYS—59

Adams	Connally	Johnson	Pittman
Ashurst	Copeland	Keyes	Radcliffe
Austin	Davis	Lewis	Reynolds
Bachman	Dickinson	Logan	Robinson
Bailey	Donahey	Loneragan	Russell
Barbour	Duffy	Long	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Fletcher	McAdoo	Sheppard
Bilbo	George	McKellar	Steiwer
Brown	Gerry	McNary	Townsend
Bulkley	Gibson	Maloney	Truman
Burke	Guffey	Metcalf	Vandenberg
Byrd	Hale	Minton	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Harrison	Moore	Wagner
Caraway	Hatch	O'Mahoney	White
Carey	Hayden	Overton

NOT VOTING—19

Bankhead	Couzens	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Black	Dieterich	Murray	Trammell
Borah	Glass	Norbeck	Tydings
Chavez	Gore	Nye	Walsh
Coolidge	Hastings	Smith

So Mr. FRAZIER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask the attention of Senators to the amendment on page 71, lines 17 and 18, relative to the Soldiers' Home, where the words "the accounts for which to be audited and settled as the Secretary of War shall direct" were inserted. I find this language is really legislative. It should have been so stated to the Senate at the time the amendment was considered. On further investigation, it seems desirable to omit the language from the bill. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment was adopted may be reconsidered with a view to moving that the amendment be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reconsideration of the vote, as requested by the Senator from New York?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I desire to know simply as a matter of information what it is the Senator from New York is asking to reconsider.

Mr. COPELAND. Is has to do with the auditing of the accounts of the United States Soldiers' Home. It has been found that the amendment is legislation and doubtless should not be included in the bill. Therefore I have asked to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered.

Mr. COPELAND. I now ask that the amendment be rejected.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, may I ask what the amendment is?

Mr. COPELAND. It has to do with the auditing of the accounts of the Soldiers' Home.

Mr. McKELLAR. On what page is it?

Mr. COPELAND. On page 71.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask unanimous consent that the clerks be authorized to correct the totals and section numbers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment on page 76, striking out the last paragraph of the bill, section 4, was agreed to on day before yesterday. I ask that because I have received what seems to me quite definite information which rather contradicts the argument which was made by some of those favoring the committee amendment striking out the provision limiting to 10 percent profits on airplane contracts over $10,000.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I very much dislike to object to the request of the Senator. If it is in order, I can explain the reasons why the Senate committee rejected the provision, and why the House committee rejected it.

The provision is one which was added on the floor of the House; and yet I do not like to be in the position of objecting to the Senator's discussion of the matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. He may discuss it on a motion to reconsider.

Mr. FRAZIER. If there is an objection, of course I shall have to make a motion. I desire to make a brief statement with regard to the situation.

Mr. COPELAND. Why not let the Senator move to reconsider?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which section 4, on page 76 of the bill, was stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota to reconsider the committee amendment on page 76, striking out section 4 of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, that motion is debatable, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is debatable.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, in discussing this particular provision the other day I was not aware of the situation in the House in regard to the adoption of the provision. I find by the RECORD, and also from talking with the author of the provision which was inserted on the floor of the House, Representative McFARLANE, of Texas, that the amendment incorporating the provision was offered there and adopted without objection. It was accepted by the committee, as I understand. It is along the line of the limitation that was placed in the Navy appropriation bill a couple of years ago; and it seems to me it is perfectly logical that there should be a limitation in this instance.

When we were discussing the matter day before yesterday the argument was made that the airplane companies spent a great deal of money in experimental work, and so forth. I find, however, that the Government pays for such experimental work, to a large extent, at least. I have a letter addressed to Mr. McFARLANE, of the House, signed by a captain of the United States Navy, by direction of the chief of bureau, giving the amounts that were expended and obligated on account of experiments and developments under the appropriation "Aviation, Navy."

Beginning with 1926 and going to 1936, inclusive, there was spent by the Government $20,447,652 for experiments in the Navy. I have here a copy of the Baker report of the War Department special committee on the air forces, especially. In the table on page 81 of this report the expenditures for experiments and research by the Army in the airplane service are given, beginning with 1920 and going up to 1927.

In 1920 there was spent, $4,522,000 and a little over.

In 1921 a little over $5,000,000 was expended for experimental and research purposes.

In 1922, $4,000,000 was spent.

In 1923, $3,000,000 and a little over was spent.

In 1924 over $3,000,000 was spent.

In 1925 over $3,000,000 was spent.

In 1926, $2,646,000 was spent.

In 1927, $2,183,000 was spent.

Then I have the figures for the fiscal years 1935 and 1936. In the fiscal year 1935, $4,541,799 was spent for these experimental purposes.

In the fiscal year 1936, $4,865,295 was spent for these purposes.

I understand that in the pending bill an appropriation is made for these experimental purposes, as is the custom in the Army appropriation bills. I cannot understand what all the appropriations are for, to be frank about the matter. I am not on the committee, and it is almost impossible for anybody who is not on the committee to find out what the various appropriations are for; but I am told that there is an appropriation of that kind in the bill.

Mr. President, it seems to me that with the experimental work taken care of we should have a provision in the bill to limit the profit to 10 percent.

It was stated in the hearings before the Senate committee by Assistant Secretary Woodring and some others that no excess profits were made on these planes by the airplane companies, and that he thought a limit of 10 percent would be unfair, and so forth. I have shown that money is paid by the Government for the experimental work. Here is a copy of a letter written by the Comptroller General, J. R. McCarl, to the Secretary of War under date of February 19, 1936, in regard to a contract which was let by the War Department for the purchase of planes during 1935. I desire to read the letter, though it is quite lengthy. It gives a copy of a letter written by one of the airplane companies and the reply by Secretary Woodring, and then there are comments by Mr. McCarl on the letting of the contract.

Mr. McCarl says:

There was no competition with respect to the price, as hereinbefore stated. There was a difference of approximately $20,000 per plane, or approximately $400,000 on the 20 planes contracted for.

In other words, 20 planes were contracted for. The bid by the Douglas Aircraft Co. for delivery of 20 airplanes was $49,500 each. The bid by the Curtiss-Wright Airplane Co. was $29,500 each. That is just $20,000 a plane difference. The bid by the Fairchild Aircraft Corporation was $29,150 each. That is a little more than $20,000 less than the high bid; yet the contract was let to the high bidder, paying a little over $400,000 more than the low bid.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. KING. What reason is assigned for the conduct of the Department in awarding the contract to a firm whose bid was nearly double that submitted by another contractor?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. McCarl says that the low bid was well above the specifications of the Department in the qualifications required in regard to speed, and all that sort of thing; and he says there was no competition in regard to price.

I will read from the 1935 edition of the Army Air Service Laws a portion of the law approved July 2, 1926, which sets forth the regulations in regard to letting contracts. Subsection (t) provides:

Hereafter whenever the Secretary of War, or the Secretary of the Navy, shall enter into a contract for or on behalf of the United States, for aircraft, aircraft parts, or aeronautical accessories, said Secretary is hereby authorized to award such contract to the bidder that said Secretary shall find to be the lowest responsible bidder that can satisfactorily perform the work or the service required to the best advantage of the Government; and the decision of the Secretary of the department concerned, as to the award of such contract, the interpretation of the provisions of the contract, and the application and administration of the contract shall not be reviewable, otherwise than as may be therein provided for, by any officer or tribunal of the United States except the President and the Federal courts.

Apparently, therefore, it was decided, on that basis, that the Secretary felt that the bid accepted was the lowest responsible bid, although Comptroller General McCarl said it was over $20,000 more than the low bid.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not see how this amendment reaches the question the Senator has in mind. There is no doubt that there was a competitive bid, and that two bids were $20,000 lower per plane than the bid accepted. I think there is something wrong there.

Mr. FRAZIER. The amendment would limit the profit to 10 percent where the contract is in excess of $10,000.

Mr. PITTMAN. Who is to determine the profit?

Mr. FRAZIER. A provision is made in the law that certain officials of the Department may go over the books and make inquiries, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. PITTMAN. Does this mean that the Government is to determine the profit?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; as I understand it.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Government cannot determine the profit until after the plane is built, can it?

Mr. FRAZIER. I presume not.

Mr. PITTMAN. We would be asking the contractor to bid on a plane, to build it, I take it, and then have the Government, after it is built, determine what the cost was, and allow the manufacturer 10 percent profit.

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not so understand. The contracts would be let just the same, and when a contract was made, and when the work was performed, there would be an investigation in order to determine what the cost was. In the case before us it does not seem to me that it is possible it could cost one company $20,000 more to build a plane than it would cost another company to build the same kind of plane.

Mr. PITTMAN. Let us consider this question. Suppose the amendment were restored and the Secretary accepted the bid of the Douglas Co., which was $20,000 lower than the one he did accept, and that company had proceeded to build the planes under the bid. After they had completed the planes and the Government investigated and found that the planes cost the manufacturer only $10,000 to build, it would give the manufacturer $10,000 plus 10-percent profit. Is that correct?

Mr. FRAZIER. I think that is correct.

Mr. PITTMAN. And the Government would have the right to determine the cost?

Mr. FRAZIER. I think that is correct.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not believe it would ever get a bid under any such provision as that.

Mr. FRAZIER. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada whether he does not think that 10 percent is enough profit on a contract of $10,000 or over.

Mr. PITTMAN. The question is, Who is to determine it? Does the Senator think a businessman would proceed to build a lot of expensive planes which would cost him, taking everything into consideration, $20,000 each when he would be bound under a contract under which the Secretary might find it cost him only $15,000 to build the planes? No adjudication or determination is provided for.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Secretary of War, of course, would determine the cost from an examination of the figures of the company which built the plane, so I cannot see that there would be any difficulty in that respect.

Mr. PITTMAN. Cannot the Senator conceive that there are different methods of ascertaining costs?

Mr. FRAZIER. As I understand, the men who are to investigate the books would take the cost figures of the manufacturer. The amendment we adopted in the case of the Navy appropriation bill a few years ago was a little different from the amendment we are now discussing, and was a much better amendment. I have a copy of the amendment, or practically the same amendment, which was adopted as to the Navy a few years ago.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I assume that the War Department, if that is the Department which is buying the planes, should have a very accurate knowledge as to what the planes ought to cost, and I should not think they would enter into a contract for an amount very much above that figure. If they did so, then this section is not the one which reaches the matter, in my opinion.

I feel this way about the matter: There is competitive bidding, we will assume, and one man bids $20,000 a plane less than his competitor. His price is quite low, or the other is very high, I do not know which. Nevertheless, one bids $20,000 less than the other. He does not know until after he has expended his money in building the plane what he is to get, because the determination of cost is left to the War Department, since they have the money.

The manufacturer might go into court, under this provision, and sue. I do not know whether he could or not, but I suppose he could. He might be able to sue and establish his costs. But until he took the initiative and established his costs the War Department could arbitrarily say that his costs were much less than he claimed they were.

Mr. FRAZIER. I have never heard of the War Department taking that attitude. I do not think there would be any such danger.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think they should take the attitude of estimating the costs of these things very closely.

Mr. FRAZIER. In his letter Comptroller General McCarl says that in the matter of this particular contract there was no consideration of costs in letting the contract, because it was let to the Douglas Co., whose bid was $20,000 higher than that of the Curtis-Wright people and a little more than $20,000 above the bid of the other company.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have an idea that the law provides that the Department may refuse any bids; if they considered a bid exorbitant, they would have a right to reject it. It seems to me that the law is sufficient if it is executed. If there is anything else to be added to the law, I do not know of it, but if a businessman has to put his money into building planes without knowing what he is to get notwithstanding his bid, I think there would be some difficulty in getting bids.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Navy has had no trouble in getting bids under the provision put into the law a couple of years ago, as I understand, and it is operating very well. The information I have received is to the effect that the Navy Department has kept down expenses considerably below those of the War Department in the purchase of planes.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have never seen the provision to which the Senator refers, and do not know what it is.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, it seems to me the amendment ought to be reconsidered and the House provision left in the bill. If this is a fair sample of the way contracts are let by the Army in the buying of planes, it seems to me there should be a limit of not to exceed 10 percent at least.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to make an honest-to-goodness reply to the Senator from North Dakota. It is perfectly natural to think that there should be a limitation upon profit. I think, ordinarily speaking, that is right. But this is an entirely different situation, in spite of everything the distinguished Senator from North Dakota has said.

I desire to refer to the testimony given by The Assistant Secretary of War in the hearings on the measure before us. He was backed up in this by a number of witnesses from the War Department, and I was much impressed by what the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] said in connection with the argument when the question previously arose.

I find on page 26 of the hearings that Assistant Secretary Woodring speaks about airplanes and the need for airplanes. I am sure all of us believe that American aviation ought to make very much more rapid progress than it has heretofore made. There have been a number of investigations in connection with military aviation. I have in mind particularly the investigation of the Baker Board. It has been made apparent from the reports, based upon these investigations, that it is necessary to increase the number of our planes.

Mr. Woodring, in his testimony, found on page 26 of the hearings, speaking of the policy of the War Establishment, said:

This policy is based upon competitive bidding, and in order to properly protect the interests of the Government in the procurement of such a highly technical piece of equipment requires the bidder to submit with his bid a completed airplane for test.

Keep in mind, please, that with every bid that comes in there must come a completed airplane.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I pointed out that the War Department was spending about four and a half million dollars a year for experimental purposes.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well; I am going also to refer to that. I heard the Senator refer to it, and I am going to speak about it myself. There, at least, we are on common ground. So let us bear in mind that, according to the testimony, with each bid there must come a completed airplane.

There happened to be in my State a company which is now defunct because of this very imposition upon it in the submission of bids. The company had to present a completed airplane along with its bid. They are pretty hard-boiled in the War Department. The plane did not have quite the requisite possibilities of flight. It could not go quite high enough; it could not land in quite the right time, and so forth. Anyway, the concern I have in mind invested hundreds of thousands of dollars—and I mean literally hundreds of thousands of dollars—in attempting to compete, and finally was destroyed by reason of the conditions which prevailed in connection with the acceptance of bids.

The bidder is required to submit with his bid, as I said, a completed airplane. I am quoting once more from the testimony:

The bidder is required to submit with his bid a completed airplane on the line for test, as he submits his bid, and these airplanes are thoroughly tested and contracts awarded to the manufacturer who has produced the finest performing airplane, after we have evaluated all the planes in competition.

That is the first burden that is imposed on the manufacturer—that along with his bid, if he is patriotic enough to bid, he must submit an airplane.

There is no lack of supervision on the part of the War Department as to the cost of the planes.

I continue to quote from The Assistant Secretary of War:

To insure the reasonableness of the cost a careful financial audit is made of the cost figures of the manufacturer after we make an award.

So, as I have pointed out, there is not any lack of effort on the part of the War Department to find out what the actual costs are.

Continuing the quotation:

This policy is resulting in a constant striving on the part of the manufacturers to offer better and better performing aircraft. It places squarely on the shoulders of industry, where it logically belongs, the necessary research and development work and gives the Government the active use and benefit of all the brains of the industry.

Mr. President, we have in existence at the moment a special committee investigating the airplane disaster wherein our late colleague, Senator Cutting, lost his life. And we have come to realize—all those who served on that committee—how necessary it is not alone that this industry develop along the line of military aviation but also along the line of civil aviation. So when I heard The Assistant Secretary of War say this it struck a responsive chord in my heart, because unless the manufacturers of airplanes can be encouraged to develop safe airplanes we will have to depend wholly upon the experimental establishments in the Government—to do what? To develop military airplanes.

If we are passing a bill in the public interest, it would seem to me we ought to provide so far as we can for the development of an industry which will serve not only the Army and the Navy but which will develop safe airplanes for passenger use for the civil population.

I quote further from The Assistant Secretary of War:

For instance, we will send out invitations for bombers for delivery in 10 or 12 months, and probably three different concerns scattered well over the United States to bid on bombers. Certainly under that kind of a system the companies are going—with their engineering and designing and researching departments—are going to try and build, develop and build, and deliver on the line the finest bomber in order to win the competition and therefore get the business.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will it bother the Senator if I ask him a question there?

Mr. COPELAND. Not at all. Nothing that the Senator does bothers me. It is always a joy to yield to him.

Mr. FRAZIER. I appreciate that statement.

I wish to read section 10 (a) of the Army Air Service Laws approved July 2, 1926:

That in order to encourage development of aviation and improve the efficiency of the Army and Navy aeronautical matériel the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, prior to the procurement of new designs of aircraft or aircraft parts or aeronautical accessories, shall, by advertisement for a period of 30 days in at least three of the leading aeronautical journals and in such other manner as he may deem advisable, invite the submission in competition, by sealed communications, of such designs of aircraft, aircraft parts, and aeronautical accessories, together with a statement of the price for which such designs in whole or in part will be sold to the Government.

That provision for competition and 30 days' advertisement was approved July 2, 1926. Referring to the provision Assistant Secretary Woodring said:

For instance, we will send out invitations for bombers for delivery in 10 or 12 months, and probably three different concerns scattered well over the United States to bid on bombers.

The law provides that bids shall be advertised for at least 30 days. That is the kind of competition the War Department is requiring, according to Assistant Secretary Woodring, in buying the bombers and, I suppose, other planes. He said, further:

Certainly under that kind of a system, the companies are going, with their engineering and designing and researching departments, are going to try and build, develop and build, and deliver on the line the finest bomber in order to win the competition and therefore get the business.

It seems to me that is no competition at all. I cannot understand the proposition. The law provides for competition, and yet The Assistant Secretary of War says they send invitations. Is that calling for competitive bids? Is that advertising in the aeronautical papers? If so, then I do not understand the proposal.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator may have invitations to bid confused with invitations to the White House, or something of that kind.

Mr. FRAZIER. If the law requires an advertisement in aeronautical papers for 30 days, why not advertise instead of sending out invitations?

Mr. COPELAND. Let us discuss this matter on the merits.

Mr. FRAZIER. I thought that was related to the merits.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator does not believe for a moment that the officers of the War Department are trying to rob the Department or do something improper, does he? When the Senator reads from the rules of 1926 and talks about aviation in 1926, that is like talking about the flood when it comes to the geological and animal development of the world. The whole progress of modern aviation has taken place since the war. Let us not talk about that. That is like oxtail soup—it is from a long way back. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRAZIER. 1926 was since the World War. That was only 10 years ago.

Mr. COPELAND. I know. Has the Senator concluded what he wants to say?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; for the present.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well; then I shall endeavor to conclude.

We come to the point of the 10-percent limitation, and I quote from The Assistant Secretary:

The 10-percent limitation of profits on contracts will prevent the possibility of manufacturers recouping any of these experimental and development costs and ultimately result in the practical cessation of such research and development on the part of industry. This will mean that the Government will have to carry on its own research and development and that the only brains being applied to the advancement of our aircraft will be such brains as the Government may be able to assemble at Wright Field, which is our technical and procurement branch of the Air Corps.

I do not need to tell you that such a situation will materially retard progress in the development of military aircraft in this country and will result in our Air Corps being equipped with airplanes inferior in performance to those of other countries.

That is the only conclusion that can be reached. We now have a number of airplane manufacturing establishments throughout the country.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it not true that this amendment was inserted in the bill in the House by a member of a special subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs which thoroughly investigated the aircraft situation? Was it not developed that the aircraft section of the Army had disregarded competitive bids altogether and had let contracts which brought enormous profits to the manufacturers? Does not the Senator think it would be in the interest of time to reconsider the amendment and let the Senate vote on it?

Mr. COPELAND. The point the Senator has in mind would not be reached if we should reconsider the vote. It is not a question of the 10-percent profit. It is the whole problem of bidding and that sort of thing that the gentleman in the House must have had in mind. I do not know who offered the language.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COPELAND. No, Mr. President, I prefer not to yield at this time. I am tired and anxious to conclude.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York declines to yield.

Mr. COPELAND. If there are any abuses about the method of getting bids, that is one thing; but that has nothing to do with the matter now before us. The question involved here is how much profit the airplane contractors may have upon their product when it is finished? Let us assume that the bids were honestly called for or invited by the Department. Let us assume the invitations were sent out in the proper manner and competition was sought. Every one of the bidders has to bring a completed plane up to the line when he submits his bid. We are asked to say to him, "When we accept your bid, the profit you can make is limited to 10 percent", and it may also be said, "We are not satisfied with your plane as it is. You will have to make modifications." In that case, when he gets through, instead of having any profit he will be "in the red."

Mr. CONNALLY. What would happen to the bidders who did not get the contract? They would have manufactured planes also at no profit.

Mr. COPELAND. The only hope they have, may I say, is that the next time invitations for bids are sent out they may get a contract and have a chance, perhaps, to recoup the losses which they made the first time.

Let me continue reading from the hearings. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] asked:

You would not favor any limitation of profits?

Assistant Secretary WOODRING. We do favor a reasonable profit, yes; but at this stage I do not favor any limitation of profits in the contracts, and I will explain why, because I believe we have that limitation in our audit today.

Senator HAYDEN. That is a point that I wanted to question you about.

From your contact with those who have been manufacturing airplanes for the Army, are you of the opinion that they have made inordinate or extortionate profits, considering their expenditures for research?

The Assistant Secretary replied:

I can say definitely that I think they have not.

Senator McADOO. Considering also the superior types which have been evolved out of this method, which you must take into consideration?

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COPELAND. I wish the Senator would let me proceed in connection with this matter until I have completed it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. COPELAND. There is ample time. I hope I am not detaining the Senator. I have been detained here for 3 days, and I have not seen the Senator here much lately. Perhaps it will do him good to get a little of the same medicine that the rest of us have had. I am sorry I feel that way about it, but I really wish the Senator would wait a little bit, if he will.

Mr. TRUMAN. I shall wait until the Senator concludes.

Mr. COPELAND. The Assistant Secretary replied to the question I have read:

Gentlemen, you must remember there is an enormous expenditure in connection with the development of a bomber under this system, which I think is the best we can evolve. The man who does that has his tooling up and everything that he is required to spend which amounts to probably all of the way from $200,000 to $600,000 on that initial development of the plane and it may be worthless to him tomorrow—

Did the Senator from North Dakota notice that? The manufacturer may spend from two hundred to six hundred thousand dollars on a plane which is worthless to him the next day—because some other plant tomorrow, or next year, may win the competition for the bombers, and it may be that a plane will be developed that is more superior to this; and in order to keep that going, in the interest of national defense, that man certainly ought to be paid for that experimental and development work.

Further, on the next page, page 28, I quote:

Since the Government is practically the sole beneficiary of the progress of military aviation, it is proper that the Government, as I say, should bear these costs. In this connection I wish to point out that the cost of building an experimental airplane runs from $100,000 to $600,000, and that manufacturers cannot continue to build and offer these airplanes to the Government under a statute which precludes any possibility of reimbursement therefor.

And further, on page 29:

And, I think, to put on a 10-percent limitation would be to go back to the cost-plus contract.

It was that evil that the Senator from Michigan discussed—the cost-plus contract.

What you would have practically would be a cost-plus contract, if we forced this 10-percent limitation on them, and if a manufacturer on the Pacific coast got a contract he could come back here to the east coast and say, "Come on over to my factory and I will pay you 50 percent more per day, or double what wages you are getting now. What difference does it make to me? That will be added to my cost. I get 10 percent on the costs, and the more that I increase my costs the larger my 10 percent is." I think that is possible.

If the Senator from North Dakota wants that system, God bless him! He may take it; but I do not want it.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I have no desire to continue the discussion. It is very apparent that we shall not be able to reach a vote tonight, and I am perfectly willing that the matter shall go over.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote of the Senate on yesterday rejecting the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], inserting, on page 69, line 4, after the word "navigation", certain words and striking out, on page 69, line 23, the figures "$138,677,899" and inserting in lieu thereof "$208,677,899."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be received and entered.

AUTHORITY TO SIGN ENROLLED BILL DURING RECESS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], chairman of the Appropriations Committee, I ask unanimous consent that the Vice President be authorized to sign the enrolled bill H. R. 9863, the independent offices appropriation bill, after the recess of the Senate today, if the bill does not reach the Senate prior thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 9863) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, and it was signed by the Vice President.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States nominating Richard D. O'Connell, of Connecticut, to be State director, National Emergency Council, for Connecticut, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the nomination of Charles S. Reed, 2d, of Ohio, now a Foreign Service officer of class 8 and a consul, to be also a secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the following nominations:

Edward M. Curran, of the District of Columbia, to be judge of the police court for the District of Columbia, vice Gus A. Schuldt, term expired;

Martin Travieso, of Puerto Rico, to be an associate justice of the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico, vice Pedro de Aldrey, resigned.

Mr. McADOO, from the Committee on Patents, reported favorably the nomination of Charles H. Shaffer, of Maryland, to be examiner in chief, United States Patent Office.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there are no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the calendar.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 18, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Thomas G. Thomas, pastor, Caldwell Baptist Church, Caldwell, N. J., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, father of those who are Thy children by faith in Jesus Christ, we come into Thy presence this morning thanking Thee for all the blessings of life and for the special blessings of redemption through Jesus Christ, our Savior.

We come as a nation, our Father, thanking Thee this day for all Thy goodness to us, and the way in which Thou hast led us in the past. Today as these men gather here to deliberate upon the enactment of further legislation for the well-being and advancement of this Nation, we pray that Thy blessing shall be given to them and Thy divine wisdom and guidance rest upon them, for Thou hast said if we lack wisdom let us ask God, who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth none, and it shall be given to them.

Further we pray that Thou particularly shall bless our Nation, and the poor, the friendless, and the homeless, especially those today who are in the devastated areas of our country because of floods. We ask, our God, that our Nation may continue as the leader among the nations of the earth, holding aloft the light of liberty, justice, freedom, and truth, that we may, as a beacon light, guide other nations, that they may learn justice, and that they may show mercy and walk humbly before Thee, our God. We ask it humbly in Jesus' name and for His sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3669. An act providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 2664. An act to aid in defraying the expenses of the Third Triennial Meeting of the Associated Country Women of the World, to be held in this country in June 1936; and

S. 3173. An act for the relief of certain formerly enlisted members of Battery D, One Hundred and Ninety-seventh Coast Artillery (Antiaircraft), New Hampshire National Guard.

SOCIAL PROBLEMS IN A CHANGING WORLD

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an address made by myself, and include therein an address made by Hon. Harold Ickes, Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include an address by the Secretary of the Interior, Hon. Harold L. Ickes, before the convention of the United Synagogue of America at the Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C., March 16, 1936, as follows:

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Ladies and gentlemen, the torch of progress has been kept aflame not alone by the achievements of science and industry and culture but as much by the sympathy, the tolerance, and the cooperation of those who are eager to give new ideas a chance to prove their value. Such understanding, tolerance, and cooperation can be found only among those who are free from bigotry and whose desire for the betterment of humankind embraces all. These are the people to whom we of the United Synagogue of America and civilization generally are indebted.

One of them is with us this evening.

It is my privilege to present him, the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ICKES. I bring you the personal greetings of the President of the United States. The President instructed me to express his hope for a highly successful gathering.

In about 3 weeks Jews in all parts of the world will observe the Feast of the Passover. This feast commemorates the liberation of the Israelites from their bondage in Egypt and their wanderings through the desert for 40 years. As I understand it, that migration was necessary for the purpose of permitting a new generation of free men to be born and to achieve adulthood, so that when the Jews entered the Promised Land they would have overcome the habits and inhibitions of servitude and would have put on the spiritual habiliments of liberty.

Today we of America are also wandering in the desert, even though it is a social and not a physical desert. Like those forefathers of yours, to whose will to win through freedom in the Promised Land you will give just honor at the Feast of the Passover, we are today struggling to throw off the restraints which have prevented us from achieving a better and a more worthwhile social order. May we have the courage and endurance, such as was possessed by your ancestors, to keep up the struggle for 40 years, if need be, but let us hope that in a much shorter period we may find ourselves in the promised land toward which we have been striving.

It required the economic crisis that blighted us in the fall of 1929 to make us realize how far our feet had strayed from the path that had been laid out for us by those heroic ancestors of ours who suffered at Valley Forge in order that we might enjoy the blessings of political freedom. The concept of the founding fathers of America was that of a happy and contented people sustaining themselves from the rich and abundant land that seemed to stretch further west the deeper the restless pioneers penetrated inland from the Atlantic seacoast. Land there seemed to be in plenty for all who cared to possess it; and to support himself and his family from the land was the ambition of the average American.

Of course, it was anticipated that there would be merchants and bankers and manufacturers on a moderate scale to serve the economic needs of the landowners, but even these entrepreneurs, important as they might be in the economic life of the country, would be subordinate to and dependent upon ownership of land and its cultivation. There was no situation in any part of the world from which it could reasonably be surmised that great manufacturing, commercial, and banking organizations later would grow up. Since neither past nor contemporaneous history contained a single reference to such an economic and social system as exists today, it is only fair to assume that the founding fathers never envisaged the America of the present.

Moderate wealth they could understand and they expected the valuable and apparently boundless resources of America to yield riches to those who, by their industry or acumen, might be able to earn more than average rewards. Doubtless they also expected, on the basis of their experience, that there would be a class existing at or below the margin of actual want. But between these two strata, the one moderately rich and the other not too poor, both of which groups would be relatively small in size, they saw the average American family living on land that it owned and wresting from that land, without undue hardship or devastating toll, food, clothing, and shelter sufficient for the needs of the family, with a comfortable margin over to provide moderate luxuries and security against illness and old age.

However, the economic character of the country changed radically and almost completely following the Civil War. The industrial era had dawned, not only here but in other parts of the civilized world. With our vast natural resources it was inevitable that we would enter the keen competition of the new economic order with a decided advantage. The energy, resourcefulness, and general intelligence of our people, plus our inventive genius, were additional boons to us in this race for supremacy. An eagerly adventurous people, it is not to be doubted that we entered this new economic phase eagerly and with high hopes. We not only felt that we would survive in the struggle with our competitors but that we would soon have them at a disadvantage. Probably if anyone gave even a thought to the social consequences that would result from such a radical deviation from the course that we had charted for ourselves it was only in passing. It is fair to say that no one actually knew where we were headed; it may even be affirmed with confidence that no one could have foretold our destination.

But if we saw only the brilliantly hued rainbow when we started on our new course, looking backward now, we can discern with clear, if not altogether satisfied, vision whither the path actually led that we so trustingly sought with eager feet. No one can now boast of an America that even approximately fulfills the dreams of those who gave us a land which they not only hoped but believed, as they expressed it in the Declaration of Independence, would be one where it would be recognized that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these rights are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

The concept was of an America that in a few generations would be occupied by happy and contented landowners, but instead of such a desirable state of society, one of the major problems of government for many years has been to prevent our fine and free and still semi-independent agricultural class from being pushed back into that state of peasantry which hundreds of thousands of immigrants from every nook and corner of Europe in years past have sought to escape by coming to these shores. And while there are heard in every part of the land the despairing cries of our farmers who are struggling gallantly to keep from being totally submerged in the economic quicksands to withstand which they are exerting every ounce of their strength, we find conditions in our mines, in our factories, and in our great commercial centers that are even less encouraging. Instead of a citizenry contented with modest but adequate fortunes, with a disparity between the rich and the poor which while, apparent, is not unreasonable, we find an America containing a small but very rich class and a disproportionately large but very poor class with a group in between possessing fortunes that are comfortable as compared with the very poor, but insignificant as measured against the very rich.

A dispassionate appraisal of our existing social and economic order would lead to the conclusion that we Americans, instead of keeping our eyes fixed on the promised land, until recently had actually turned our backs on it and were counter-marching in the direction of Egypt and its Pharaohs.

Instead of a population in large measure supporting itself by its own labor applied to land or other means of production, the ownership of which is in the hands of the producers, we find an industrial system which takes deadly toll of those who are helplessly bound to its service. Little children are worked for long hours at tasks beyond their strength at pitifully small wages. Women, still at a disadvantage in our machine era, are similarly exploited. They, too, are held to grinding labor, in what in effect are tests of physical endurance, for wages that barely keep soul and body together. Thousands of the strongest and most virile of our manhood are regimented in factories under a pace-setting system which racks the body and undermines the nerves. The insistent demand is for younger and stronger men, who in their turn are ruthlessly and as speedily as possible drained of their physical energies, only to be cast aside for ever-younger substitutes at an age when under normal conditions they would just be entering the full maturity of their manhood. And as compensation for this draining of nervous force and this erosion of body the workman all too often is paid a wage upon which he finds it impossible to support his family properly, to say nothing of being able to lay something aside for periods of involuntary unemployment, for times of sickness, and for inevitable old age. In other words, a great army of American workmen find it impossible, under our economic system, to maintain their families according to our theoretical American standard of living.

I sometimes wonder whether we Americans are not the most romantic people in the world. We started out with the hope that our standard of living would not only be the highest in the world but that it would be so high that practically every American would be able to live comfortably above the margin of existence. Perhaps this was true in the earlier days, and perhaps it would be true even now if we had not wandered so far from the course laid down for us by the founding fathers. Then, having made up our minds that the American standard of living would conform to our ideal, or in fact had already done so, we built up an unshakable belief that the American standard of living was not only the highest in the world but that it was as high as any reasonable human being should expect it to be.

Unfortunately, this is not the fact. As wealth more and more has been concentrated in the hands of the few, the number of Americans living at or below the margin of existence has steadily increased. According to the findings of the nonpartisan Brookings Institution, as published in America's Capacity to Consume, "at 1929 prices a family income of $2,000 may be regarded as sufficient to supply only basic necessities. However accurate this generalization may be, it is significant to note that more than 16,000,000 families, or practically 60 percent of the total number, were below this standard of expenditures."

Here is a drab picture indeed of that Garden of Eden from which we were turned out in 1929 and back to which the Liberty Leaguers so ardently hope to entice us. Almost two-thirds of the total number of American families at the height of our so-called prosperity did not earn enough to supply themselves with the basic necessities of life. And at that same period it is estimated that from two to two and one-half million Americans, able to work and willing to work, could find no work to which to set their hands. They were left to console themselves with the reflection that they constituted the great and growing army of the technologically unemployed—living, if hungry, examples of the productivity of the inventive genius of America, the tender-heartedness of her rugged individualists, and the humane resourcefulness of her then controlling social and political institutions.

It would not be so bad if we frankly faced the facts, because then we might hope that in time we would devise a remedy. To make matters worse, we continue to assure ourselves, notwithstanding that the majority of our people, even in so-called prosperous times, are below the margin of a decent existence, that our standard of living is the highest that the world has ever known. The inference that we want to be drawn from this legend is that our standard is also as high as anyone could reasonably ask; that America has fulfilled her destiny as a land of contented, happy, and prosperous human beings, rejoicing in the possession of both political and economic freedom. This is dosing with political soothing sirup to dull the sensibilities.

It is time that we were quit of mooning with our heads in the clouds, boasting about the American standard of living. It is time that we faced realities—that we took an honest inventory of our social and economic conditions with a view to applying remedies where remedies are needed. "Standard of living" is a relative term. Even if it be true that the American standard of living is the highest on record, that is not the question that confronts us today. What we are facing is the proposition whether the American standard of living is such as to assure the minimum requirements of all of our people as to comfort, health, and general well-being. If our standard of living is not that high, then it is not high enough, whatever the standard of living may have been in other ages and may be now in other countries.

Sixty percent of the people of the richest country in the world living at or below the margin of existence in the prosperity year of 1929. And since 1929 we have been going through the worst economic crisis in our history.

The implications in the cold and objective statement that 60 percent or more of the people in the United States are living at or below the margin of existence do not have to be spelled out to such an audience as this. You know that it means malnutrition in the child and undernourishment in the adult. It means insufficient clothing and shelter. It means a lack of medical care. It means that people must forego those normal recreations which keep the body healthy, the mind clear, and the spirit uplifted. It means a curtailment of educational and cultural opportunities.

The life that is being led today by a majority of our fellow citizens is properly analyzed in Land of the Free, a recent book by Herbert Agar, who says: "It is not, in plain fact, the sort of life which gives a man a fair chance to save his soul. The poor man in a decent society . . . may possibly deserve the Biblical appellation of 'blessed'; the poor city dweller in an industrial plutocracy is clearly cursed. He not only lacks comfort and security and hope but his surroundings tend steadily to debauch him. Who but a saint can keep kindness or dignity or moral strength if he lives like an animal?"

As a single example of the unspeakable conditions under which millions of Americans actually live who are supposed today to be enjoying the highest standard of living in the history of the world, I will quote from a study made by Mr. M. A. Hallgren of 15 families living in one of the worst slums in Philadelphia:

"In a period of 3 years there had been reported in the 15 families 13 cases of illegitimacy and attacks on girls and women, 11 cases of desertion, 3 of imbecility, 18 of communicable diseases, 7 of absolute poverty, 5 of cruelty and incorrigibility, and 5 of chronic drunkenness." The district in which these families lived is described as follows: "The . . . tenements were almost all narrow three-story affairs, one room to a floor. They were without modern heating and plumbing, the majority of them having to depend on outdoor toilets. They were dirty, dingy, and dark, facing upon narrow lanes and courts, some of which were no more than 5 feet across. Approximately 140,000 people lived in the district."

Examples such as the foregoing could be multiplied by citing incontrovertible facts from every large city in the United States and from practically every town and village because even the countryside has its slums. Nor do the slums alone pose an accusing question as to what we are going to do about such of our social institutions as need overhauling. To our shame be it said that many other striking examples of social and economic maladjustment could be cited. I call to the attention of those who are suffering from political astigmatism the following facts presented by Dr. Goodwin Watson in a recent paper prepared for the American Council on Education:

"Less than one-fourth of the child population receive such minimum health service as annual physical examinations, vaccination, and diphtheria immunization.

"At least 3,000,000 children of school age are not in school at all, due to handicaps, and in some cases to the fact that no school is provided near them.

"The special education needed by 90,000 crippled children, 45,000 visually handicapped children, and 3,000,000 with impaired hearing is still not provided.

"In the United States we have more than 4,000,000 persons over 10 years of age who have never learned to read and write."

In other words, on the scientific frontier we have made tremendous strides. In invention, in the discovery of manufacturing processes and in research we are magnificent. On the industrial frontier we have been using seven-league boots, but on the social front we are just barely crawling.

Now, just what are we going to do about it all? Is our vision so limited and so uninspired that we can see nothing for the future except a return to those conditions that we called prosperous prior to 1929; those times when what was gaudy and cheap and flamboyant in our social system was flaunted in the front parlor while we swept under the back stairs our slums, our unemployment, and our submarginal living for a majority of our people? Or shall we, chastened in spirit by our narrow escape from a social and economic cataclysm that seemed about to engulf all of us in a common disaster, really set to work to build on this continent such a nation as the humane and socially minded of our founding fathers saw in their dreams—a nation consisting not of a numerically small class holding most of the wealth of the country, with 60 percent or more lacking adequate food and clothing shelter, but a nation which, except for that mere handful of misfits and derelicts that are constantly being sloughed off of every social group, shall be composed of citizens who are economically free because they possess the means of supplying themselves with those things that make life worth while and who are, therefore, truly politically free?

Aspirations to make this country what our forefathers intended it to be—a land of equal opportunity for all, regardless of race or color or creed; a land where every man may aspire to at least a modest ownership of private property and a chance at that work for which he is best adapted in order to earn a comfortable living for himself and his family—a living that will make it possible for him adequately to educate his children, to lay up something for his old age, and to have a little left over for legitimate luxuries—such aspirations have in some quarters come to be referred to sneeringly as "the more abundant life." The inference intended is that to undertake to provide in fact such a standard of living, as mistakenly, we have been boasting already exists, is something naive and childishly amusing. Yet, despite the barbed shafts of ridicule, the labored witticisms and the sneering quips of a certain type of cynical critic, I, for one, do not hesitate to declare that there should be a more abundant life for those millions upon millions of American men, women, and children who are living below the margin of a decent existence.

Since when did the desire to improve economic and social conditions indicate such naïveté as to make him who avows his hope that here in America we may in fact build up the finest social order that the world has ever seen, a legitimate target for satirical gibes? After all, it was to establish political and economic freedom on this continent, to build up a social order within which even the humblest citizen would at least have sufficient food and clothing and shelter and his just share of God's free air and sunshine that our fathers endured the hardships and privations of the Revolutionary War. It was to maintain the social order forged by our ancestors in the blast furnace of that struggle that Abraham Lincoln gave up his life. And in this generation no man need hang his head in shame because he believes that the ideal of those who founded and preserved the Union, the ideal of the more abundant life, is still worth striving for.

Implicit in the New Deal are the desire and the purpose to improve living conditions in America. Frankly recognizing the inequalities, the injustices—yes, the cruelties—of the social order that it inherited from its predecessors, this administration has sought to redress the most glaring abuses and to lead back the people, even if only a little way, toward the path from which unheedingly we strayed in pursuit of a gilt-edged rainbow that always was just around the corner.

This administration is urging the adoption of the pending child-labor amendment to the Constitution that would put an end to the cruel exploitation of millions upon millions of American men, women, and children who are living below the margin of a decent existence.

This administration is urging the adoption of the pending child-labor amendment to the Constitution that would put an end to the cruel exploitation of underprivileged children. It has sent hundreds of thousands of young men from the slums of our cities into C. C. C. camps, where they can do useful conservation and reforestation work while upbuilding their own bodies and invigorating their own souls. We stand for old-age pensions and unemployment insurance to lift the dread of an uncertain future from those who live in economic insecurity. We have tried to make it possible for labor to bargain on some basis approaching equality with its employers. As enduring evidence of what this administration has already done that is of definite and permanent benefit to the country, I will refer, merely in passing, to some of the accomplishments of the Public Works Administration, whose purpose it has been, not only to give work to the involuntarily idle, but to make this Nation a better place in which to live. We have built many thousands of schools in which to educate the youth of the land; more thousands of sewers and waterworks to protect the health of our citizens; still other thousands of hospitals, sanitariums, public buildings, bridges, and power plants, as well as other physical improvements to add to the ease and comfort of American citizens.

In numerous other ways we have made sincere efforts to mitigate and correct the destructive and ruinous forces that had secured control of the Government. And while this administration has thus been striving for the economic and social welfare of the people, it has provided relief to the unemployed so that no one has lacked essential food or clothing or shelter. In building for the future we have not lost sight of the fact that, in the past, money prosperity and social bankruptcy have gone hand in hand. We venture to hope for a future in which we will have both material and social prosperity.

Opposing the social regeneration of the Nation stand the exploiting classes, composed of those men who already are too rich and powerful for the good of the people but who, nevertheless, are greedy for more riches and more power. These would turn back the hands of the clock. They have always bitterly opposed every social advance. They are against slum clearance, against low-rent housing, against cheap electric power; they are for low wages and long hours for those who carry the heaviest burdens of life, for child labor and the economic exploitation of women; they are for laissez faire, for the status quo ante; they care not, nor have they ever cared, how the great mass of the American people live. Little they reck whether 60 percent of our citizens are living at or below the margin of existence. Let it go to 70 or even 80 percent, provided there is no interference with their own baneful economic habits. To be sure, people must be fed and clothed and sheltered, but expend on them no more than is barely enough to keep them alive in order that they may continue by their toil to add to the wealth and the power of those who have built themselves up on the exploitation of their fellow men and by means of special privileges which have been granted to them by a complacent Government.

Is the America that we shall pass on to our children to be an economic feudalism with the powerful liege lords of finance in control of our resources; with a small but very rich group at one end of the scale and an ever larger and poorer class of dependent vassals at the other? Or is it to be an America of contented and happy citizens supporting themselves in comfort by their own efforts? Are the property and the means of production of America to become more and more concentrated in the hands of a privileged class, or is there to be a wider diffusion of them among the mass of the people, as those who founded this country intended there should be? Is it to be the function of our Government further to foster, protect, and encourage a concentration of wealth that has already reached a point where it threatens the very life of the Nation as it has already put its soul in jeopardy, or is the ideal to be that of serving the best interests of the greatest number of our citizens?

Here are fundamental social and political issues upon which the future of America depends, and the solution of which cannot longer be postponed. In the decision that must be made such a group as I have the privilege of addressing tonight will be profoundly influential. The situation can only properly be called a crisis. In this crisis in our national life you and I have grave responsibilities that we cannot evade without forfeiting our birthright. May all patriotic and right-minded citizens join hands to bring our America into the promised land.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. At this time?

Mr. NICHOLS. At this time, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes the gentleman will withhold that until later.

Mr. NICHOLS. I will withhold it if the Chair will recognize me later.

Mr. BINDERUP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, immediately after the reading of the Journal and disposition of other matters on the Speaker's desk, I may be allowed to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL REGISTER

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the first issue of the Federal Register came from the printers Saturday. Members of the House know I have taken the position that the compiling and printing of Executive orders and regulations through the medium of the Federal Register is a waste of public funds and I introduced a bill providing for the repeal of the act before it even went into effect.

Mr. CELLER, of New York, is the author of the bill and chairman of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee that considered the legislation. When the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. SUMNERS of Texas] asked me what subcommittee I should like to have the bill referred to, I told him to send it to Mr. CELLER's committee, the author of the bill, as I was willing to face the lion in his own den. The hearing was held. I was the only one who appeared in favor of repealing the act, while Mr. CELLER made it his business to have plenty of heavy artillery present to sustain his contention that the Federal Register was a necessity. I pointed out that no Member of Congress ordinarily receives more than one request a month for a Federal regulation, and not more than one request in 6 months for an Executive order, and I offered at that hearing, if anyone present would write down the name of an Executive order or regulation, I would get it for him immediately. No one responded.

The Federal Register Act grows out of a request of a justice of the Supreme Court, during the consideration of the "hot oil" case, asking as to where the Court might secure a copy of the regulation that was referred to. Had there been a secretary or a clerk of any Congressman or Senator present who would have had the nerve to address the Court, he or she could have told the Court where the regulation could have been found. Naturally, there was considerable newspaper notoriety because no one could tell the Supreme Court where to secure a Government regulation. The law providing for the printing of Executive orders and regulations having legal effect in the Federal Register followed.

In the language of the street I was of the opinion that there was going to be plenty of "bull" in the Federal Register and my view is confirmed by the first issue of the Register. History will record that the first Executive order published in column one of the first issue of the Federal Register has to do with Bulls Island, which is 3 miles off the South Carolina mainland, and the President provided by that Executive order that the island is to be reserved for the Department of Agriculture pursuant to the Migratory Bird Conservation Act. I doubt if anybody within the vicinity of Bulls Island will ever see a copy of the Federal Register unless it would be the Congressman or Senator. It took two pages of the Register to print the Executive order in regard to Bulls Island.

We also find in the first issue a regulation of the Income Tax Division of the Treasury Department. The author of the bill [Mr. CELLER] is a lawyer and is a member of a law firm, and if that firm handles any income-tax cases, he knows just as well as I know that the private corporations that have been supplying all lawyers, accountants, and business houses with copies of income-tax regulations in loose-leaf form will have this regulation in his office before the week is out. A number of private corporations print these regulations and supply those interested with them.

Yesterday the gentleman from New York was granted 10 minutes by unanimous consent to make a speech in regard to the Federal Register. At the time he asked for this consent he evaded the question as to the subject he proposed to discuss, but it so happened that the gentleman from New York had told me it was his purpose to discuss the Federal Register, that he would mention my name, and suggested that I be present. I did not object. I was present and did not interrupt the gentleman at any time, but at the conclusion of his 10 minutes I felt that it was only fair, in view of the fact that he had mentioned my name on several occasions, that I should have an opportunity to reply. Every other Member of the House of Representatives, even the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], who had 20 minutes to speak, was willing that I have this opportunity except Mr. CELLER himself, who had mentioned my name. The gentleman from New York insisted that if I were to have 5 minutes, then he wanted 5 minutes additional; and when the Speaker told the gentleman his request could not be coupled with mine, then the gentleman requested that I yield 2 minutes of my 5 minutes to him, although the gentleman from New York had just addressed the House for 10 minutes. Of course, I declined to yield 2 minutes of the 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York; and thereupon Mr. CELLER showed very poor sportsmanship by objecting to my request, and I was denied the opportunity to reply.

There is plenty I could say in reference to the administration of the Archives Act and the Federal Register Act, which is part of the Archives, but I am going to be kind and not do so, other than to remark I do deplore the fact that there are going to be over 250 employees paid out of the appropriations for that purpose during the next fiscal year and not one of them is subject to civil-service laws and regulations. Most of the appointments have been made, and I am not going to say who might have been successful in getting the jobs, but one thing I will say is: That in no way enters into my views upon this question. In fact, I do not think I gave anyone a recommendation for a position in that office, nor did I ever talk jobs to the Archivist, Mr. Connor, or the gentleman in charge of the issuing of the Federal Register, Mr. Kennedy. I might have given someone a recommendation for a position as a stenographer or clerk, but if so, I do not recall it at this time; so, as I say, the question of jobs did not enter my mind when I took the position that the Federal Register was not necessary and the cost to the taxpayers was not justified.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] told the House yesterday that $100,000 had been appropriated for the purpose of carrying on for 4 months. I cannot understand why the gentleman did not be fair and tell all of the facts to the Members of the House when he discussed that part of the subject. He knows and I know there was one appropriation for $100,000, another for $150,000, and a third appropriation included in the general Archives appropriation of $39,760 for the Federal Register, and each and every one of these appropriations has been passed since we convened the present session of Congress the first of the year.

Aside from this, however, let me call your attention to the fact that they did not get all the money that they requested and had the Appropriations Committee given them all the money that they desired, it would have been several hundred thousand dollars more, so you have an idea of just exactly what this Federal Register is going to cost the taxpayers of the country.

I am a good loser. I have made my fight for the time being, and I have not been successful.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER] stated to the House when one of the appropriations was under consideration in the legislative bill that it was on trial—that they did not give them all the money they desired, and if at the expiration of 8 months it was found that the Federal Register was not necessary, steps would be taken to have the law repealed. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW], also a member of the Appropriations Committee, sustained my contention in his speech that it was unnecessary and an unwarranted charge upon the taxpayers of the country.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW], as you know, is an old newspaperman and followed his profession for over 20 years in Washington. He knows the value of publications, and I am sure he would not reach his conclusion until he had given the matter a great deal of thought.

Now, what has happened in reference to the first issue of the Federal Register? The cost is $1 per month or $10 a year. Fifteen thousand copies of the Register are now being printed of each issue, at least four times a week, and up to the close of business last night I was advised by the Superintendent of Documents of the Government Printing Office, who handles subscriptions to all such publications, that they had on their list 69 paid subscribers, despite the fact that the Federal Register has been advertised extensively in the metropolitan press of the country as well as every trade publication in the country for the last 8 months, and the great press associations carried an item which was sent to all the papers in the United States advising them that the Federal Register was being printed, the cost, and so forth.

As I say, I am going to be a good loser. I want to express the hope, however, that those of us who are fortunate enough to be returned to the next Congress will give special attention to this item; and if it is found that the Federal Register is unnecessary, then repeal the act. If it develops the Federal Register is a necessity, I will be the first one to admit I was in error and I will support the appropriations that will be necessary to carry out the provisions of the law.

I regret that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] was not sportsman enough to permit me to reply to his argument at the time he addressed the House for 10 minutes so that the readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD would have had both sides at that time. My only purpose in making this statement is that the readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, not having the entire picture before them, will not conclude that the views of the gentleman from New York are supported by the entire membership of this body.

INDIVIDUALISM

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a radio address I made last night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following address which I made over a National Broadcasting Co. network March 17, during the program Congress Speaks:

Friends and neighbors, from the days of its earliest settlers New Englanders have asserted their individualism and independence. To their descendants have been transmitted many of their outstanding characteristics. Of the hardy pioneers it has been well said that: "Encompassed by enemies they were never conquered; beset by evils they were always undaunted; forsaken by friends they forsook not themselves."

Those States whose independence they secured are the monuments of their labors, and the children to whom they left them rise up and call them blessed.

Sound common sense; a keen perception of right; promptness of action; calm, steady courage; tenacity of purpose; thrift; and unaltering perseverance and a strong conviction that God helps them who help themselves are the characteristics of those New Englanders who are rightly known as rugged individualists. They still believe in the Constitution of the United States, in the Declaration of Independence, in the Bill of Rights, and in the constitutions of the several States, and if that makes them old-fashioned, rugged individualists, they should thank God for it.

The value of individualism is found in its stimulation to initiative, to the development of personality and intellect, of thought and spirituality, added to which is the firm and fixed ideal of equality of opportunity.

Despite all the arguments to the contrary, in the last analysis it is true that not nations, not armies have advanced the race, but here and there in the course of the ages some individual has stood up who has cast his shadow over the entire world. As we read history we know that the worth of a state in the long run has been and is measured in terms of the character of the individuals who compose it. It is demonstrably true that the success of any and all adventures in political economy and government depend fundamentally upon the individual and his associates. There is no initiative in the mass. All theories to the contrary notwithstanding, leadership incident to, and for which individualism is responsible, is found in the individual, and in him alone. To this conclusion the facts of the case irresistibly drive the impartial and honest and patriotic citizen, who is not shocked off his mental balance by the ballyhoo of the socialistic propagandist.

No one can deny or refute the premise that the American system of government is the greatest success from the experimental standpoint in the history of the world, thanks to the rugged individuals who laid its foundation. A weak nation has mastered a continent and achieved a greater degree of progress in 160 years than had been accomplished in the 2,000 years that have gone before. The American people have enjoyed a greater and more progressive diffusion of wealth, comfort, security, educational opportunities, and a higher standard of living than ever has been enjoyed by average men and women at any time or anywhere.

All the theories of all the theorists to the contrary notwithstanding, what has been accomplished is directly to be credited to the virtues, the character, the initiative, the energies of the individuals who have lived under a system of government they themselves established, which brought unlimited opportunity to them all.

"Patriotism", said George W. Curtis, "in an American is simply fidelity to the American idea." Whatever in its government or policy tends to limit and destroy freedom and equality is anti-American and unpatriotic, for, in America, liberty and equality of opportunity are inseparable ideas.

"In this country of ours", said Calvin Coolidge, "sovereignty rests in the individual, and his rights must be protected and respected." So I say to you that the word "individualism" is one of which we of New England may well be proud and conjure with. It is only when we take time to stop and think—which we seldom do—that we appreciate the significance of it and all that it means to us and to these United States from a material standpoint.

When I hear people speaking disdainfully of rugged individualism, I wonder what this country would have become had it not been for the courage, initiative, and inventive genius of those whom some would now attempt to ridicule.

What would New England have amounted to had it not been for hundreds of men and women who, as individuals, made her progress possible? Time does not permit me to discuss them at length, but—lest we forget.

There was Philip Kertland, who commenced the manufacture of shoes in Lynn in 1640. Then came the shoemaking shops; then a splitting machine and the great inventions of Gordon McKay and Blake, and the development of an industry producing $500,000 worth of goods annually; more than half of all the shoes made in the country, one of the Nation's most important industrial assets.

Then John Simmons, of Boston, manufactured the first ready-made clothes; came the perfection of the sewing machine; incidentally Simmons College was endowed, and Andrew Carney, another pioneer, founded the Carney Hospital.

Only 8 years after the settlement of Boston, or in 1638, the first fulling mill was established in Rowley, Mass. In 1794 the first power woolen mill was established in Byfield and the first carding machine in this country was here put into operation, most of the machinery having been built in Newburyport. There was a day when New England woolens were valued at $218,000,000 out of a total product for the whole country of $380,000,000.

John Hall, the famous pine-tree-shilling mintmaster, established his silversmith trade in the Massachusetts Bay Colony as early as 1642. Paul Revere, who later was succeeded by his son Paul, established himself as a silver and gold smith in Boston about 1725.

As early as 1786 cotton machinery was being built at Bridgewater, and at cotton mill was erected at Beverly in 1787, which was a year at least before the Carolinas and Georgias first cultivated the cotton plant on American soil. It was not until 1793 that Eli Whitney invented his famous cotton gin, which made it possible for the South to supply the world.

In 1794 Nehemiah Dodge, of Providence, plated gold on sheet copper, and the making of inexpensive jewelry began. In 1807 Obed Robinson, of Attleboro, built the first shop ever erected for the express purpose of manufacturing jewelry.

Thirteen years before the Pilgrims landed in Plymouth Popham and Gilbert established a fishing colony in Maine, and in 1614 John Smith founded a similar colony at Pemaquid. The first settlers of Gloucester were shipbuilders and carpenters, and Marblehead contended with Gloucester for two centuries as a fishing port. Francis Ingalls set up the first tannery in the Colonies on Humphreys Brook in Swampscott, Mass., and shortly afterward Experience Mitchell established a tannery in Plymouth in 1623.

Elias Howe, aided by George Fisher, built the first complete sewing machine in May 1845. This invention was improved by Isaac Singer.

The process for solidifying rubber was the invention of Nelson Goodyear, which step in a series of inventions made possible the development and the manufacture of the countless articles which are now made.

It was an individual who had the idea of making a business conveying parcels and established the first express business on the Boston & Providence Railroad between Boston and New York.

The growth and development of the paper-making industry and the credit for the initiative shown must be given to Stephen Crane and Abijah Burbank, who began their paper-making industry at Sutton sometime after 1760. Around 1750 Gowen Brown made one of the earliest clocks, which is still preserved. Benjamin Willard, with his shop in Roxbury, started business around 1773 and Eli Terry around 1793.

John Harris, Robert Cowan, Samuel Blythe made harpsichords and spinnets in 1769 and John Hawkins patented an upright piano in 1800. You know that the first nails made by machinery in this country, probably the first in the world, were made by Samuel Rogers at East Bridgewater in 1794.

In these days when man makes electricity his servant, we seldom think of that pioneer, Thomas Davenport, of Williamstown and Brandon, Vt., who invented the electric motor. Nor do we pay the respect due to the memory of Samuel Morey, of Orford, N. H., who, as early as 1795, was the inventor and patentee of the steam engine and steam pump and later of the first internal-combustion engine.

Samuel F. B. Morse invented the telegraph in 1837. He was a native of Charlestown, Mass.; and so I might go on through all the different fields of industry, invention, education, religion, and progress and tell about the banks, finance, agriculture, quarries, mines, and different businesses and enterprises which have made New England and helped to make the world a decent place in which to live. After all is said and done, it cannot be controverted successfully that the idea and ideas of New England individuals have dominated and still continue to dominate the world.

I have spoken of these individuals and of the industries which they established illustratively, since we are so prone to take so much for granted and to be so unappreciative of our blessings. And, moreover, to call your attention to the fact that individual initiative, then as now, lays the foundation on which is erected the superstructure of all progress—intellectual, spiritual, moral, and material—which makes for prosperity and contentment and advancement, such as we have a right to seek to attain; but we must never forget that somewhere, sometime, some place, some individual—some man or some woman—pays the price.

It has been well said that, while the economic development of the past has lifted the general standard of comfort far beyond the dreams of our forefathers, the only road to further advancement in the standards of living is by the greater invention, greater elimination of waste, greater production, and better distribution of commodities and services.

Let me say to you, however, that progress such as we would have and ought to enjoy necessitates and requires strict guardianship of those vital principles of individualism, with its safeguard of true equality of opportunity. To preserve the former, as someone has said, we must regulate that type of autocratic activity that would dominate. To preserve the latter the Government must keep out of production and distribution of commodities and services. This is the dead line between our system of government and socialism, and there is no neutral area.

Regulation to prevent domination and unfair practices, yet preserving rightful initiative.

So surely as the sun rises and sets, nationalization of industry and business spells the end of your governmental system, and do not forget it.

Whether we like it or not, and whether we agree with it or not, and I most certainly believe it to be true, individualism has been the primary force of American civilization for three centuries.

It is our American sort of individualism that has supplied the motivation of our political, economic, and spiritual institutions throughout all these years. It has met every crisis. It has proved its ability to improve its institutions with every changing scene.

Those who would strangle individualism and establish a different order, insidiously or otherwise, know not whereof they speak, for our very form of government is the product of the individualism of our people, and grew out of a demand for an equal opportunity for, and a fair chance for, all.

Do not be misled. Compared with the opportunities for advancement in all lines of human activity which the next century offers those who will work out its salvation, the accomplishments of the last hundred years will sink into utter insignificance. No man dare prophesy or predict what some other man may not be able to accomplish. The possibilities are beyond our ability to comprehend, the opportunities as countless as the sands on the shores of the sea. That man is ungrateful who does not appreciate what a privilege it is to live in so wonderful an age.

The American pioneer has been called "The epic expression of individualism", and the pioneer spirit is the response to the challenge of opportunity, to the challenge of nature, to the challenge of life itself, as well as to the call of the frontiers.

No, my friends, so long as the spirit of individualism exists we need have no fear as to the fate of this Republic. The spirit of individualism need never die for lack of something for it to achieve. There will always be frontiers to conquer and to hold so long as men as individuals think and plan and dare.

Democracy itself is merely the mechanism which individualism invented, as a device that would carry on the necessary political work of its social organization. Democracy arises out of and rests upon individualism, and prospers through it alone. To curb those forces which would destroy equality of opportunity and to maintain the emulative and creative faculties of our people are the objects we must attain.

Go tell the pessimist that we have a vast domain of 3,000,000 square miles—this Nation of ours—literally bursting with treasure still waiting the hand of the individual and the magic of capital and industry to be converted into the practical uses of mankind; that what natural resources we lack we have the brains to manufacture, synthetically; a country rich in soil and climate; in the unharnessed energy of its mighty rivers and in all the varied products of the field, the forest, the factory, and the farm.

We have the manpower, the womanpower, and the brains. And, as individuals, realizing the tremendous responsibility that confronts us and rests upon each and all and everyone of us, we are determined to go forward, to perpetuate blessings already received, and to make sure and secure the achievement of a greater America, yet to be.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, immediately after the special order granted the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BINDERUP], I may be allowed to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

BY THEIR WORKS YOU SHALL KNOW THEM

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, as the Representative of the people of the Sixth Congressional District of Pennsylvania, comprising the thirty-fourth, fortieth, and forty-sixth wards in West Philadelphia, the majority of whom sent me down here by their vote to represent them, I am herewith rendering an account of my stewardship since January 3, 1935.

They and they alone should know what I have done in the Halls of Congress. They and they alone should know whether I had their interest at heart or the interests of the special privileged when I voted on the different measures that came before the House.

As our old friend Al Smith, the Happy Warrior of other days, used to say, "Let us look at the record."

I worked for and voted for the following administration measures:

First. The $4,880,000,000 work-relief bill.

Second. Immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates, commonly called the bonus, and, of course, voted to override the President's veto.

Third. Home-mortgage-relief bill.

Fourth. The social-security bill, or old-age-pension bill.

Fifth. To prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war and thus provide for the national defense and promote peace.

Sixth. Signed petition no. 7 to have the Frazier-Lemke bill brought out on the floor of the House for a fair and free discussion.

Seventh. To extend the National Recovery Act.

Eighth. Wagner-Connery Labor Relations Board Act.

Ninth. National Youth Administration program.

Tenth. Wheeler-Rayburn public-utility bill.

Eleventh. Bill extending the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Twelfth. To extend the guaranty of bank deposits.

Thirteenth. The tax bill.

Fourteenth. To develop and promote a strong merchant marine.

Fifteenth. Guffey coal bill.

Sixteenth. To repeal the "Pink Slip" Act.

Seventeenth. For humane immigration laws.

As a veteran who fought and bled for his country and as a member of the powerful Pension Committee, I have diligently labored to secure justice wherever possible for the veterans of all wars, and was glad to be a member of that committee which reported and voted for H. R. 6995, restoring to the Spanish-American War veterans and their dependents rights taken away from them by the so-called Economy Act.

I was instrumental in having many World War veterans' compensation cases adjusted, in several cases getting a special hearing for the veterans here in Washington.

I have stood behind labor legislation 100 percent and fought for Federal employees in and out of season, particularly the substitute post-office employees, who became my special protégés in the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

In the Good Book it is written, "By their works you shall know them."

My record as a Democrat and a Congressman is an open book, and I hope my record here in the Halls of Congress and in my district have met with the approval of the electors of the Sixth Congressional District.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs may be permitted to sit during the session of the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WHAT WAS LINCOLN'S POLITICS?

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the use and abuse of the name of my fellow townsman Abraham Lincoln.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Speaker, coming from the birthplace of Lincoln, I would have made some remarks on the birthday anniversary, but as there was a special order for an address on Lincoln in this House on that day by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. REED], I did not intrude.

The big double log house on the Lincoln farm near the entrance was the home of my great-uncle, Richard Creal. It is kept standing as an ancient landmark. The custodian of the grounds, who has acted in that capacity since the erection of the memorial building, is a grandson of the same man, never having lived out of sight of his grandfather's place nor the sight of the Lincoln home.

The Lincolns went by the name of "Linkhorn" when there. After the birth of Lincoln the family later moved about 7 miles north of town, which then consisted of a mill and a few houses, to a farm on Knob Creek, where Abe lived until the age of 7. There he attended two winter schools and in later life mentions these two teachers and his impressions of them.

He was large for his age and, as was the custom, saw much outdoor life in the Knob Creek community. The Knob Creek Valley is a narrow, fertile valley studded on either side by high, well-wooded peaks, which makes the immediate vicinity where he saw the rising and setting sun the most beautiful drive on the Jackson Highway in Kentucky.

It was there his playmate, Austin Gallagher, rescued Abe from drowning when he fell in a hole in Knob Creek. Gallagher lived to a ripe old age and delighted to recall the many events of his and Abe's escapades. Up and down Knob Creek they romped, waded in the crystal waters of Knob Creek, tried to catch minnows in their hats, threw rocks at songbirds, fished, climbed dead trees to hunt flying squirrels, and rambled the hills for nuts, berries, or pawpaws, enjoying the rural life only as such boys at that age can do.

If Lincoln could return today to that community, or the place of his birth nearby, he would find most all the people to be the grandchildren of his former playmates—many farms never having been out of the family. The burial place of Isham Enlow, with a small blackened marker in a cemetery no longer in use, can yet be seen. It was he who visited the Lincoln cabin that snowy evening and found Abe's mother along with Abe about to make his debut into the world.

While on the Knob Creek home, Abe's infant brother died and in the home-made coffin was carried on the shoulder of a brawny neighbor up a long hill, a mile away to the old Redman burying ground, now long in disuse. About 3 years ago a workman on the grounds of this neglected cemetery found what was, without doubt, the marker for the infant Lincoln. In those days the large limestone slabs, always cut diamond-shaped, and the full length of the grave, with initials on top, were laid flat on top of the grave. This was exhibited a while in the Lincoln National Bank at Hodgenville and then taken by the finder, who praises it highly.

It is a peculiar coincident that along the road in front of the Lincoln home place on Knob Creek rode Jeff Davis, riding a spotted pony all the way from Mississippi, at the age of 9, to enter school about 30 miles north of the Lincoln home. Thus both had their school days at first not far apart. We doubt if at that time there was anything in the outward appearance of either of these lads, both born in Kentucky, that would lead one to suppose that they would be President of the United States and of the Southern Confederacy.

Then came Tom Lincoln's time to move again, which he liked to do. He was through acting as road overseer or as constable in Cumberland County and Hardin County. They headed for Indiana. To me this is the most pathetic incident in Abe's life. He was old enough to love his playmates and the familiar landmarks and haunts of Knob Creek, where he had attended two schools. In those days friends were friends, and playmates in that community the same as brothers, quite different from town life and its social ties. His friend and playmate, Austin Gallagher, said he watched them load up, which was a small matter to do, and, as if to hold that tie of boyhood affection to the last minute before it was severed, he walked with Abe, as far as he could go. He waved at Abe and occasionally Abe waved at him, until he gradually passed from sight. He said the last wave he saw Abe's head slowly go behind the hill, and he knew he was long gone. With a lump in his throat, and doubtless one in Abe's also, he turned wearily to retrace his steps by the deserted home. They never met again, but Abe never forgot Austin, as mentioned by him in his mental trips back to Knob Creek.

The trek made by Abe to the Indiana home is known officially as the Lincoln Trail, which we hope some day to see made a national highway, as it extends on to Springfield, from the cradle to the grave, so to speak, and the route has been designated by officials. It is these landmarks and relics that we in LaRue County take pride in preserving. Little incidents in the life of the family have been handed down by the neighbors of Lincoln to the grandchildren and great-grandchildren and abound in that community. Neither Lincoln nor any of his children ever visited the place of his birth. Robert Lincoln, now deceased, attended the unveiling of the monument in the town square, but because of sudden illness did not go out to the birthplace, 3 miles away. The beautiful memorial building which now houses the cabin was erected by popular subscription and, with the farm, deeded to the Government.

The cornerstone was laid by Theodore Roosevelt, the building dedicated by William Howard Taft, and the acceptance on the part of the Nation was by Woodrow Wilson.

Lloyd George, Queen Marie, and American and foreign notables have paid a visit.

The clear, crystal waters of old Knob Creek, which ripple and gurgle over a pebble bottom as the moon shimmers its light and shadow therein, is just as Abe left it. The spring-time still decorates the high peaks standing on either side like sentinels guarding the historic ground. The dogwood and redbud blossoms make a picture that baffles the efforts of the landscape artist or painter to try to imitate. In this little pocket in the valley endowed with Nature's beauty supreme, on scenic Knob Creek, we invite you to visit. The same families, the same landmarks, everything except Abe, remain fixtures like the tin soldiers of Little Boy Blue. With this I close the chapter as far as Lincoln and LaRue County go.

In my county seat, the town of Hodgenville, an annual program on the anniversary of Lincoln is held, and it is the only Lincoln anniversary held in the United States as it should be held. It is historically reminiscent only and has not degenerated into an opportunity for Republican propaganda as all others have. They prefer to remember him as a poor country lad of our county who went away and made a name; and on behalf of Lincoln I want to register a protest against the use and abuse of his name with every questionable platform program or official act of modern-day controversies. I ask by what authority Republicans of 1936 use Lincoln's name as if he would second their motion if present? All over the country they use this anniversary as pretext for other things, serving in a beautiful dish a foul mess of food. It is the custom to mention a few words about Lincoln and then plunge into a tirade of present-day partisanship.

I listened over the radio to many Lincoln Day programs February 12, but none even gave the slightest inkling that there was anything in the life or official acts of Lincoln to justify the assumption that his faith was theirs of today. When men are dead they are painted, magnified, and made in imagination to be whatever the party in interest wants them to be. Historians are equally guilty, like a subsidized press reporter who is told what to see before he sees it and what not to see even though it strikes him with dazzling light across the eyes.

What right has a modern-day Republican to celebrate the anniversary of Lincoln in connection with Republican history of yesterday or today? I hope to show you that Lincoln never was a Republican as known either in history or today. On the contrary, he was the greatest Democrat since the days of Jefferson up to his time, and has only been surpassed by one since his time in hewing to Jeffersonian lines, and that was Bryan.

The two political parties of America were born in the effort to make our Constitution. There have been but two since that time of any consequence. There have been but two in all the days of modern or ancient history. In one country they may wear certain names or occasionally change their names, but by whatever name or under whatever clime they clash, the principles are the same. One party endeavors to protect the nobility, the aristocracy. The other is eternally trying to reduce favors granted to royalty and to distribute prosperity to the masses. Like litigants in court before a jury, parties represent classes of distinct interest. This is true in 1936. It is true today and yesterday the whole world over. So the two new parties which sprang up and clashed in our Constitutional Convention were not new parties—just the old, old parties of ages, assuming names and leaders in new America.

Let us look at the constitution offered by Hamilton, the father of the Republican Party in America. Here it is in brief:

Elect the President for life.

Elect United States Senators for life.

Elect Congressmen every 3 years.

The Governors of each State to be appointed by the Federal Government and serve for life.

The judicial officers to serve for life.

The President's veto was final—no overriding.

A State Governor's veto was final—no overriding.

The Senate would declare war instead of Congress.

Only those could vote who had a certain landed estate or who had exempt personal property to the value of 1,000 Spanish mill dollars.

In selecting a President the States would elect electors with limited qualifications for the voter. These electors would meet in their States and select another second group of electors. The second electors would come to Washington and after due deliberation in convention assembled name a President. Thus the first voter would not know who were candidates when he named the first elector. It would be so long ahead of time. This process would elect a President when one died in office, whether aged 90 or 101.

Hamilton emerged from the Convention with only the judiciary as life servers. And while on that point let me say that neither Hamilton or Jefferson ever dreamed of bestowing the power on the Supreme Court to nullify an act of Congress, for Hamilton was thinking only of the Supreme Court of England and it had no such power. With the President's veto final and a Senate serving for life he did not need a Supreme Court to kill a law if not desired. I pass no opinion on the assumed authority of the Court to so act without a constitutional provision, but leave that for your separate inclination and judgment. The Constitution was a compromise largely favoring Jefferson's views.

Quoting Hamilton, who said:

Society naturally divides itself into two political divisions, the few and the many, who have distinct interests. This separation must be permanent; representation will not do.

He further said when trying to defend a monarchy:

The advantage of a monarch is this: He is above corruption. Republics are liable to intrigue.

Listen to him again:

There ought to be a principle in Government capable of resisting the popular current.

And, again:

The aristocracy ought to be entirely separated; their power should be permanent. They should be so circumstanced that they have no interest in a change.

Really has the issue changed but little in these 150 years? It is the issue now in 1936 as well as in 1787.

If Abraham Lincoln's life, conduct, speeches, or actions coincided with these views, then he was a Republican, and Republican Lincoln Day orators are justified in so labeling him.

He was the greatest advocate and expounder of Jeffersonian democracy this Nation ever saw up until the advent of William Jennings Bryan. Lincoln was not only a great admirer of Jefferson and quoted Jefferson as his political bible on all occasions, but his own phrases and political thoughts are paraphrases of Jefferson. He never quoted Hamilton as authority.

You hear people talk today of the Federal Government. There is no Federal Government. That was the kind Hamilton attempted to install, but Jefferson defeated it. The name of this Government is the United States. It appears on every post-office sign.

Then, following the Convention the people divided into Federalists, led by Hamilton, and anti-Federalists, led by Jefferson; and the anti-Federalists were most generally victorious. Later, wanting to get the whole name of Federalists out, the anti-Federalists, or Jeffersonians, then called theirs Republican Party, which signified the name of the kind of government Jefferson established—a Republic.

Later on the name of the party Republican was changed to Democrat because they operated the republic form of government in a democratic manner, or the manner that gave greatest voice to the voters.

After many years of losing battle the Federalists—Hamiltonian party—seeing the Republic was here to stay, went back and picked up the discarded name of the Jeffersonians and called their party Republican. But before they did that they had tried Whig Party or any other place to get in and had petered out almost completely.

Then came one of those storms that had been brewing for years—the black cloud of slavery. Like all questions of supposed moral issue, it split party lines asunder and the one question overshadowed all others. The dominant Democratic Party itself divided and named two candidates, and the new Republican Party nominated Lincoln and went between the rift in the great Democratic ranks. Thus Lincoln is the only President who was twice elected and never received the majority of the whole vote either time. The second election the South was disfranchised and could not vote. LaRue County, the birth place of Lincoln, gave him 3 votes. Jefferson was then dead, but were he and Lincoln still together, even on this question?

Thomas Jefferson, the father of the Democrat Party, was the pioneer in American politics in opposition to slavery before Lincoln was born; and Lincoln, his long-distance disciple, used Jefferson's own legal language on slavery in writing his documents on that question.

In the Constitution, section 9, written by Jefferson—

The migration or importation of such persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to 1808—

And so forth, was the best compromise that could be had on his desire to abolish slavery. On March 1, 1774, Jefferson was chairman of a committee to draw up a proposed government for the Northwest Territory, composed of what is now Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin; and in that report he wrote:

That after the year 1800 of the Christian era there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in any of the said States otherwise than in punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.

Lincoln, in his Emancipation Proclamation and in the thirteenth amendment, uses this language first written by Jefferson. In a letter to Dr. Price in 1775 Jefferson wrote:

In Maryland I do not find such a disposition to begin the redress of this enormity as in Virginia. This is the next State to which we may turn our eyes for the interesting spectacle of justice in conflict with avarice and oppression; a conflict wherein the sacred side is daily gaining recruits.

In his notes on Virginia in 1782 he wrote:

During the regal government we had at one time such a duty on the importation of slaves as amounted nearly to a prohibition when one inconsiderate assembly repealed the law.

In 1814, to Edward Cole, Jefferson wrote:

My sentiments on the subject of slavery have long been in possession of the public, and time has only served to give them stronger root. The love of justice and the love of country plead equally the cause of these people.

How about secession from the Union? We know Lincoln's views; let us see Jefferson's, but for lack of time I quote only one of his many letters expressing himself on that point. A friend of his, who was going to tour the country as a lecturer, asked Jefferson to suggest a subject, and he wrote him as follows:

MONTICELLO, August 4, 1811.

To Mr. OGILIVE:

Since writing the above an interesting subject occurs. What would you think of the discourse on the benefit of the Union and miseries which would follow a separation of the States, to be exemplified in the eternal wasting wars of Europe, in the pillage and profligacy to which these lead, and the abject oppression and degradation to which they reduce its inhabitants? Painted by your vivid pencil, what could make deeper impressions and what impressions could come more home to our concerns or kindle a livelier sense of our present blessings?

They thought the same way about the Supreme Court, and both spoke harsher criticisms about its decisions and entrenched power than has been uttered by any public official of Washington in 1936. Jefferson did not use those exact words later used by Lincoln, "A government of the people, by the people, for the people", but every fight he made and every letter he wrote was to that effect. Both used the words repeatedly, "All men are created free and equal"; "Equal rights to all, special privileges to none." Every public speech or writing of Lincoln rings the echo of Jefferson, often using his own language verbatim, and always the same central thought in championing the cause of the masses or the forgotten man.

And with all the writings, speeches, personal letters, and their lives before us, their tracks across our domains show that it is the same species of animal you are tracking. Neither of them ever made one track that looked like the track of the G. O. P. elephant, unless a man was drunk or cockeyed and unable to tell one track from another. Lincoln's party left his teachings the day he was shot and attempted to install a reign of carpetbag rule over a people in direct and flagrant contradiction of the principles for which he had just conducted a costly and bloody war.

By a long series of legislative acts and military orders they sought to reenslave and pillage a proud and cultured white people just after a war freeing a black race. Lincoln never would have stood for that.

Because Andrew Johnson, the succeeding President, would not let them kick a man when down and add insults to injury, they sought to impeach him and came within an inch of doing so. From that day to this good hour they have never followed Lincoln's views, but reverted to the doctrine of Hamilton, and in each and every campaign up to 1936 have made themselves the champion of the cause of that class described by Hamilton "which should not be disturbed by changing conditions" and to protect that "few who have distinct interests" and to protect them from the "popular wave."

The assembly of the Liberty League is the same assembly which met to shape every campaign for them since Lincoln's untimely death. On Lincoln's anniversaries they should, like the prodigal son when sowing his wild oats, be conscience-stricken in remembering "today is father's birthday back in the old home and here I am way out here in this garb."

This Republican divorce from Lincoln's ideals, which was granted with U. S. Grant's ascendancy, and granted with U. S. Grant to the United States, has at all times since been in full force and effect, and not modified, set aside or appealed from by them. On the 12th of February annually they go to Lincoln's tomb and lug into Lincoln Day dinners Abe's ghost, and would have him to say that he was opposed to the T. V. A. to furnish cheaper power and light to add to the comforts of the home. They have him to say that he is opposed to the grandchildren of Austin Gallagher in the hills of Kentucky sharing the elevated prices produced by the A. A. A. program, that he opposed income tax to provide relief or a job for the hungry. There ought to be a Federal law for desecration of the grave. Because Abe never answers these questions from the tomb they assume silence gives consent. For that reason I want to register my voice in protest to blasphemy of the dead.

Imagine Abe, who frequently gave away his lunch to more hungry schoolmates, and went without himself, homespun, big-hearted, charitable Abe, uncouth but tender in sympathy, sitting in with the Liberty League, planning a campaign to protect the aristocrats when all his own class from which he sprang stood empty-handed. Does anyone doubt for a moment how he would vote if in Congress today when these questions arise. The gentleman from Massachusetts would have a scrap with him before night about the Supreme Court. Now I want to digress here to say that Robert E. Lee had freed his own slaves voluntarily before the war started and that thousands of Union soldiers and many Army officers in the Union Army held slaves while invading the South. Lincoln was forced into war by hotheads of his own party and not by choice of his own.

In his inaugural address Lincoln assured the Southern States in this language:

I have no purpose directly or indirectly to interfere with the institution of slavery in the States where it exists. I believe I have no lawful right to do so, and I have no inclination to do so.

And yet the average Republican ward heeler has long told the Negro that Lincoln ran for President on the avowed platform for the purpose of freeing the Negro.

In Charleston, Ill., in 1858, Lincoln said in his speech:

I am not now nor ever have been in favor of bringing about in any way the social or political equality of the white and black racess. There is a physical difference between the white and black races which will forever forbid the two races living together on social or political equality.

That inaugural address was a sad disappointment to the hotheads behind him. They expected him to invade and shoot down opposition and immediately liberate, Constitution or no Constitution; and Abe, completely surrounded by superior statesmen, and being wholly inexperienced in any executive capacity allowed himself to be shoved into hasty action and instantly called for 75,000 volunteers, and 300,000 readily responded. Responded for what? To patrol and police for awhile, until cool-headed judgment and negotiations might have a chance? No; responded craving the smell of gunpowder, blood, and carnage.

Your children's school histories tell you that when they got here that the cry, "On to Richmond!" was too irresistible to be checked. Have you ever noticed that while the controversy was among our own blood and fraught with legal and technical discussion, that history is silent about any conciliation committee, any terms of truce to talk it over, or any policy like Wilson's Mexican trouble of watchful waiting, any exchange for settlement negotiations, or any of the last-effort attempts always made by all people before bloodshed? The South was not invading the North; they just went away in a sulk and then without one single effort to meet and talk it over troops wildly rushed down and went to slaying on sight—just as Lee thought they would do. You may say that further talk would have done no good. If it had not, nothing whatever would have been lost by the effort. Who knows that it would not have brought new understanding?

Andrew Jackson put down one secession rebellion and shed no blood. Suppose the heavy dominant Democratic Party had not divided with two tickets and Lincoln, a child of accident rather than renown, had not been elected? Then would there have been any secession? Certainly not, for no reason for such would have existed. If no secession, no war. Then it could be said that Lincoln's political ambition and election was the cause of a war which might have been averted. Why, down at Fort Sumter there had been a few rounds of ammunition fired but no loss of life. They took over a few minor posts. Let us see how others do today. A few days ago there was a tremendous uprising in Japan and 80 government officials killed and numerous government strongholds seized. By negotiation, parley, diplomacy, and cool-headed statesmanship the revolutionists were induced to surrender without the loss of a single life.

Knowing the great statesman, Thomas Jefferson, as you do, from history, and that great pacificator, Henry Clay, would anyone believe that there would have been war at that hour with either of them as President? If you do not, then you must believe that Abe's inexperience as a diplomat, executive, and statesman was the cause of war that others would have averted.

But you say, Would the Negro have been freed without the war? Not as suddenly, to be sure, but not long afterward; for it was daily becoming more unpopular to be a slave owner. As heretofore mentioned, General Lee had freed his slaves, and large numbers of others were following him. The slave in the South would have been freed even if the rebellion had won. Listen to this from General Lee to Jeff Davis' Confederate Congress while the war was in progress. January 11, 1864, Lee in the field at the head of the southern army wrote President Davis, President of the Southern Confederacy, to transmit this suggestion to the Confederate Congress:

My own opinion is that we should employ them (the slaves) without delay. I believe with proper regulations they can be made efficient soldiers. We should give immediate freedom to all who enlisted and freedom at the end of the war to the families of those who discharge their duties faithfully. It would be well to accompany the measure with a well-digested plan of gradual and general emancipation.

Davis recommended the passage of this act, but it was not carried in the Congress. This is the evidence again that the sentiment was daily growing for emancipation before the war.

When we passed the eighteenth amendment the distilleries were paid for their liquor. If the Government had bought all the slaves, the cost would have been less than 1 percent of what it did cost, besides the carnage and destruction of property.

George Washington and Jeff Davis were both classed as rebels. When rebels succeed in large strips of secession or small ones, they are world heroes. When they fail they call them traitors. Had Washington failed, the school children of our land, like the loyal children of Canada with a British flag flying on the house, would have had pointed out to them that bad man Washington who tried to break the royal domains of good King George.

Had the stationary view of the Hamiltonian Republicans prevailed no territorial expansion would have been made. They said the Louisiana Purchase was unconstitutional and that the Constitution would have to show its teeth to take it in. One old fellow, whose name I do not recall, said, "Damn her, let her show her teeth when there is that much meat in sight." They opposed the annexation of Texas and the deal where we added several other States ceded by Mexico. They opposed each and every effort to control the currency, such as the Federal Reserve Act, insurance of bank deposits, control of stock-market exchange, and countless others.

They likewise opposed income tax, election of United States Senators by popular vote, Presidential preferential primaries, and each and every law to give the people more power. They dispute Lincoln's theory of government by the people every time they have a chance to vote "no." The only thing they love about Lincoln is the block of Negro voters that were enfranchised. They would be helpless today without them.

It might be of interest to say that the Negro precinct of Hodgenville, which votes in sight of the Lincoln monument, has for nearly 20 years given one of the largest Democratic votes in the whole county. They vote on issues of today and not dead issues of 1865.

The second emancipation is rapidly progressing. They know that their welfare is with all the other poor people and not with the Liberty League. I am proud to be known in my community as a friend of the colored man, for our interest on the questions of the hour is the same. The colored man today has only one enemy, and that is that second-grade Republican politician who every 4 years tries to arouse a race prejudice where there is none in order to get a Federal job and forget the Negro the next day after election. The war is over. He must vote on the questions of the hour. There is no more reason today to say that all men whose skin is black should vote a certain way than there is that all red-headed men should be Baptists or that all bald-headed men should eat fish. Lincoln meant for him to be free and think what he was voting on. In places where he does vote there is no objection just because he is black, but his Republican enemy tells him he should vote all the time a certain way because he is a Negro. They want to keep him a political slave. Abe did not mean for that to happen.

Now, in conclusion, I want to register another protest, and that is the growing tendency to compare Lincoln and Jesus Christ in Lincoln Day orations. If I read aright, Christ had sort of a religious turn of mind, believed in worship and church organizations. Lincoln did not belong to any church at all and did nothing to keep them up. The orator in the House on February 12 went to great length on this comparison. He said the fathers of both were carpenters. Why, Mary's husband was not Christ's father. Unless this tendency is checked, I fear that eventually on Easter Day they will be trying to popularize Christ because he was so much like Abe.

In 1835 Lincoln wrote a book on infidelity with a view of publication. His friends burned it up because of the fear that it would injure him politically, so writes his law partner, W. H. Herndon. His first cousin, Dennis Hanks, said Abe would stand in front of the backwoods meeting houses in early days and make fun of the preacher. Quoting Dennis:

He frequently reproduced the sermon with a nasal twang, rolling his eyes, and all sorts of droll exaggerations, to the great delight of the wild fellows assembled; sometimes he broke out with stories passably humorous and invariably vulgar.

When he ran against Douglas it was charged that his language was vile and that he was foul-mouthed, and his friends apologized and said he told the jokes for the wit and not the smut that was in them. I think the comparison is sacrilegious. Besides, it takes away all the admiration of those who want to remember Abe as "one of the boys."

There is one thing heard over the radio, and occasionally elsewhere on Lincoln day, and that is when they say he was a God-sent man. Since the advent of the Prince of Peace I do not believe the Lord follows that plan of arraying man against man, and is not present directing murder when committed individually or collectively.

If so, then it is useless to prepare for defense. Did it ever occur to such unthinking users of this sacrilegious bunk that the Lord could change a man's mind and have him do His will just as easy as to send a man to shoot his brains out to correct his thinking machine? We read occasionally where some fellow said the Lord told him to go and kill a man, but they generally hang him or send him to the asylum for the act. I believe hatred, prejudice, revenge, and war is still the work of the devil and not divinely directed.

The gentleman [Mr. REED] quoted the passage, "Suffer little children to come unto Me." Sherman on his march through Georgia said the same, giving a different meaning to the word "suffer", and he said war was hell.

In summary, Lincoln and Jefferson were in accord on both the form of government and its practice, and Lincoln today would be a New Deal Democrat and not a reactionary Hamiltonian standpat Republican.

Napoleon said the Lord fights on the side of the strongest battalion. Whether he does or not, history records that side as most generally victorious. I present another view of divine intervention which is sometimes suggested. This came from a colored friend of mine. He said that he believed the ten or twelve million colored people now here in the light of civilization, and with the opportunity of embracing Christianity, were divinely directed to be brought over here, away from false gods and savage wilds, and that these 12,000,000 souls would never have known the light if not so brought—so there you are. One view says that those who brought them were divinely guided, another view saying that the man who directed the slaughter of those who brought them was divinely directed. All I know is that one is wrong, and perhaps both.

Every other civilized nation on earth that ever held slaves freed them without internal war, and for that reason I say it would have been done in America not long after it was done otherwise. In the light of conscience the change was coming fast.

Abe, while a Member of this House, was chided by colleagues for support of Zachary Taylor, accused of deserting principles, and he and his people attempting to ride into office on the military coattails of General Taylor. He replied by saying that the other side had long ridden in on the military coattails of General Jackson; and then told, as appears in the records of this House, one of his risqué stories of a man who advertised to sell a bottle of medicine that would make a young man out of an old one and have enough of the stuff left to make a little yellow dog. He said the opposition had done this and had enough of the stuff left to elect several small men to the Presidency. He said: "Like a horde of hungry ticks they still seek their substance from that coattail long after he is dead." How well does this apply to some of Abe's own following today when they, too, have deserted Abe's principles of government "by the people" and made it read "by the few", and yet they say today that both Abe and they are Republicans. They should say, in name only. Why, he would not have anyone else to run with him as Vice President the second time but an outstanding Democrat, Andrew Johnson.

Like Abe's words, "With charity toward all and malice toward none", let us neither deify Abe nor send to hell those typical Christian, princely gentlemen, Jefferson Davis and Robert E. Lee.

When all tendency to distort facts has ceased about this controversy, arising from legal and technical misunderstanding, the correct interpretation may be salvaged for history.

This misunderstanding, in the language of my friend, Judge O. M. Mather, of Hodgenville, will be looked upon as one over which the "angels well may weep."

The Republican Party today can successfully be charged with the following misdemeanors in the use of Abe's name: Desecration of the grave, slander of the dead, obtaining office and other goods of value under false pretense, improper labeling of propaganda and other political food, polluting the channels of public information, intimidating and alarming Negro voters by false information. And of all of Abe's supposed Republican friends they sit idly by and allow this misrepresentation to go on, so it remains for a Democrat to enter a protest in behalf of justice for Lincoln. As heretofore stated, there never was and never will be but two political parties—one representing the select few, the other attempting to exact more for the masses. Lincoln belonged to the one whose ideal was to help the common man.

For 12 years, 1920 to 1932, we had in office three of the best Republicans this country ever saw—that is, being 100-percent Hamiltonian Republicans and unswerving in their duty to Hamilton's chosen few—but, as usual, when you give them about that much time unmolested they hang themselves—and now the Republicans talk about socialism and communism. I have no time for either socialism or communism, or any such un-American doctrines, but I want to call attention to the fact that Hooverism and its practice produced the disease of communism and socialism.

This administration did not produce any of it; all that is here was inherited. I ask any thinking man how much communism he thinks we would have had if Hoover had been reelected? The Roosevelt administration has reduced and checked this tendency by restoring hope in the masses. This administration is different from the other and not subservient to special interests.

Under the 12 years of the three Republicans named, all running true to form, we were fast drifting to the same two classes that mark the old governments of Europe—protected aristocracy on the one hand and extreme radicalism on the other. Mark Hanna said in 1900 that there would be only two political parties in 1920, one the conservative and the other the Socialist. Of course, he could not foresee the 8 years of Woodrow Wilson from 1912 to 1920. Thus the Democratic Party at that time reversed the tendency toward radical ideas, just as it has done in the present administration. If you want one-half of the people of this Nation to be Socialists and Communists, the best way on earth to produce them is to give us two or three administrations of typical Republicans running true to historical form. The Republican Party's tenure in office has always been following a wave in which party lines were cut and the issue other than Hamiltonianism and Jeffersonianism. That is the way they came in during the Civil War.

They rode in again following the World War, under fear of foreign entanglements. Their one stock phrase and argument is pointing to growth of the country in the quarter century following the Civil War.

For a hundred years the Democratic Party had built such a firm foundation in almost continuous power that the country was robust enough that it could carry on its neck the handicap and weight of the Republican jockeys. They, according to the same analysis, are responsible for the rapid growth of Canada, Japan, and Australia at the same identical period of time. This was the age of invention and the growth of the world, and not because of the fact that a few insignificant Republican Presidents were in power in the United States following Lincoln. So the Republicans meet today and call on the tomb of Lincoln to send Abe's spirit to be present at their questionable undertakings, but Abe's spirit is present neither in person nor by proxy—their call is in vain, for the prayer of the wicked availeth nothing. If nobody else will do it, I, as a Democrat, wish to enter protest for the continued misrepresentation of one of LaRue County's native sons, who believed that all men are created free and equal and that the government of the people, by the people, for the people should never be entrusted to the Liberty League and their kind in any period of our history.

Fearing the temper of the destitute, bordering on desperation, they slunk away when choked off the neck of their victims.

They sullenly retired to count their money, devise crooked schemes to evade taxes, and invoice the loot from the 12-year raid.

The present administration made a hasty blood transfusion into the masses, cutting some red tape, for desperate remedies are justified by desperate cases.

Since this blood transfusion has brought back a degree of recovery and restored color to the cheeks of the laboring man and the farmer, the Republican Party's chosen few come out of hiding and now clamor for license to set up on the corner the old get-rich-quick skin games and want laws repealed which hamper their operations. This is the issue in 1936.

And they want to take good, old-fashioned, homespun, honest Abe and make him an accomplice in the conspiracy.

The ultra conservatives, the Hamiltonians, opposed the improvement of rivers and harbors when Lincoln was a Member of this House. They said there was no authority given in the Constitution. Lincoln's chief speech as a Member of this House was the one on internal improvements in which he scorned the argument that such was not intended to be done and took the view that each and every activity of life could not be anticipated, and authority for action could not be written in a short constitution.

In Hamilton's day, in Lincoln's day, in the present day, on the floor of this House, as shown by thousands of roll calls, every bill of every nature which seeks as its object to make the 3 percent give up something to the 97 percent, the Republican Party stands true to form and so does the Democratic Party. It is the same history in every State legislature of the Union. Of course, there is an occasional black sheep found in each party, some fellow who imagined that he was a Democrat or Republican until the acid test came and he found he was in the wrong boat.

And the poor colored man, tutored on prejudice and cultivated malice of ancient issues, have been corralled together to vote against agriculture and labor in past campaigns, as if he had anything in common in legislation that the Liberty League or multimillionaire club wanted. Such is a civic crime to so mislead these people.

If the colored people want to follow "Abe", they should find out what he stood for in the other things that we now vote on.

If the colored voter of today could receive a message from Lincoln, he would be told to stand up like other men—intelligent Americans—study each question in each election that came, and vote in a manner which showed that he wanted to do the best for agriculture, labor, and the poor man. It is an open insult to the intelligence of every thinking colored man to say to him that regardless of issues of wet or dry, labor or capital, farm or factory, East or West, higher or lower wages, that he should vote in a block blindfolded on issues dead and buried three-quarters of a century ago, often voting for his own starvation and nakedness and inflicting the same on the white laborers of same circumstances.

The Republican Party, which stands by the Power Trust in the Nation and in all States of the Union, is not for cheaper electricity in the home of the white or colored common man. This illustration could be multiplied a thousandfold. There are but two parties in all history, in all countries. One seeks to protect the high and mighty, the other seeks to protect the people from extortion and promote their general welfare. And this being the well-known line of demarcation, who would say that Lincoln was a Republican, if living in 1936? On behalf of his memory I solemnly protest.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9863) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9863) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, and agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12.

C. A. WOODRUM,
WILLIAM J. GRANFIELD,
JED JOHNSON,
EDWARD C. MORAN, Jr.,
JAMES M. FITZPATRICK,
R. B. WIGGLESWORTH,

Managers on the part of the House.

CARTER GLASS,
JAMES F. BYRNES,
FREDERICK HALE,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9863) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and embodied in the accompanying conference report, as to each of such amendments, namely:

On no. 1: Authorizes the American Battle Monuments Commission to use not to exceed $1,200 of its appropriation for the purchase and repair of uniforms for caretakers of national cemeteries and monuments in Europe.

On no. 2: Corrects a typographical error.

On nos. 3 and 4: Appropriates $1,407,000 for salaries and expenses of the Federal Trade Commission, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,399,000 together with an unexpended balance of $8,000, as proposed by the House.

On no. 5: Authorizes $190,000 of the appropriation of $847,000 for regulating accounts, Interstate Commerce Commission, for personal services in the District of Columbia, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $170,000, as proposed by the House.

On no. 6: Authorizes $90,000 of the appropriation of $500,000 for safety of employees, Interstate Commerce Commission, for personal services in the District of Columbia, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $87,900, as proposed by the House.

Amendments in disagreement

The committee of conference report in disagreement, amendments numbered 7 to 12, inclusive:

On nos. 7 and 8: Striking out the House provision appropriating $160,000,000 for the adjusted-service certificate fund, under the Veterans' Administration, and inserting a provision appropriating $1,730,000,000 for adjusted-compensation payments, with incidental provisions, and correcting a total.

On no. 9: Making an appropriation of $440,000,000, together with an unexpended balance of $30,000,000, for carrying out the purposes of sections 7 and 8 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act.

On nos. 10, 11, and 12: Correcting section numbers.

C. A. WOODRUM,
WILLIAM J. GRANFIELD,
JED JOHNSON,
EDWARD C. MORAN, Jr.,
JAMES M. FITZPATRICK,
R. B. WIGGLESWORTH,

Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, amendments 7 and 8 relate to the same matter, and I ask unanimous consent that they may be considered together.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 7: On page 40, beginning in line 9, strike out down to and including line 19 and insert:

"Adjusted-compensation payments: To carry out the provisions of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, 1924 (Public, No. 120, 68th Cong.), enacted May 19, 1924, as amended, and the Adjusted Compensation Payment Act, 1936 (Public, No. 425, 74th Cong.), enacted January 27, 1936, except section 5 thereof, $1,730,000,000 to the adjusted-service certificate fund, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, and such amount as represents the face value of the bonds required to be paid to the United States Government life-insurance fund pursuant to section 5 of said act is hereby directed to be charged to any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for transfer and deposit as a public-debt receipt."

Amendment no. 8: Page 41, line 17, strike out "$753,727,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,323,727,000."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendments nos. 7 and 8 and concur in the same.

The motion was agreed to.

POINT OF NO QUORUM

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 39]

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and forty-nine Members are present, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. WOODRUM, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

On March 3, 1936:

H. R. 2157. An act for the relief of Howard Donovan;

H. R. 8966. An act for the relief of World War soldiers who were discharged from the Army because of minority or misrepresentation of age; and

H. R. 9062. An act authorizing a preliminary examination of the Esopus Creek and its tributaries of Birch, Bushnellville, Woodland, Warner Bushkill, and Beaverkill Creeks; Sawkill, Rondout, and Neversink Creeks, Ulster County; Schoharie and Catskill Creeks, Greene County; Neversink, Beaverkill, East Branch of Delaware, Willowemoc, and Lackawack Rivers, Sullivan County; Schoharie Creek and its tributaries, Schoharie County, all located in the State of New York, with a view to the controlling of floods.

On March 4, 1936:

H. R. 5181. An act for the relief of the Progressive Commercial Co. of Philadelphia, Pa.

On March 6, 1936:

H. R. 7147. An act authorizing a preliminary examination of the San Gabriel and Los Angeles Rivers and their tributaries, to include both drainage basins and their outlets, in Los Angeles County, Los Angeles, Calif., with a view to the controlling of floods.

On March 14, 1936:

H. R. 8458. An act to provide for vacations to Government employees, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8459. An act to standardize sick leave and extend it to all civilian employees; and

H. J. Res. 514. Joint resolution authorizing the completion of certain records and operations resulting from the administration of the Kerr Tobacco Act, the Bankhead Cotton Act of 1934, and the Potato Act of 1935 (repealed), and making funds available for those and other purposes.

RELIEF OF UNEMPLOYMENT (H. DOC. NO. 427)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

In my Budget message of January 3, 1936, I reserved making a recommendation for an appropriation for the relief of unemployment, stating that an estimate and recommendation could be better made at a later date. I am now prepared to submit such a recommendation, and this message should be regarded as supplemental to the Budget message.

In asking the Congress for an appropriation to meet the needs of the destitute unemployed during the coming fiscal year, certain facts should be clearly set forth.

First. Since the spring of 1933, there has been a gain in reemployment in each successive year. At least 5,000,000 more people were at work in December 1935 than in March 1933.

Second. In spite of these great gains, there are at present approximately 5,300,000 families and unattached persons who are in need of some form of public assistance—3,800,000 families and unattached persons on the works program and 1,500,000 on local and State relief rolls. Every thinking person knows that this problem of unemployment is the most difficult one before the country.

Third. These figures, large as they are, do not, of course, include all those who seek work in the United States. In none of these figures is included the many unemployed who are not on relief but who are experiencing great difficulties in maintaining independent support. Neither are there included many others not on the relief rolls who are content with occasional employment; nor some who are so constituted that they do not desire to work; nor many young people who cannot get work and are obliged to share the livelihood earned by their parents. Because of the impossibility of an exact definition of what constitutes unemployment, no figures which purport to estimate the total unemployed in the Nation can be even approximately accurate.

Fourth. Nearly all the 1,500,000 unemployable families or unemployable unattached persons are being cared for almost wholly from State or local funds. A very small number of these families or individuals have begun to receive a comparatively small amount of Federal aid under the provisions of the Social Security Act.

The foregoing figures indicate the problem before us. It is a problem to be faced not merely by the Congress and the Executive, not merely by the representatives of government in the States and localities, but by all of the American people. It is not exclusively the problem of the poor and the unfortunate themselves. It is more particularly the problem of those who have been more fortunate under our system of government and our economy.

It will not do to say that these needy unemployed must or should shift for themselves. It will not be good for any of us to take that attitude. Neither will it do to say that it is a problem for the States and the localities. If we concede that it is primarily the duty of each locality to care for its destitute unemployed, and that if its resources are inadequate, it must then turn to the State for help, we must still face the fact that the credit and the resources of local governments and States have been freely drawn upon in the last few years, and they have not been sufficient.

It has been said by persons ignorant or careless of the truth that Federal relief measures have encouraged States, counties, and municipalities to shirk their duty and shift their financial responsibilities to the Federal Government. The fact is that during 1935 State and local governments spent $466,000,000 for emergency relief, which was 13 percent more than these governmental bodies spent in 1934, 49 percent more than they spent in 1933, and 58 percent more than they spent in 1932. Let it also be noted that the great majority of State and local governments are today taking care not only of the 1,500,000 unemployables, but are also contributing large amounts to the Federal works program.

To expect that States and municipalities should at the present time bear a vastly increased proportion of the cost of relief is to ignore the fact that there are State constitutional limitations, and the fact that most of our counties and municipalities are only now emerging from tax delinquency difficulties. Let us further remember that by far the largest part of local taxes is levied on real estate. To increase this form of tax burden on the small property owners of the Nation would be unjustified. It is true that some States, fortunately few, have taken an undue advantage of Federal appropriations, but most States have cooperated wholeheartedly in raising relief funds, even to the extent of amending State constitutions. It is not desired in the next fiscal year to encourage any State to continue to shirk. The Federal Government cannot maintain relief for unemployables in any State.

The Federal Government, then, faces the responsibility of continuing to provide work for the needy unemployed who cannot be taken care of by State and local funds.

During the current fiscal year the cost of relief actually paid out of the Treasury will amount to approximately $3,500,000,000.

During the next fiscal year, 1937, more than $1,000,000,000 will be spent out of the Treasury from prior-year appropriations. Practically all of these expenditures will be from allocations made to large projects which could not possibly be completed within this fiscal year. In addition to this amount, the Budget contains estimated expenditures aggregating $600,000,000 from appropriations recommended for the Civilian Conservation Corps and various public works.

If to this total of $1,600,000,000 there were added $2,000,000,000 to be expended for relief in the fiscal year 1937, the total for this purpose would just about equal the amount that is being now expended in the fiscal year 1936. An appropriation in this amount would be within the limit set by the Budget message, and would in effect provide for the third successive year a reduction in the deficit.

This statement as to the Budget program, of course, depends upon the action of the Congress with respect to the substitute taxes, the reimbursement taxes, and the new taxes which I have recommended to replace the lost revenues and to supply the new revenue made necessary by the decision of the Supreme Court invalidating the Agricultural Adjustment Act and by the action of the Congress in appropriating for the immediate payment at the 1945 value of the veterans' adjusted-service certificates. This latter action, as you will recall, required additional revenue in the amount of $120,000,000 annually for 9 years. The agricultural program requires annual substitute taxes of $500,000,000, and there must be raised within the next 3 years $517,000,000 of revenue to reimburse the Treasury for processing taxes lost in this fiscal year by reason of the Supreme Court's decision.

I am, however, not asking this Congress to appropriate $2,000,000,000.

I am asking only for an appropriation of $1,500,000,000 to the Works Progress Administration. It will be their responsibility to provide work for the destitute unemployed. This request, together with those previously submitted to the Congress to provide for the Civilian Conservation Corps and certain public works, will, if acted upon favorably by the Congress, give security during the next fiscal year to those most in need, on condition, however, that private employers hire many of those now on relief rolls.

The trend of reemployment is upward. But this trend, at its present rate of progress, is inadequate. I propose, therefore, that we ask private business to extend its operations so as to absorb an increasing number of the unemployed.

Frankly, there is little evidence that large and small employers by individual and uncoordinated action can absorb large numbers of new employees. A vigorous effort on a national scale is necessary by voluntary, concerted action of private industry.

Under the National Recovery Administration the Nation learned the value of shorter hours in their application to a whole industry. In almost every case the shorter hours were approved by the great majority of individual operators within the industry. To the Federal Government was given the task of policing against the minority who came to be known as "chiselers." It was clear that "chiseling" by a few would undermine and eventually destroy the large, honest majority. But the public authority to require the shorter hours agreed upon has been seriously curtailed by limitations recently imposed by the Supreme Court upon Federal as well as State powers.

Nevertheless, while the provisions of the antitrust laws, intended to prohibit restraint of trade, must and shall be fully and vigorously enforced, there is nothing in these or any other laws which would prohibit managers of private business from working together to increase production and employment. Such efforts would indeed be the direct opposite of a conspiracy in restraint of trade. Many private employers believe that if left to themselves they can accomplish the objectives we all seek.

We have learned the difficulties of attempting to reduce hours of work in all trades and industries to a common level or to increase all wage payments at a uniform rate. But in any single industry we have found that it is possible by united action to shorten hours, increase employment, and at the same time maintain weekly, monthly, or yearly earnings of the individual. It is my belief that if the leaders in each industry will organize a common effort to increase employment within that industry employment will increase substantially.

Insofar as their efforts are successful, the cost to the Federal Government of caring for the destitute unemployed will be lessened; and, if the employment gains are substantial enough, no additional appropriation by the next Congress for the fiscal year 1937 will be necessary.

The ultimate cost of the Federal works program will thus be determined by private enterprise. Federal assistance which arose as a result of industrial disemployment can be terminated if industry itself removes the underlying conditions. Should industry cooperatively achieve the goal of reemployment, the appropriation of $1,500,000,000, together with the unexpended balances of previous appropriations, will suffice to carry the Federal works program through the fiscal year 1937. Only if industry fails to reduce substantially the number of those now out of work will another appropriation and further plans and policies be necessary.

It is the task of industry to make further efforts toward increased output and employment, and I urge industry to accept this responsibility. I present this problem and this opportunity definitely to the managers of private business, and I offer in aid of its solution the cooperation of all the appropriate departments and agencies of the Federal Government.

My appeal is to the thinking men who are assured of their daily bread. However we may divide along the lines of economic or political faith, all right-minded Americans have a common stake in extending production, in increasing employment, and in getting away from the burdens of relief.

Those who believe that Government may be compelled to assume greater responsibilities in the operation of our industrial system can make no valid objection to a renewed effort on the part of private enterprise to insure a livelihood to all willing workers. Those, on the other hand, who believe in complete freedom of private control without any Government participation should earnestly undertake to demonstrate their effectiveness by increasing employment.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 18, 1936.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, just before the Clerk began the reading of the message from the President of the United States, I was served with a copy of a letter issued by the chairman of the Senate committee investigating lobbies, known generally as the "Black committee." I was served by a representative of that committee who advised me that they are giving this letter to the press, and that it was officially sent to me. I desire the Chair to hear the following communication. This is addressed to the Western Union Telegraph Co. by the Black committee, dated today.

MARCH 18, 1936.

THE WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. AND MR. T. B. KINGSBURY:

Since the telegram subpoenaed by this committee was immediately followed by editorials in the Hearst publications attacking Hon. JOHN J. McSWAIN, a Member of the House of Representatives and the chairman of its Committee on Military Affairs, the committee finds an added reason to believe that the interests of the Western Union Telegraph Co. would be still more strongly cemented to those of its patron, William Randolph Hearst. The Western Union Telegraph Co. would naturally not desire to bring out the fact that an effort had been made by its patron to intimidate and coerce in the performance of its legislative duty a Member of Congress, whose reputation for loyalty and patriotic service is above criticism and has never been questioned throughout many years of devoted public service until this secret effort of William Randolph Hearst to assassinate his character.

In view of the fact that the matters hereinabove set forth refer to Hon. JOHN J. McSWAIN, a Member of the House of Representatives, it is hereby directed by the committee that a copy of this communication be sent to him.

Very truly yours,

HUGO L. BLACK, Chairman.

Mr. Speaker, the telegram that William Randolph Hearst sent to James T. Williams, Jr., editorial writer for the Hearst papers at Washington and throughout the country, dated April 5, 1935, addressed to him at room 403, no. 261 Constitution Avenue, Washington, D. C., reads as follows:

[Confidential]

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

Why not make several editorials calling for impeachment of Mr. McSWAIN? He is the enemy within the gates of Congress, the Nation's citadel. He is a Communist in spirit and a traitor in effect. He would leave United States naked to its foreign and domestic enemies. Please make these editorials for morning papers. Also make editorials extolling administration for its preparedness policies, which are its main achievement. Suggest advocating duplicating West Point in Middle West, and Annapolis on Pacific coast.

W. R. HEARST.

Mr. Speaker, for several years prior to that time many editorials had appeared in the Hearst paper known as the Washington Times under the signature of James T. Williams, Jr., attacking me personally and questioning my loyalty to the cause of national defense. I had attributed it, Mr. Speaker, to a purely personal animosity and hostility.

James T. Williams, Jr., was raised in Greenville, S. C., which is my home. I think we are not far from the same age, but I am older. It is true we did not go to school together, because I was not raised in the city. I am just a plain country boy. But James T. Williams, Jr., was raised in the city. After I became, by reason of seniority only, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, facts came to my attention that convinced me that certain officers in the Army ought to be investigated, and by authority of this House I proceeded to investigate them. One of the officers who was investigated was Gen. Alexander E. Williams, of North Carolina. I happen to know, from reputation at least, that James T. Williams, Jr.'s father—a lifetime Democrat and honored citizen of the city of Greenville, formerly its mayor, an honored Confederate veteran now over 90 years old—was also raised in North Carolina. I do not know whether he and General Williams are any kin or not, but they are both named "Williams" and both come from the same State.

Those things were repeated so many times in these papers that I have been terribly annoyed, sometimes not being able to sleep because of these unjust attacks, and oftentimes going to the front piazza and seizing the afternoon paper and never letting it reach the eyes of my wife and daughters, because the hurt to them was what hurt me, in having my integrity, my honesty, my patriotism, and my loyalty to this Nation questioned by this little penpusher, Williams. [Applause.]

I offered my life as proof of my loyalty to this Nation. [Applause.] I volunteered also for the Spanish-American War [applause], but I was never enlisted, because the trustees of the school I was then teaching persuaded me that it was my duty to stay with that school from April, when the first South Carolina volunteer regiment was being formed, until June, at which time school closed. They told me that by that time I could enter some subsequent regiment that would be organized. Immediately when school was out I went to the capital of the State, where the second regiment was being enlisted, and as I got off the train, there in the same station the train that was taking the second regiment out was moving away from the station to go to Florida. No third regiment was ever organized, because the war was brought to a close by the protocol after the destruction of Cervera's fleet down here in the Caribbean Sea.

James T. Williams, Jr., is old enough to have volunteered in two wars, but I never heard of him baring his breast in either one. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. BLANTON. I think every Member of the House will assert that there is not a braver and more loyal or patriotic Member of the House than our friend from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN]. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, this is no pleasant task to me. I sought to avoid it. Assuming these attacks by James T. Williams were purely personal and did not have the endorsement or approval of William Randolph Hearst, and hoping that my wife and daughters might be able in peace to read the afternoon papers, on March 6, 1934, I wrote to William Randolph Hearst. But let us go back a little bit. I just snatched these few papers together after I got this notice a few minutes ago from the Senate committee.

I wired Mr. Hearst on March 5, 1934, care Hearst Ranch, San Simeon, Calif.:

Committee on Military Affairs unanimous for increase in strength and efficiency of Air Corps of the Army. However, effort for investigation of Army activities not prompted by partisanship but merely by desire to get value received for money spent for defense purposes. I have been a strong advocate for increased air power for 15 years. I have several bills now pending in Congress to strengthen the air force. We have counted on you and Arthur Brisbane as our strongest allies. If you wish I will send you copies of my bills with brief explanation. Respectfully ask you to suspend judgment on any representations to the contrary until you get all the facts which I am offering to send you. With these facts you can quickly form judgment.

J. J. McSWAIN,
Member of Congress.

I received the following telegram from W. R. Hearst the same day addressed to me:

Thanks. I shall be delighted to read the bills and do what I can to increase the strength and efficiency of the Air Corps of Army.

(Signed) W. R. HEARST.

Having received this wire from him in response to mine, I wrote to Hearst on March 6 as follows:

MY DEAR MR. HEARST: Complying with my offer to send you full information concerning my personal activities and the attitude of the Committee on Military Affairs concerning national defense generally and the Air Corps of the Army specifically, I am submitting this brief statement of the case to accompany the bills to which I will refer. My telegram of yesterday was prompted by what I judged to be the implications contained in an editorial contribution which appeared in the Washington Times on March 5, 1934.

That was one of these many attacks by James T. Williams, Jr., on me. I have not that editorial before me, but I happen to have in my pocket an editorial signed by James T. Williams, Jr., dated December 6, 1935, which appeared in the Washington Times; and, among other things, this editorial made the following statement. By the way, the editorial is headed "A Critical Session With Regard to National Defense":

Unfortunately the House Committee on Appropriations has as its chairman a Representative in Congress, Mr. BUCHANAN, of Texas, who has been all too ready in the past to play politics with the common defense. Unfortunately the House Committee on Military Affairs is afflicted with a chairman whom the President of the United States was forced to rebuke publicly for giving world-wide publicity to some of the most vital secrets involving the common defense. This chairman, Mr. McSWAIN, has done his best since he became chairman of this committee to discredit the Military Establishment, destroy public confidence in the United States Military Academy, and incite public suspicion of the commissioned strength of the Regular Army.

Why this talk about suspicion of the commissioned strength of the Regular Army? Did he refer to the court martial and discharge from the Army of Brigadier General Williams? General MacArthur, when he phoned me and notified me of the verdict of the court martial, declared, speaking of Williams:

He is as guilty as hell.

The same thing may be said of the court martial of Colonel McMullen. You gentlemen know how this committee, working for the country and under authority of the Congress, has unearthed conditions that will, when corrected, result in a saving to this Government in the distant future of, not tens of millions of dollars, but perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars in maintaining our Military Establishment.

Now I continue reading my letter to W. R. Hearst, dated March 6, 1934:

My telegram of yesterday was prompted by what I judged to be the implications contained in an editorial contribution which appeared in the Washington Times on March 5, 1934. That implication, to my mind, is a clear effort to charge that the Democratic leadership in the House of Representatives is playing politics with the national defense, and especially as it relates to the Army Air Corps. "House leadership" in this case cannot refer to anybody except myself and the members of the Committee on Military Affairs. Neither the Speaker nor the floor leader, or any other leader in the House of Representatives, has taken any action or assumed any responsibility whatsoever in connection with the matters hereinafter referred to, and especially with reference to the investigation of War Department expenditures, which is evidently referred to in said editorial comment. I am sure that when you know the facts you will be convinced that no more loyal friend of the Air Corps is to be found anywhere than I am, though I do admit I am a disciple often of yourself and of Arthur Brisbane in this respect.

A personal word first. At the age of 42, married and with a child, I volunteered, entered the first training camp, was later commissioned as captain of Infantry, and served as such until discharge on March 8, 1919. I served about 6 months in France. But my interest in aviation as a powerful weapon in war began at that time. Frail and slow as our machines then were, I could visualize the progress that American invention and the scientific studies of other nations would be sure to bring in the way of increasing the speed and lifting power of aircraft. I have ceaselessly studied the subject ever since and took a very active part in the framing of the Air Corps bill which became law on July 2, 1926. In fact, the provisions of section 10 of that act, relating to the procurement of aircraft, and especially the provisions as to design competitions and competitions in performance and safety, are the product of my own thinking.

And if Mr. FRED VINSON is on the floor I am sure he will confirm this.

Continuing to read:

Furthermore, from the time I entered Congress in March, 1921, I fought hard for the enactment of law of some kind to prevent profiteering during war in war munitions, and also to regulate profits made by munitions makers during peace. I was the author of several resolutions seeking to set up a commission of citizens and Members of Congress to study this huge question. Finally, these efforts resulted in the passage of a joint resolution which created the War Policies Commission, and I was appointed by Speaker Longworth as a member of that Commission, and the records of that Commission will show the active interest and the hard work I did as a member thereof.

On March 20, 1933, I introduced House Concurrent Resolution 6, seeking to carry out the pledge in the Democratic platform to make a survey of all facts affecting the existing national defense establishments, and I enclose a copy thereof. Being unable to get action thereon, and being advised that a House committee would be preferable, on January 11, 1934, I introduced House Resolution 219, copy of which is herewith submitted. After making a vigorous effort for more than 30 days to get favorable action on this resolution, and being finally advised that it would be better that the investigation should be made by the Committee on Military Affairs, on February 20, 1934, I offered House Resolution 275. This proposal was unanimously approved by the 25 members of the Committee on Military Affairs, and when we went before the Committee on Rules, it was unanimously approved by that committee. When the resolution came up for consideration in the House, and when the vote was taken upon the passage of the resolution, there was not a dissenting vote. The committee has been working hard for more than 30 days to investigate these very facts, but has found that it cannot pursue the many ramifications without the help of additional examiners, auditors, and technical experts. That is why we are asking for only $10,000 as expense money, and this has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Accounts.

Now as to the matter of increasing the power and efficiency of the Air Corps. When the Vinson bill was under consideration by the House, and it was manifest that it would pass with an amendment authorizing the increase of the number of planes in the Navy by nearly 1,200, the Chief of Staff of the United States Army sent General Foulis to me asking me to introduce an amendment to that bill authorizing the increase in the number of planes for the Army in the proportion that 1,000 bears to 1,800. The acts of Congress of 1926 authorized 1,000 planes for the Navy and 1,800 for the Army, and this suggestion by the Chief of Staff would increase the authorized strength of the Army Air Corps from 1,800 planes to 3,932 planes. I declined to offer the amendment, because Army legislation had no place upon a Navy bill, but expressed my intention of offering independent legislation to be considered by the Committee on Military Affairs. I expressed myself heartily in favor of the increase, and more, and announced hearings to be had by the committee to which the Chief of Staff, the Deputy Chief of Staff, and other General Staff officers were invited and did attend and testify. The Chief of Staff submitted to me the draft of a bill which I introduced without any change whatsoever on February 1, 1934, copy of which I enclose as H. R. 7553. On the next day, February 2, 1934, I introduced as my own bill H. R. 7601, copy of which is enclosed, and this bill does set up the framework of a real effective fighting air force.

And, Mr. Speaker, to the same effect, through page 4, page 5, page 6, and page 7, I cite Mr. Hearst to bills, resolutions, and instances of my personal zeal and energy for better national defense, and especially by increased air power, and then, after concluding the letter, I added this postscript:

Since Mr. Williams has quoted an extract from a statement by Representative Martin of Oregon, who is a retired major general in the United States Army, I thought it might be interesting to send you page 33 of the hearings held in the Seventy-second Congress before the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments upon a bill introduced by Representative BYRNS, of Tennessee, now Democratic floor leader, to set up a single Department of National Defense, with three subdivisions for land warfare, sea warfare, and air warfare. On January 23, 1932, Representative and former General Martin made a long statement of about 20 pages, and as indicating his attitude toward the Air Corps and toward the editorials by Mr. Brisbane. I am also sending you this extract.

In other words, I sent him my testimony supporting the bill that the then floor leader, now the Speaker of this House, had introduced, and which was then under consideration, and then I say:

In all charity, Mr. Martin has not caught up with the trend of thought upon military problems affecting the future war. He is still thinking in terms of the Spanish-American War, which happened 11 years after he graduated at the Military Academy. While at the Academy he was taught in terms of Gettysburg.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this was on March 6, 1934. It was sent by registered mail, special delivery, air mail. No answer to this communication from that day to this has ever come to me, but the next year, 13 months lacking 1 day after my letter to W. R. Hearst, with this knowledge in his mind, the citations coming from me taken from the records, the records of the War Department, the records of this House, the records of the committee, on the bills I have fought for on this floor, he sends this telegram to Mr. Williams. I had been charitably thinking that Mr. Williams was pursuing a little petty, personal spite of some sort that I need not recite here, other than the fact that I was getting on the trail of Brigadier General Williams, from North Carolina, and I thought that when I notified Mr. Hearst of the facts, that he would see the wrong and harm done me of allowing his editorial writer to vent his personal spleen, not based on facts. I know a public man must face the facts. I think I know a little about what the law is and what the rights of newspapers are, and as long as they tell the facts on me I know I have got to take it. I wanted to give them the facts, and I gave them the facts, and I had a right to assume that false, malevolent, unfounded, wicked, malicious, personal abuse would cease; but it did not. It started up, under a full head of steam, 13 months thereafter, because William Randolph Hearst told James T. Williams to turn on the spigot of venom and of spite and of falsehood and of assassination of character, and charged that I was a Communist. [Laughter.] God save the mark! It seems to be his tactics to charge just anything against a man, irrespective of the truth.

Is not my record plain? Are not the speeches I have made on this floor, the speeches I have made over the radio and in different parts of the country some evidence of the fact that I am not a Communist? Do I not believe in national defense? Are there no witnesses here facing me today who know that I believe in national defense? But I, as responsible to the people and as your responsible agent, insist that it is the duty of the members of our committee to do our own thinking.

I think one trouble with this little James T. Williams, Jr., was that I did not take orders from the War Department, and as long as I am here I shall never take orders. I will do my own thinking. When I agree with them then it is all right and fine; and when I think they are wrong, on my responsibility and on my judgment as a constitutional spokesman of this Government and as your agent, I will dare to say so. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I yield very briefly, please.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I have served for 12 years on the Committee on Military Affairs with the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN]. I can testify from my own personal knowledge that the facts he has given this House as to his own record of service are absolutely true and correct, and I want to say that during my service on the committee I have never known any member to carry out his duties more indefatigably, more conscientiously, or more assiduously than the gentleman from South Carolina [applause]; in fact, the gentleman has been so eager and so intense and has labored so hard and so tirelessly that at times I have remonstrated with him, telling him that he was breaking himself down working in the cause of national defense. No man on the committee during the 12 years I have been there has contributed more to the cause of national defense or served it better or more unselfishly or more valiantly than the gentleman from South Carolina, and, frankly, I had just as soon rise on this floor and question the loyalty, the devotion, and the patriotism of John J. Pershing as to question the loyalty, the devotion, or the patriotism of the gentleman from South Carolina, JOHN J. McSWAIN. [Applause.]

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. For a brief question. I have one or two other matters I wish to refer to.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, as a humble minority member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I think you all know that there is no more ardent and true-blue Republican in the House than myself. I second everything that has been said by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL]. Because of my close association and intimate knowledge of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN], our distinguished chairman, I want to say that there is no Member of this House who is more loyal to his friends and more devoted to the performance of his duty, more capable and courageous in carrying out the mandates of his own conscience than this distinguished and able Member of the House from South Carolina. I hope he will remain here as long as Uncle Joe Cannon when he left this honorable body. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues on the committee. I am under obligations to the Senate for giving me this information before this matter could go out to the press, as it will in the afternoon papers.

I am thankful for what has been said by these friends of mine, and that what I have said has received your approval, as manifested by your applause.

I want to call attention to the fact that General Pershing the other day wrote me a letter, that has been put in the RECORD, in which he commended the work of the Committee on Military Affairs and me personally.

One of the finest things I ever received is right here, from General Bullard, who had read in some paper that I wanted to recommend the awarding of a posthumous medal to "Billy" Mitchell.

General Bullard lies now in a Government hospital in New York City. He cut that statement out of the paper, not with scissors but with a knife, as you see, and he pins it to a little scrap of paper, and he writes, not with a pen but with a pencil:

Very, very right, dear Mr. McSWAIN. The Army owes poor "Billy" much and you much.

Yours,

(Gen.) R. L. BULLARD.

Let little James T. Williams, Jr., state what he may and what he in his malice wishes to say about me and my patriotism and my contribution to the cause of national defense. I call these volunteer witnesses, who never knew this question now being discussed would ever arise—Gen. John J. Pershing and Gen. Robert Lee Bullard—who come here now to tell you that what I have done as chairman of that committee has not been destructive, has not been against the cause of national defense, but has been for sane, sound, reasonable, progressive, honest national defense, so that we would get the maximum of defense for the millions of dollars that we contribute. I want their testimony to neutralize and wipe forever from the minds of the people of this Nation whatever vile suggestions have been made by this paid puny penpusher, this hired minion of Hearst, this mercenary mud slinger, who takes his orders, not from his own conscience and his own brains but from this hellish fiend of San Simeon. He writes his given telegraphic orders; he repeats his master's word; he speaks, not his own conscience, if he has one, but whatever his master orders him to spew out in filth and mud. Mr. Speaker, that is not a free press; that is a hired, a subsidized, and a purchased editorial. That is not free expression; that is not his own thought. That is the thought that was prompted by the inception of this arch enemy of free thought, of free speech, of free government. [Applause.]

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Very briefly.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Can the gentleman tell me whether Mr. Hearst ever volunteered or was ever in any army?

Mr. McSWAIN. I never heard of it, and I imagine we would have heard of it if he had. We have heard of everything that he could imagine that is in his favor, and I am informed that there is a good deal against him that never yet has come out. But there are two Members of this Congress whom that gentleman would better not tackle with falsehood and slander. One is that hard-headed, determined, resolute patriot from Texas, TOM BLANTON, and the other, the man who faces you now. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. Speaker, these editorials composed by James T. Williams, Jr., were not only published in the Washington Times, but in many, if not all, of the various Hearst papers throughout the United States, thus carrying to the whole country the charge that I am not a sincere patriot; that I do not work constructively for the cause of national defense; that I am a Communist; and that, in effect, I am a traitor. This outrageous libel upon my honor, integrity, and patriotism has caused me many hours of suffering and many sleepless nights, to the detriment of my health and my ability properly to work. I have endured it in silence because, being a public servant, I realize that our motives are often misunderstood and our conduct often misrepresented. I knew that my colleagues in the House of Representatives know me and know my work well enough not to be misled by such outrageous and infamous libel. I knew that my friends and constituents in the Fourth Congressional District would hardly be misled by these falsities and vile slanders, and I felt that the rest of the country would, in time, come to realize the sincerity of my patriotic efforts for the great cause of safe and sane and sound national defense. The confidence of the Reserve Officers' Association has been a solace and comfort to me. The fact that many patriotic organizations, such as the Daughters of the American Revolution, the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Military Order of the World War, and others, have invited me to be their guest speaker upon formal public occasions, some of them of national importance and representation, have all been plain blank denials of the outrageous, unscrupulous, unconscionable allegations of Mr. Williams as the paid tool and hired voice of William Randolph Hearst.

WILLIAMS THE MEDDLER IN WAR DEPARTMENT

This man Williams is a sycophant of a most pronounced sort. Reared a Democrat, with strong Democratic traditions, his honored father, long past 90 years old, a lifelong Democrat; yet this Hearst-hired James T. Williams, Jr., turns his back on all family and sectional traditions and joins the Republican Party because he wanted to pose as a power close to the Republican throne; and then, when the Hearst shekels rattled louder and rolled up higher than the Republican papers were paying him, he turns his back upon the Republicans as well as Democrats and becomes a political nondescript—a malicious, mercenary mugwump enjoying the cowardly privilege of shooting at his personal enemies from behind the breastworks of Hearst millions, and sniping at honest public officials through the columns of these yellow sheets belonging to the most selfish, unscrupulous, arrogant, and conscienceless newspaper proprietor that ever soiled the newsracks of America and that ever from time to time befouled and besmirched, at least temporarily, the minds of millions of misguided readers.

AN EXAMPLE OF MEDDLING BY WILLIAMS

Maj. Clinton W. Howard was on duty at Wright Field with the Army Air Corps, and evidently he was requiring the manufacturers of aircraft to come up strictly to specifications. At any rate, he incurs somebody's displeasure. Somebody evidently goes, writes, or telephones to James T. Williams, Jr. What interest James T. Williams, Jr., has in aircraft manufacturers or in the Air Corps' business we would like to know. Why he concerns himself about their business and takes his time and undertakes to exert his personal influence with the Chief of Staff and the Secretary of War to have Major Howard moved I do not know. It is a pertinent inquiry, and if our committee has time we may pursue that inquiry and see what the records show and what the living witnesses will testify, wherever they may be, whether they be in America or on the other side of the Pacific, in the Philippine Islands, or elsewhere. Doubtless Mr. Williams will read these remarks by me, and he will understand better than the ordinary reader why I make these allusions. I am obliged to Senator BLACK, of Alabama, for having furnished me with a copy of a letter written to Senator BLACK by the Secretary of War on March 1, 1934.

The latter part of the letter is a manifest camouflage by the officer who prepared the letter for the Secretary of War to sign. When he speaks of the fact that Major Howard had already remained longer than the customary tour of duty, and that it was time for him to be transferred, and that his professional career and advancement was being impeded by his too long stay at Wright Field, it is almost humorous to those who know how things go in the War Department. Anybody can see the humor in the situation that it took James T. Williams, Jr., to remind the War Department that Major Howard had been at Wright Field too long, and ought to be transferred for the sake of his own professional career. It is simply ludicrous camouflage, for which Williams is undoubtedly greatly indebted to the War Department, and he has tried to pay this debt and other debts to the War Department by making his unfounded, malicious, libelous charges against me. Evidently Williams concluded that it would enhance his influence with the War Department for him to attack and assault me. Evidently he thought there was some personal hostility between General MacArthur and myself, and perhaps between Secretary Dern and myself. I never had the slightest feeling toward either of them. I differed from them in opinion as to certain principles and propositions relating to national defense. The Secretary of War, doubtless following the advice of General MacArthur, and signing a letter manifestly prepared by General MacArthur, bitterly denounced my zeal for an increased and enlarged air force. Instead of being opposed to adequate defense, I found the Secretary of War charged me with advocating such a large air force as to raise doubt as to the peaceful intentions of America. Since that time and since that letter, which the Secretary of War burned in my presence, but of which I have photostatic copies, the War Department and the whole country has moved up to the position I then took, to wit, that this country ought to have approximately 4,000 effective, serviceable fighting planes in order to insure adequate defense. I think this is a good place to insert the letter written by the Secretary of War to Senator BLACK describing the conduct of James T. Williams, Jr., which I characterized as "meddling."

MARCH 1, 1934.

HON. HUGO L. BLACK,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR BLACK: Your letter of February 28 relative to the recent change of station of Maj. Clinton W. Howard, Air Corps, has been received.

This change of station was in no way brought about or even suggested by airplane manufacturers or other companies dealing in Army equipment and supplies.

No newspaper operators, owners, or employees of newspapers requested the relief or transfer of Major Howard. However, some 8 months ago and once subsequently, Mr. James T. Williams, Jr., stating that he was acting in the capacity of a private citizen, and not in any way representing the press, reported to the Department that, according to confidential information received by him from highly authentic sources, Major Howard was not in sympathy with important experimental work being carried on at Wright Field. This experimental work, however, was not connected in any way, either directly or indirectly, with the production of or sale of airplane equipment or supplies to the Government by civil aviation manufacturers or other similar companies. He also stated that Major Howard's personality was unfortunately harsh and antagonistic and had offended those with whom he was required to come in contact officially and otherwise. This report, as to his personality, was officially confirmed.

It was decided, after due conference, that Major Howard had probably been kept for too long a period at this specialized work at Wright Field, and that not only his own professional development might be jeopardized but that it would be advisable for the Government's interest to change his assignment. He was accordingly transferred to Washington to the office of the Chief of Air Corps, where his services were especially desired.

The transfer of Major Howard from Wright Field to duty in the office of the Chief of Air Corps in Washington was a routine departmental matter, Maj. Howard having been on duty at Wright Field since February 24, 1928, approximately 6 years. Normally the stations of officers of the Army are changed every 4 years, but, because of Major Howard's special talent in Air Corps engineering and other related activities, he had been retained at Wright Field beyond the normal time.

I wish to reiterate that no outside pressure of the nature indicated in your letter influenced the Department in this matter, and that this officer's transfer after approximately 6 years of service at Wright Field was dictated entirely by the needs and necessities of the military service.

Sincerely yours,

GEO. H. DERN, Secretary of War.

LIBELS OF WILLIAMS NATION-WIDE

The San Antonio Light, under date of March 23, 1934, carried on its editorial page an article which was a reproduction from the pen of James T. Williams, Jr. Somebody in San Antonio thought I would be intimidated by reading this article and sent the same to me through the mail, with a penciled statement on the margin, as follows:

Not such good advertisement for you. There is need of action—not political play.

Williams evidently fooled that one reader and the reader thought that I would be intimidated, would close my mouth, and follow the dictates of the War Department.

NATIONAL DEFENSE SUFFERS SET-BACK

"There are more people under arms in the underworld today than in the Army and Navy of the United States."

When Attorney General Cummings made this statement before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, he drew a grave indictment against the Congress of the United States.

Under the Federal Constitution Congress is charged with the obligation to provide for the common defense. It is given the exclusive power "to raise and support armies" and to provide and maintain a navy.

Because the Congress has failed in recent years to exercise this power and to discharge this duty, the Army has sunk to seventeenth place and the Navy to third place among the armies and navies of the world.

By authorizing the building up of the Navy to equality with the strongest, the present Congress has taken the first step toward making appropriations for that purpose, but appropriations must follow if this authorization is to prove more than an empty gesture.

But the present Congress has thus far done nothing effective to build up the Army toward the strength authorized by the National Defense Act.

This neglect is chiefly due to the Democratic chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, Congressman McSWAIN, of South Carolina.

More than a month ago, Secretary Dern submitted to Chairman McSWAIN's committee a defense measure of the most urgent importance.

This measure provides the necessary authorization for Congress to appropriate whatever amount may be required to increase the effectiveness and efficiency of the Army Air Corps.

Enactment of this bill at this session would clear the way for the War Department to equip, organize, and maintain what the Air Corps has long needed and what the General Staff urgently recommends, a general headquarters air force of five wings.

Such a force would increase the strength of the Air Corps to 3,800 planes, with the necessary personnel to man them as soon as Congress votes the appropriations and American manufacturers can carry out the contracts for this construction.

Instead of reporting this measure to the House, Chairman McSWAIN persisted in squandering the time of his committee in various and sundry investigations for political purposes.

Instead of reporting this measure to the House and pressing for its passage, Chairman McSWAIN solicits personal publicity by introducing a miscellaneous assortment of measures that have neither the endorsement of the Secretary of War and the General Staff nor the support of intelligently patriotic Members of the Senate or the House.

The Baltimore News and Post of February 13, 1935, carried an editorial by James T. Williams, Jr., containing the following outrageous charges:

The House Committee on Military Affairs has repeatedly ignored sound military recommendations and has attempted to trespass upon the constitutional premises of the Executive. Its members, for the most part, have refused to interest themselves in sound theories of national defense except insofar as the execution of these theories could be compelled to distribute political pork among the constituents they represented.

No constructive legislation has come from the House Committee on Military Affairs in nearly 10 years. The work which ought to have been initiated by this committee in the House has largely devolved upon the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. The Senate committee has refused to play politics with the national defense.

Its members, with few exceptions, have rendered patriotic service in the consideration of national-defense measures and have disposed of them without any partisan consideration.

At the moment the House Committee on Military Affairs appears to have suddenly discovered that the defense of Hawaii is the defense of the United States in the Pacific and that the defense of Hawaii is far from being what it ought to be. But, instead of supporting legislation to equip the Army and to strengthen the defenses of Hawaii, the House committee continues to waste time holding hearings at which facts are reiterated that have been available to every Congress for the past 10 years.

Here is their libel of hearing in Washington Times of December 6, 1935:

Unfortunately, the House Committee on Appropriations has as its chairman a Representative in Congress—Mr. BUCHANAN, of Texas—who has been all too ready in the past to play politics with the common defense.

Unfortunately, the House Committee on Military Affairs is afflicted with a chairman whom the President of the United States was forced to rebuke publicly for giving world-wide publicity to some of the most vital secrets involving the common defense.

This chairman, Mr. McSWAIN, has done his best since he became chairman of this committee to discredit the Military Establishment, destroy public confidence in the United States Military Academy, and incite public suspicion of the commissioned strength of the Regular Army.

PARTISAN POLITICS

Unfortunately, there are too many members of the House Committee on Military Affairs who are ignorant of sound principles of defense, indifferent to sound recommendations, and ready to play partisan politics with defense problems, if, by so doing, they can get votes for themselves in their own districts or publicity for themselves there or elsewhere.

But the session of Congress which convenes next January will be a most critical time for this country because the sapping expedition against the common defense is well organized, well subsidized, and the sappers will attempt to divert public attention from their diabolical purpose by shouting "economy."

And here is another libel appearing in the Washington Times of February 11, 1935:

SPURNS ADVICE

The House Committee on Military Affairs has repeatedly ignored sound military recommendations and has attempted to trespass upon the constitutional premises of the Executive. Its members, for the most part, have refused to interest themselves in sound theories of national defense except insofar as the execution of these theories could be compelled to distribute political pork among the constituents they represent.

What could have been the motives of James T. Williams, Jr., and of William Randolph Hearst? Surely it could not have been an honest conviction on their part that I was disloyal to the country and to the cause of national defense. My whole record gives the lie to any such charge or inference. Surely they could not hope for any man to be more zealous for adequate defense. Could it have been that they hoped to stay and paralyze my hand as chairman of the committee investigating War Department conditions? Had anyone promised James T. Williams, Jr., that his "meddling" would be powerful and effective if he could terrorize me and stop me from my efforts and investigation? Did the aircraft manufacturers who wanted private negotiations for the sale of aircraft to the Government inspire James T. Williams, Jr., and William Randolph Hearst to try to destroy me and to neutralize my influence, and to frighten me from my duty? Did James T. Williams, Jr., take out a personal spite upon me because I knew he was a political turncoat? Why did not William Randolph Hearst answer my letter consisting of nearly eight closely typewritten pages, which letter I wrote him on March 6, 1934, giving him the absolute facts as shown by the record itself? Why did not William Randolph Hearst instruct James T. Williams, Jr., to stick to the truth about me, and stop making false charges through his many editorial utterances which were reproduced in a large number of newspapers throughout the country? Why did William Randolph Hearst, after knowing the facts as shown by my letter of March 6, 1934, telegraph James T. Williams, Jr., on April 5, 1935, instructing him to carry in the columns of the morning papers, in addition to the afternoon papers, this malicious, unjustified, and libelous denunciation of me? These are questions that the people want to know the answer to, and these are questions that Mr. Hearst and Mr. Williams, if they have any manhood left, if they are willing to trust the truth to the people, should answer before the whole people.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937—CONFERENCE REPORT

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment no. 9:

"Sec. 2. To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the purposes of sections 7 and 8 of the Soil Conservation Act, as amended, $440,000,000, to be immediately available and remain available until expended, together with the unexpended balance, not exceeding $30,000,000, of the funds made available for rental and benefit payments by the Secretary of Agriculture under the provisions of the Supplemental Appropriations Act, fiscal year 1936, approved February 11, 1936."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 2. To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of Sections 7 to 17, inclusive, of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, approved February 29, 1936 (Public, No. 461, 74th Congress), including the employment of personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, printing and binding, purchase of law books, books of reference, periodicals, and newspapers, and other necessary expenses, $440,000,000, together with not to exceed $30,000,000 of the funds made available under the head "Payments for Agricultural Adjustment" in the Supplemental Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936, approved February 11, 1936 (Public, No. 440, 74th Congress); to be immediately available and to remain available until June 30, 1938, for compliances under said Act in the calendar year 1936: Provided, That no part of such amount shall be available after June 30, 1937, for salaries and other administrative expenses except for payment of obligations therefor incurred prior to July 1, 1937: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, from time to time transfer to the General Accounting Office such sums as may be necessary to pay administrative expenses of the General Accounting Office in auditing payments under this item."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me at this time to offer an amendment?

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I shall yield to the gentleman to make some remarks, but I cannot yield to the gentleman to offer an amendment. Several gentlemen on the minority side have indicated a desire to speak on this amendment. I shall be very glad to yield to them at this time. I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this amendment provides $470,000,000 to permit the Secretary of Agriculture to operate under the Soil Conservation Act, which was passed 3 or 4 weeks ago. I had it in mind to offer an amendment to the amendment which would limit the payments to any one person or firm or corporation to $2,000, and also to provide that none of the funds appropriated should be used to pay benefits on land brought into cultivation hereafter as a result of irrigation and reclamation projects. I appreciate that the parliamentary situation is such that I shall not be allowed to offer these amendments, which I believe should be adopted, to any such provision as this. I shall be obliged to content myself with just plain opposition to this appropriation.

I believe that the operation which is contemplated, namely, the payment of benefits at the rate $10 per acre upon approximately 35,000,000 acres of land will result in greater distress, especially among the dairy farmers, than anything that has ever come before. I believe that the operation of the proposition is going to result in creating more crops on the market than we had before. I do not believe it will reduce production.

I do not believe it is the proper thing for the Government of the United States to pay that amount of money to individuals. In addition to that, they have come in here with no real justification for the money. There is no definite program as to how they are to spend it. It is simply a blanket request, with the statement that the thing is being worked out as to how they are to spend it. It is perfectly apparent that this Congress ought to get the right information as to how that money is to be spent before we give them the money. I do not believe we should adopt this amendment at all. We should reject it and turn it back and let those people come here, and if they have a legitimate reason for spending the money and a legitimate program for spending it, show us what it is.

In the meantime I hope this House will reject this amendment and throw the thing out.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON].

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, during the consideration of this amendment before the committee, Mr. Davis, Administrator for the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, appeared before the committee. I interrogated the Administrator as to the policy that would be adopted in relation to paying benefits to land which had not been in cultivation at the time of the passage of the recently enacted soil-erosion plan. Of course, the Administrator was obliged to report that there were no restrictions in that law, and that land subsequently brought into cultivation through Government aid in irrigation and reclamation projects would be allowed the benefits. It seemed that the position was so contradictory that it should be called to the attention of the House.

Mr. Speaker, rather than go into detail and report the conversation had before the subcommittee, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by placing in the RECORD a page and a half of the hearings wherein this information was developed through the aid of the official who will have charge of this program. Pages 52 and 53, supplemental hearing independent offices appropriation bill for 1937.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

POLICY OF RECLAMATION OF ARID AND SEMIARID LAND

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Davis, I want to ask you a question about a matter which ultimately will be very important and will affect the total amount you will expend.

Of course, you are aware that the Government in the last 2 or 3 years has allocated probably three-quarters of a billion dollars to the promotion of irrigation and reclamation projects, which, of course, will bring into cultivation large tracts of land which, I take it, you have not considered in your phase of the plan you have now in mind. You see new lands coming into use, and they have the advantage largely of Government funds for 10 years without interest. Will they not be accorded the same consideration as the land that has been in cultivation, and if so, will we not be in the inconsistent position of bringing new land into cultivation, with no interest payments to make for 10 years?

Mr. DAVIS. There is no line of distinction drawn at the present time between reclamation and irrigation lands and any other type.

Mr. THURSTON. So, as these tremendous new tracts come into cultivation, you will be obliged to give them the same consideration that you give land which is now being put into cultivation, or which recently has been in cultivation?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes; if this program is a continuing program, operating at the time these new lands that you refer are in use, I would say that is true.

Mr. THURSTON. So, while the object of this really is to hold down production of grain, we will be in the inconsistent position of reducing production in one section and greatly accelerating it in another.

Mr. DAVIS. I think one of the results will be holding down acreage in the main. I do not want to permit it to go without noting my exception, the statement that the object is to hold down the acreage of grain. The Supreme Court says that you cannot do that. If the Government is going to follow its past policies of reclaiming land by irrigation, should it not balance that by requiring the distribution of whatever funds are available, on the principle that areas of land of equal productivity should be taken back into Federal hands and removed from the field of production?

Mr. THURSTON. Of course, while the act may contain certain recitals, I think that many farm districts have been led to believe that the program will reduce the amount of grain that has been heretofore produced.

Mr. DAVIS. I think that will be one of the results.

Mr. THURSTON. We are then faced with this inconsistent situation that is bound to develop and greatly embarrass you and your associates in being required to pay for the nonuse of new lands brought into cultivation, unless there is some exception or some restriction imposed.

Mr. WOODRUM. Is it not entirely reasonable to suppose that as this program develops and such situations arise there will be changes of policy and amendments to the law? I do not suppose anyone expected that this law would be perfect.

Mr. DAVIS. Experience will be my teacher.

Mr. THURSTON. If payments are made to the new lands, it will require much more money than if we were dealing with a problem we were familiar with; that is, the amount of land heretofore in cultivation.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Congress wishes to modify that language and provide that no payment under this should apply to new land brought into production under federally financed reclamation projects, that would seem to me to be perfectly within your right to do, and I would not interpose any objection.

On the other point, however, that if the Government continues to extend—I came from the Western State of Montana, and I know the factors and forces back of reclamation that you do not have in the East. I know what that situation is. But is it not reasonable to consider, supposing $100 is made available for reclamation—would it not be a good idea to say that $50 shall be used to take production and put it back in the Federal domain land in the aggregate, having equal productive capacity, so you balance the reclamation of land. It is probably a good land use to do that, and supply the money you have to do it, so that when you take dry land out, that is where you put wet land in?

Mr. THURSTON. It seems to me that your object of reducing farm production will be defeated when new land is brought into cultivation.

Mr. DAVIS. It has been a paradox, on the face of it, at least, for some time. From the days of the old marketing act we have been attempting to bring production into balance with the policy of reclamation.

Mr. THURSTON. Of course, in the last 3 years I suppose many times more has been allocated than in any like period.

Mr. DAVIS. For reclamation?

Mr. THURSTON. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know the figures. But looking at it from the long-time agricultural standpoint, farmers are better off where the water supply is under their own control than otherwise. But unless reclamation projects are intended by the program to take arid lands out of production, I think the program is out of balance.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Did Mr. Davis state that he could not, in fact, control the lands being brought into cultivation by irrigation?

Mr. THURSTON. He said that inasmuch as there was no restriction in the act that was passed he would be obliged to pay benefits to new irrigation projects that were begun after the passage of the law.

Mr. CULKIN. But the inference was that the Department of Agriculture had no power over irrigation, but that that was within the Department of the Interior.

Mr. THURSTON. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Does the gentleman know it is the policy of the administration to withdraw from production the same amount of acreage for all acreage that is put in by reclamation?

Mr. THURSTON. I will say that the greater number of acres that will be withdrawn in the soil-erosion program is secondary land or submarginal land that has not yielded in abundance and has been only light in production, whereas the new land that will come in, that will constantly receive water, will undoubtedly produce much greater crops than the same number of acres taken out of submarginal lands.

Mr. WHITE. As a matter of fact, we know it will take more acres of the submarginal land for the reclamation land put in; but that is the policy of the administration, to keep a balance of production by taking out as much land as they put in by reclamation projects.

Mr. THURSTON. I submit that if that matter had been developed on the floor during the consideration of the original bill, very likely restrictive provisions would have been placed therein which would have prohibited newly developed land from receiving those benefits.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to point out to the House and to the country that this large item of appropriation comes here as an amendment to this bill as the result of an amendment drafted at the other end of the Capitol, without any hearings whatsoever, insofar as I am advised. It was adopted at the other end of the Capitol without a word of debate on the floor, and it came to this end of the Capitol before the House had even taken up for consideration the legislation authorizing the appropriation.

Of course, an authorization now exists, but it seems to me that when it comes to spending $500,000,000 of the people's money, the House and the country are entitled to a comprehensive explanation from those in authority as to how that money is to be spent. From my point of view, I can only say that that explanation is still lacking.

It is true that the House conferees endeavored to obtain some light on the picture. Hearings were held, and for 2 days the conferees sat across the table from Mr. Davis, Administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, and his coworkers and questioned them. I commend those hearings to the attention of the Members of the House. I submit that the only facts demonstrated conclusively are, first, the fact that no one in authority today is in a position to give any detailed picture of how this tremendous sum is to be expended; and, secondly, the fact that it is the aim of those who are to spend the money to put into effect as closely as possible, by indirection, the same policy which the Supreme Court declared to be unconstitutional, when applied directly, under the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Take, for example, the administrative set-up. No breakdown was furnished of the personnel contemplated to spend this great sum of money. Every activity normally supplies such a breakdown. The Administrator, however, was unable to comply. Under the Triple A, we still have about 5,000 permanent employees and several hundred temporary workers, not to mention the State and county representatives, which at times have run as high as 100,000. In addition, under the Soil Conservation Act passed a year ago, there are between five and six thousand permanent employees and several thousand temporary workers. The stated purposes of that act are very similar to those of the new bill. Yet, despite these facts, in the new set-up it is said that as many as 4,000 of the permanent employees of the A. A. A. will be needed in addition to the temporary workers and the representatives in the States and in the counties. The only yardstick used was the very rough estimate of 7 percent for administrative expenditure out of such total as Congress might make available.

If we consider the conditional payments that are to be made, the testimony is equally vague and equally inconclusive. If I had the time, I could call your attention to statement after statement in the hearings showing that details are not available yet as to how these payments are to be computed or applied; that comprehensive plans are impossible pending reports of regional conferences, decisions by the Secretary of Agriculture, and other steps necessary in order to determine the program as a whole.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. In a general way, all that the witnesses could tell us was that under the A. A. A. about 30,000,000 acres had been taken out of former production, and that to take this 30,000,000 acres out of production had cost about $500,000,000 a year. They said, in substance, therefore, "Although we are not in a position to talk in terms of the new legislation, we think if you will allow us to take 30,000,000 acres from the production of soil-depleting products and turn them into the production of non-soil-depleting products, and if you will give us about what you gave us under the A. A. A., we should be able to get along pretty well." This is about the sum and substance of the testimony.

It is fair, I think, to add that testimony as to the past was also unavailable. It seems impossible to believe, for example, that the Administrator is not in a position to furnish information as to payments made under the A. A. A. It is difficult to escape the conclusion that the lack of response in this connection indicates an unwillingness to have the facts known.

Yesterday I read a quotation from George Peek, formerly a leading figure in the present administration. The quotation characterized those provisions of the new farm bill designed to regulate the flow of farm products as "merely a cloak for continuation of a policy of crop restriction in a rather specious effort to evade the Supreme Court's decision." The hearings in connection with the legislation lead inevitably, in my judgment, to this conclusion. They indicate definitely the determination to continue with one hand the policy of scarcity to the extent of thirty to thirty-five million acres per year, while encouraging with the other hand tremendous irrigation projects and great importations of agricultural commodities said to have been estimated in 1935 as equivalent to the production of from forty to fifty millions of acres. I greatly regret that no opportunity is offered to support a sound and constructive program in aid of the farmers of the Nation.

It has been estimated, Mr. Speaker, that the increase in our public debt for the 3 years ending June next will be approximately equivalent to $40 per minute from the date that Columbus discovered America until the present time.

The last 3 years have been characterized by tremendous appropriation, by tremendous expenditure, and by tremendous delegation of legislative power in respect to both.

The item under consideration calls for another great appropriation and a further great delegation of legislative power to the Secretary of Agriculture. The appropriation, if approved, is to be expended by him under terms and conditions which he himself would appear to be unable to define at this time. No payments, we are told, will be made under the act until September or October next. It is no doubt considered that payments to beneficiaries at that time will be particularly helpful.

The basis for haste, Mr. Speaker, is not apparent. I repeat the statement which I made in beginning these brief remarks. In my judgment, if the House is to appropriate half a billion dollars of the people's money, it owes it to itself and to the country to obtain from someone, somewhere, somehow, comprehensive information as to how this money is to be expended.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I realize that any discussion of this appropriation to carry out the purposes of the soil-conservation bill is of necessity post mortem, but I wish to emphasize the point made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] when he said that this bill does in fact wreck the dairy farmer. The dairyman is the only real conservationist and he is thrown to the wolves by this legislation.

I want to emphasize, too, the utter fallacy that is created here by Mr. Davis, representing the Department of Agriculture, testifying that he has no jurisdiction over reclamation. With one hand we are spending for reclamation $1,250,000,000, with the other hand we are spending $500,000,000 annually to retire 35,000,000 acres from production. These policies are contrariwise. They are opposed to each other, and, in my opinion, if continued they spell disaster for this country and particularly for the American farmer.

When the Interior bill comes back to us you will find that it has added to it, in one lump sum, $52,000,000 for irrigation. To complete the irrigation projects carried in that bill will cost this country $1,250,000,000. If there was ever a civilization gone mad it is ours. This administration today is without course or compass.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we are again confronted with an increase in an appropriation bill, this time the independent offices bill, in the sum of $2,170,000,000. This may seem small to some of you men, but I cannot understand it; it is such a large amount—$2,000,000,000 is such a sum that it is almost beyond comprehension to me.

The question now is, where are you going to get this money? The Ways and Means Committee are trying to do something now to raise money through additional taxation; but all you Members of Congress think about is adding to these appropriation bills—spending, spending, spending; appropriation, appropriation, appropriation—we do not seem to do anything else but spend, spend, spend.

I congratulated the majority leader yesterday on trying to keep down the legislative appropriation bill. Every other appropriation bill at this session of Congress came with an increase over previous years—enormous increases. You now bring this bill back from the Senate with over $2,000,000,000 additional hooked onto it.

We should pass sensible appropriation bills, with respect to good, sound, common sense in spending, with due respect to all people—the saver, the farmer, the poor, the worker—not half-baked, radical, Russianized legislation such as prohibits the farmer from farming as he formerly did, without molestation by a lot of "brain trusters." Of course, that is a fine thing to get votes, but it is going to wreck our Nation.

Getting back to this soil-conservation proposition, I want to insert in the RECORD the amount of wheat we imported in 1934. I will insert here a table showing the farm products imported in 1935 as compared with 1934.

Commodity	Year 1934	Year 1935
Wheat.....60-pound bushel.....	7,736,532	27,438,870
Corn.....56-pound bushel.....	2,959,256	43,242,296
Oats.....32-pound bushel.....	5,580,407	10,106,903
Butter.....pound.....	1,107,020	22,674,642
Beef, fresh.....do.....	140,447	8,584,114
Pork, fresh.....do.....	127,746	3,922,609
Canned meat.....do.....	46,777,875	76,653,242
Animal oils and fats, edible.....do.....	1,723,261	18,895,241
Hides.....do.....	200,770,332	303,475,633
Tallow.....do.....	42,813,299	245,850,922
Carpet wool.....do.....	85,181,282	171,504,101

Note the increases of importation of farmers' produce, yet you want our farmers to let their ground lay idle, pay them for so doing, and import the things they raise in ever increasing amounts. Why do you do it? You tax the people to pay for permitting foreigners to raise our produce instead of our own farmers. You will wreck the country by this process, sure.

We might not be fools here, but we are certainly doing the things that fools would do.

I believe in taxes and I believe the more you make the more you should pay, but I feel that this Congress by passing such ridiculous laws will soon wreck the Nation. You cannot pay out eight billion a year and collect four billion a year and keep it up much longer. You will cause America to loose its form of government and this no one wants to see. We must stop these ruthless expenditures by the huge appropriations.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY].

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Speaker, the thing that concerns me this afternoon is the degree of apathy and indifference of the Members of the House toward this proposed amendment. A handful of Members sit here considering an amendment giving approximately a half billion dollars to one of the great bureaucracies which exist under the present administration.

Let me review the soil-erosion bill which this amendment makes appropriation for. It came before our Agricultural Committee, but no hearings were held. We could not secure hearings on request. However, Mr. Davis and Mr. Wallace appeared before the committee for about 15 minutes apiece. There was no stenographic record of their testimony available to the Members. This bill was just pushed through on orders from above. It passed the House and then went to the Senate, where they put on an authorization for a half billion dollars of the people's money. An appropriation therefor comes in here today attached to this independent offices bill as an amendment.

We are now asked to pass this amendment turning over this half billion dollars to the Secretary of Agriculture, to be paid by him to farmers, without our having had presented to us any plans, rules, or regulations under which this vast sum will be disbursed, nor have we any data on the amounts to be paid on various crops.

The bill gives the Secretary of Agriculture almost supreme power. He makes the terms and conditions under which the bill will be administered, and, as I stated in my speech on the bill some weeks ago, they even dared to write in the original draft of the bill a provision prohibiting any audit except by the Secretary of Agriculture on himself and his Department. Now, on top of all this, they propose to give them the money without knowledge of the terms and conditions under which he will spend it.

If we vote this money, the Agricultural Administration will pay this money out in grants to farmers for one or more of the several purposes of the bill. This money will be paid under certain terms and conditions yet to be divulged. So, when a farmer accepts this money, he does it in accordance with and subject to the terms and conditions to be set forth by the Department, and, in my opinion, this will constitute a contract and be in violation of the recent decision of the Court in the Hoosac case.

Mr. Speaker, you and I as Members of the House have a real responsibility in this matter, and should not, in my judgment, vote this great sum of the taxpayers' money without knowing what the plan is and what the terms and conditions will be which will govern the grants.

The bill, plus the amendment, constitutes the greatest grant of power to a bureaucracy ever made by an American Congress. It is an abdication of the powers of Congress.

The Agricultural Bureau has a good man at the head of it, as far as character and integrity is concerned but he has acquired the habit of coming before the Congress and asking for power and more power, and each time the Congress proceeds to give it to him. We should know from him what he is going to do with the money before we grant it. We have no answer from him as to that, but all of us will have to answer to our constituents.

The Agricultural Department has been holding six regional hearings around the country, seeking to learn the attitude of the farmers on the new farm bill. Mr. Wallace had six stenographers taking down his testimony at the New York meeting, but no testimony was taken down by a stenographer of the testimony of the farm representatives. There is a great diversity of opinion among them in reference to the administration of this particular matter.

Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the membership to reject this amendment. Let us bring the matter up in the proper way before the Congress. I see my colleague the gentleman from South Carolina and other members of the Agricultural Committee here. I, for one, am through passing legislation giving to these bureaucracies the power to spend more money without getting some definite information as to how it is going to be spent and where. It is time to call a halt on such procedure, and I appeal to the Members of the House to turn down this amendment and maintain the prerogatives of the House.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I should like to ask the gentleman, who is a member of the Agricultural Committee, if it is not true that if these funds are used in the manner as has been indicated here today, inducing the farmers to comply by retiring acreage, that as the prices move up it would be perfectly natural for others who desire to profit by those increased prices to apply commercial fertilizer to submarginal land and bring back into production the same volume of food-stuffs, thereby defeating the entire program?

Mr. TOBEY. There is not any question about that. It happened under the A. A. A. in 1933 and 1934. In the South they narrowed up their rows from 36 inches to 27 inches. They applied heavier amounts of commercial fertilizer to their land and they obtained increased yields over what they had the year before. The gentleman is correct in connection with his interrogation.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, it is easy to criticize, and in the observations made by these distinguished gentlemen who would withhold any appropriation for agriculture for next year, they criticize but do not offer any plan.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Certainly.

Mr. TABER. Does the other fellow offer any plan?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; he has offered a plan and it has worked.

Mr. TABER. Not in these hearings.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is the stone wall you gentlemen are butting your heads against now and will be butting your heads against in the days to come. We have offered a plan and the plan has worked.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I read with interest the gentleman's interrogation of the gentleman who came before the committee with Mr. Davis. Was the gentleman entirely satisfied with the answers he got to those questions?

Mr. WOODRUM. I will answer the gentleman the best I can.

Mr. Speaker, ever since I have been a Member of this body, which is 14 years, and which is not long in comparison with the service of some of the distinguished gentlemen here, I have been hearing about doing something for the farmer. I think I have almost a 100-percent record in voting for almost every sort of nostrum presented for doing something to help the farmer. I have hoped some of them would work. However, when the present administration came in it did do something that helped the farmer, and I anticipate that no gentleman now on the other side of the aisle who is so much concerned about preserving surpluses of corporations and individuals, will undertake to get up in his seat and say that actually the farmer has not been helped. He has been helped. A plan was presented and put into operation which was helping American agriculture. Now, it turned out to be unconstitutional. We were doing the best we could to help agriculture. I voted for it, and I do not feel any humiliation or feel that I made a mistake in thinking it was constitutional when distinguished judges on the Supreme Court of the United States were themselves mistaken, or perhaps are mistaken, so a majority of the Court holds about it; but the fact remains it was unconstitutional.

What are you going to do now, you Budget balancers? What are you going to do with agriculture when the Supreme Court cut the Triple A out from under them? Are you going to leave them hanging in midair where they were before?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. WOODRUM. Why, certainly. Will the gentleman tell me his plan for the relief of agriculture now?

Mr. CRAWFORD. My plan would be this: Instead of paying $10 per acre this year, $10 next year per acre, and $10 the next year per acre, and so on and on and on, let the Government go out and buy outright the submarginal lands that are subject to agricultural uses, put them beyond the reach of any speculator who wants to apply fertilizer to such land, and thereby support the price structure from the standpoint of production control.

Mr. WOODRUM. How much money would it take to do that?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is not a question of how much money, because—

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, no!

Mr. CRAWFORD. How much money will it take to do it the other way and never accomplish anything?

Mr. WOODRUM. Five hundred million dollars for next year.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And in 10 years $5,000,000,000.

Mr. WOODRUM. But the gentleman's colleagues demand definite information. How many acres are you going to take out, and how much money will it take, and what is the number of the gentleman's bill to read his plan into effect? I would like to get it and read it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is not any bill—

Mr. WOODRUM. Of course not.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And how much attention would the gentleman pay to it if I did put in such a bill?

Mr. WOODRUM. I would be pleased to read it and give it due consideration.

Mr. Speaker, this is the claptrap we are hearing here every day. There is not a gentleman on the other side who can get up and tell you what ought to be done. We have brought in a plan, and it has passed the Congress. Agriculture today is on the up-and-up, and we are asking for money to carry the plan into effect.

Now, Mr. Speaker, complaint is made because we have not given definite information about how this money is to be used. When this amendment came back from the Senate, providing $470,000,000, the House conferees were not willing to come into the House of Representatives and bring the amendment in and ask for its adoption without finding out as much information as we could, and we summoned before our committee—and I had the entire subcommittee made conferees, consisting of the distinguished and able gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] and his colleague from Ohio [Mr. BOLTON]—the representatives of the Department of Agriculture, and they had full and wide-open opportunity, and you can read the hearings, and I think you will find an honest and frank disclosure. They said:

We hope by this program to take out of soil-depleting cultivation between 35,000,000 and 50,000,000 acres of land. We hope that this can be done for the 1936 crop.

Of course, it is going to depend to some extent on how the farmers cooperate with the program, but the best information we have, in view of the Triple-A program, is that 35,000,000 acres will be involved.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. In just a moment.

If this is done, we believe the cost will be approximately $11 an acre paid to the farmer, with an administrative cost of approximately 75 cents an acre.

I do not know how anybody could be more definite than this, unless they were mind readers or had some providential power to sweep aside the curtains of the future and see what is going to happen. They were endeavoring and we are endeavoring to carry out a program as near as possible to the Triple-A program, and that cost us approximately $500,000,000 a year.

I now yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FULMER. Is it not a fact that because of the decision on the part of the United States Supreme Court stating that agriculture is a State problem, the Federal Government cannot, at this time, go out and make any definite plan, because they are now waiting on the States to submit their plan?

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman is correct.

Now, my good friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania got me to yield him some time so that he could ask me a question, and now he has left and cannot hear my answer to it. I am sorry the gentleman is not here, because were he present I would like, in a spirit of good humor, to discuss with him some facts, which I do not feel that I can do in his absence.

The difficulty with my friend from Pennsylvania is that the gentleman is interested in only one thing, and that is taxes, cutting down the tax bill. It never dawns on the gentleman, who is a distinguished educator and a great industrialist in the great State of Pennsylvania—it has never dawned on him to manifest an interest in the great mass of the American agriculturists, the working people of the country, and the long bread lines of unemployed. He thinks always in the terms of dollars and tax bills. He says the thing we are doing here is wrecking the country.

Now, I sympathize with you gentlemen on the minority; that wrecking song you are singing is getting weaker and weaker. [Laughter.] It is going round and round, and every time it comes out it is weaker. While you are hollering about it, every time we pick up a newspaper we find that business is improving. The only thing in depression now is red ink.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to substitute for the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I would like to have the gentleman from Virginia make that speech in my congressional district.

Mr. WOODRUM. I would be very glad to if I get an invitation.

Mr. GIFFORD. Did the gentleman from Virginia read the index report last Sunday?

Mr. WOODRUM. I have read it, and I hold right here the index report from Boston.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am referring to the index of the last 3 weeks. Did not the gentleman see that it was going down steadily?

Mr. WOODRUM. I have the index report here from Boston on March 17.

Mr. GIFFORD. That is the day that you see snakes. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOODRUM. This report says:

Boston, March 17.—Residential building is on with a good start this year. January contracts awarded were for 27 percent more homes than in January last year and with a 67-percent increase in value.

There is no greater barometer, no more dependable index than the building industry in the gentleman's State of Massachusetts, and he will find that it is on the up and up.

Mr. GIFFORD. I would like to have the gentleman come to my textile district and recreational district—

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not know about the recreational part of it, but business is getting better.

Mr. GIFFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman, Are there any more snakes in that report?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes. I am afraid here are more snakes. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Briefly.

Mr. CONNERY. I want to call attention to the fact that St. Patrick got rid of the snakes.

Mr. WOODRUM. Now, here is another:

NEW YORK, March 4.—Aggregate net income of 466 domestic corporations for 1935 was 33.9 percent above the previous year, a tabulation made today by the Associated Press shows. Three giant industrial units, United States Steel, General Motors, and American Telephone, contributed more than 20 percent to the total.

The gentleman's employees in the textile mills of Massachusetts are buying more goods from his merchants up there, and every merchant up there will tell the gentleman that conditions are better today than when we came into power.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am glad the gentleman tries to make me hopeful; but I rose to ask the gentleman this particular question. The gentleman forgets that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] presented a plan, but we will let it go by, and let us say that we have no plan. That does not help the gentleman's plan, because we have no plan. I want to ask him this question: Because the A. A. A. was successful, as he claims, does he think that under soil conservation God Almighty is going to help as He did the A. A. A.?

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, I think God Almighty will always do His part; and I will wager the gentleman from Massachusetts that the gentleman from Kansas votes for this appropriation.

Mr. GIFFORD. That I will?

Mr. WOODRUM. I am talking about the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], whose opinion on agricultural matters we honor and respect. I wager that he will vote for this appropriation.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, I shall probably vote with him.

Mr. WOODRUM. And I wonder if my friend has seen the morning paper, with the account of the huge income-tax payments, which are pouring in to such an extent that as the newspaper says, they have inspired rumors on Capitol Hill that it might not even be necessary to pass a tax bill. It may not be necessary to pass another tax bill because of the 46-percent increase in income-tax returns.

Mr. GIFFORD. Was the gentleman listening the other day when I told the House that we did not need to pass a tax bill, because the Eccles theory of borrowing money has brought about this prosperity?

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, this is not borrowing money; these are income-tax returns.

Mr. GIFFORD. You do not need the income tax. Just borrow money, according to Mr. Eccles, and that creates credit, and that will surely account for all of the prosperity.

Mr. WOODRUM. Borrowing money?

Mr. GIFFORD. We do not need a tax bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman says that the income-tax returns are the result of borrowing money. Income-tax returns are the result of citizens of the United States having more taxable income in the last fiscal year than they had before.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am not one of them.

Mr. WOODRUM. The money is pouring into the Treasury.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman refers to prosperity in January 1936, as compared with the conditions in 1935. In January 1935 we imported into this country from Canada 150,000 pounds of cheese, while in January 1936 we imported from Canada 750,000 pounds of cheese, and since the first of the year the price of cheese went down 3 cents a pound in this country. Does the gentleman think that is prosperity for the dairy industry?

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman has not heard me or any of my colleagues state that the millennium had come. I do not say that there are not still rocks in the path ahead, but the ship of state is moving forward under the gallant, courageous leadership of our pilot in the White House, and the people of the country know it.

Mr. BOILEAU. And I say to the gentleman that some of these rocks have been taken out of one path and put into the path of the dairy industry.

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, I do not say that there are not certain groups in this country who have not recovered as quickly as we want them to.

Mr. BOILEAU. And this appropriation we are now considering is one of the rocks put in the path of the dairy industry.

Mr. WOODRUM. No; I do not think that. The gentleman will see from the hearings that Mr. Chester Davis, speaking in response to a question by the gentleman from Iowa about whether taking land out of production and putting it into grass would hurt the dairy industry. Mr. Davis said in his judgment it would not. He said their experience had been under the Triple A that although they had taken land out of production that went into grass, strange as it may seem, that fact of itself had not adversely affected the dairy industry, but that if it did, they had the power and the funds and the purpose under this bill to meet the emergency if it presented itself.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does the gentleman believe there is more feed for dairy cattle in grass than in tobacco?

Mr. WOODRUM. I am not thinking about the dairy industry or about tobacco. I am thinking about the farmers of the United States altogether. This bill is the administration's plan to help agriculture as a whole, and the gentleman well knows agriculture is better off today than it was when we came into power, and we are going to keep it better off, and the people of the country know that in the White House we have a man who will keep it in that condition if he can.

Mr. BOILEAU. I grant that conditions in agriculture are better off today than at that time, and conditions in all lines of industry have likewise improved, but I say to the gentleman that the dairy farmers have not received as much benefit as other groups of farmers, and have not received as much benefit as industry, and the bill for which this appropriation is made will further injure the dairy industry, and will do immeasurable damage to that industry, which is the largest of all agricultural industries.

Mr. WOODRUM. I appreciate the gentleman's apprehension about the industry he so ably represents. I do not believe the administration in charge of this farm bill is going to permit any one group to be adversely affected by it, and I believe if anything happens in its administration that does adversely affect the dairy industry, the situation will be met by the administration.

Mr. BOILEAU. It is very clear that this twenty-five or thirty million acres will practically all be put into grass and legumes, which can be used only as feed for livestock, and to that extent this twenty-five or thirty million acres of land will be put into direct competition with the dairy industry. Dairying cannot get any benefit out of the bill under such circumstances, and it must result in injury to the dairy industry. It cannot be anything else. You cannot spell it in any other way. There will be more lands being used for dairy purposes, and that is all.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. HOOK. I just want to call the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] to the statement of Mr. Reed, head of the dairy industry, which says that this is good for the dairy industry.

Mr. BOILEAU. Who is this man Reed? I never heard of any great agriculturist by the name of Reed.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield further. I am sorry the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] did not remain here. The gentleman is always talking about wrecking the country. I want to read a little letter that went into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It was put in by the gentleman from Texas, but I am afraid we did not all hear it in the confusion. This is a letter written by the Woolrich Woolen Mills, of Woolrich, Pa. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLARD. That is old stuff now.

Mr. WOODRUM. It may be old stuff, but it is still good stuff. [Laughter.]

DEAR CUSTOMER: Time marches on. 1935 has passed into history. Woolrich enjoyed one of the best years in its 105 years of existence.

What a wail that is! The tragedy of it is that today some of the loudest wails, the loudest squawks, that are coming against the administration and the man in the White House are from people like the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], who has more largely and directly benefited by the wise leadership of this administration.

Mr. GIFFORD. May I take the place of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

Mr. WOODRUM. In just a moment. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that, in my judgment, it is not a thing to brag about, for an industry in Massachusetts or Pennsylvania or Virginia, which has so greatly prospered in these past 2 or 3 years, when most of the people of this country were being ground into the dust by the awful economic conditions through which they passed. It would be interesting indeed to know, if we might know, how the Woolrich Co., of Woolrich, Pa., of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is one of the rich owners, managed and manipulated its affairs during these terrible and terrific years, when labor was starving and being underpaid, and when the bread lines were lengthening. We should like to know how it happened that they had one of the best years in their 105 years of existence. One of the beneficiaries of that condition stands in the Well of this House almost daily and criticizes the administration that has made it possible for his business to be resurrected during such a terrible time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for just a moment?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In connection with the business prosperity of the country, although the United States Chamber of Commerce has been very critical of this administration, only a few days ago its president, Harper Sibley, gave out this statement:

Despite the disturbing factors of government, business is at the highest level in the past 5 years.

Mr. WOODRUM. Everywhere you hear that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for another moment?

Mr. WOODRUM. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The General Motors Corporation, which is very largely owned by some gentlemen who recently gave a dinner here in Washington [laughter], reports their net income for 1935 the sum of $167,000,000.

Mr. WOODRUM. The difficulty is we are going to have a boom. That is what is worrying me. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to remind the gentleman, when he talks about "time marches on", that I have a patent on that. "Time marches on!" But I wish to say, substituting for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], you cannot blame a successful businessman who is running a successful business, employing a lot of people and paying his taxes, for thinking how terrible it is that billions should have to be borrowed, thereby holding up everybody else.

Mr. WOODRUM. No; I do not blame him; but I say when he is squawking about business conditions he is not thinking about the welfare of the country. He is thinking about the fact that after resurrecting this country he is going to have to disgorge one or two of those dollars of profits that he made in 1935.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania feels like I do, that because you spend billions and billions and billions, according to the Eccles' theory, which is taught us in our committee, that has brought about your prosperity. We worry. RICH worries. I worry, and the gentleman worries, but he does not say anything about it. We are all worrying about the $40,000,000,000 facing us. The gentleman's own Senator from Virginia suggested $50,000,000,000.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendment. [Laughter.]

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 118, noes 33.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOODRUM. Was that the vote on the motion to recede and concur with the amendment?

The SPEAKER. Yes. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 263, nays 83, not voting 84, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, the next three amendments merely change section numbers. I ask unanimous consent that they may be considered together.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 10: Page 42, line 5, strike out the figure "2" and insert the figure "3."

Amendment no. 12: Page 43, line 14, strike out the figure "4" and insert the figure "5."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendments nos. 10, 11, and 12, and concur in the same; and on this motion I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The motion to recede and concur was agreed to.

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS CAMPS

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, the Members, no doubt, all are familiar with the fact that an Executive order has been issued reducing the number of C. C. C. camps in the United States. Most of the Members also are familiar with the fact that a number of my petitions were circulated in the House asking that this Executive order be rescinded and that the number of enrollees in the C. C. C. camps be held to 500,000. These petitions were presented to the Chief Executive last Saturday, and the indications are that they will not be acted upon favorably.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a copy of the petition, together with the names of the Members of the House of Representatives who signed the petition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WHITTINGTON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

We, the undersigned Members of the House of Representatives, being mindful of the great good that is flowing from the activities of the C. C. C. camps in the United States, not only as to the physical good that their labor is doing for the forests, the parks, the Biological Survey, the T. V. A., Bureau of Reclamation, Division of Grazing, and the Soil Conservation Service, and other constructive miscellaneous undertakings; and being mindful of the further healthy results that flow therefrom by reason of the fact that this program at its outset took some half million boys of this Nation off of the highways and streets, took many of them out of criminal environments and placed them in healthy, sanitary, well-regulated, character-building occupations from which they earn a sufficient amount of money to each month send their folks at home $25; and feeling sure that the expense incurred by the Government in order to carry on this wonderful program is the one expenditure of governmental funds against which no one in the United States makes complaint; and feeling sure that the program and the results obtained therefrom are justified in every respect:

We therefore respectfully petition you to rescind the recent order reducing the personnel in C. C. C. camps, and urge you to maintain this personnel at 500,000, and pledge you our best efforts to maintain this agency through the appropriation of sufficient funds to carry on the program in this proportion.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. There are others who wanted to sign that petition, including myself, but it was sent to the President before I could add my name to it.

Mr. NICHOLS. I may say that I will hold this petition in my office, no 1004, New House Office Building, until this evening, and will also have a copy of the petition over here, so it will be available throughout the day for Members to add their signatures.

I may say to the gentleman that after the petitions went to the President a great many Members called me and complained that they had not had an opportunity to sign the petition. They said they had just heard from home that some of their camps were going to be closed and wanted to go on record against this.

Lots of other Members are going to hear from home in the next few days. The list of camps to be closed on April 1 has not yet been compiled. Nobody knows what camps will be closed. Even those Members who have not heard any protests may be hurt on that date. If you believe in the C. C. C. program, I advise you to get on record to this effect, even if you have not yet heard from home.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. There are numerous camps where $11,000 has been spent to provide barracks, and so forth, where orders have been given to move on the 1st of the month, with the work on the camps about one-third complete.

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes. I shall comment upon that.

Mr. Speaker, I preface my further remarks by calling attention to a statement appearing in this morning's Washington Post, purporting to be a statement coming from the President. I quote from the article.

In the outset I want to read from the morning's Washington Post a statement purported to have come from the President relative to the reduction in C. C. C. camps:

The President also shattered the hopes of Members of Congress who have been attempting to prevent reduction in the personnel and number of C. C. C. camps. C. C. C., which is provided with a prospective appropriation of $246,000,000 in the Budget, is expected to be reduced from an enrollment of 380,000 at present to 300,000.

The number of camps is expected to be reduced from 2,158 to 1,456. The schedule calls for a reduction of 455 April 1 and 247 July 1, a total of 702.

On the present basis of application, Mr. Roosevelt said, there will not be more than 300,000 men whose families are on relief available for enrollment in the camps. He said that the camps must be limited to prevent a break in the Budget and that a line must be drawn between persons on relief and those who are merely unemployed. He pointed out the danger of favoritism and scheming if the door is opened to young men not on relief.

It will be discovered from this that the President states there are at present approximately 380,000 enrollees in C. C. C. camps. I am advised by Mr. Fechner's office that this was the number of estimated enrollees on March 18.

The last figure which I was able to obtain before this time stated that there were 430,000 enrollees in C. C. C. camps.

Now, which of these figures is correct I am, of course, unable to say, but I would like to make a few deductions for the House, based upon information which I received this morning from Mr. Fechner's office.

It is agreed by everyone that at present there are 2,158 camps in the United States. I am advised by Mr. Fechner's office that it is the aim of the office to keep these camps at an enrollment of 206 men per camp. In order to use round numbers, if we were to assume that there were approximately 200 men in each of the 2,158 camps now in the United States, we would find that upon this basis there are at present 421,600 enrollees now in the camps in the United States.

This becomes important for the following reasons:

First. The above statement says that the number must be reduced to approximately 300,000, because there are no more boys than this available from relief families. Now I do not know who furnished the President with this information, but I am frank to say to you that I am skeptical of its correctness.

Be that as it may, however, if there are only 380,000 enrollees in the camps in the United States today, then the order will take 80,000 boys out of these camps, while, if the 421,600 figure is correct, the order will take out of the camps 121,600 boys.

Mr. Fechner's office also advises me that the Labor Department estimates that at present there are from 30,000 to 40,000 boys waiting to be enrolled in C. C. C. camps.

Even upon their own figures the next period could start with 340,000, if the enrollment was to be reduced on July 1 to 300,000.

When the order goes into effect carrying out the present plan, that is, reducing the number of camps from 2,158 to 1,456, this means that there will be taken out of the district of each Member of Congress, one and one-half camps, because the reduction calls for the knocking out of 702 camps, and there are but 435 congressional districts in the United States, including those States which not only have congressional districts but have one or more Members at large.

This means, then, if there are 200 enrollees in each camp, that 300 families in every congressional district in the United States, on an average, will be affected by this reduction.

And this is a serious effect, because at the time that these boys went into the various camps they could not get in unless their family was upon the relief rolls, and immediately upon their entrance into the camp that family was taken off the relief rolls.

Since that time rules have been promulgated which prevent anyone from getting on the relief rolls at this time, even though the family be in destitute circumstances.

Therefore you will have 300 families in every congressional district in the United States who are presumed to be destitute and need relief, whose only livelihood will be cut off by this order, and under the recent rules of Mr. Hopkins' office will be prevented from getting back on relief.

Besides this fact there is another fact to be considered. I presume that in every instance where a camp was established there was a good and sufficient reason for its establishment, in that there was a worth-while project for the camp to work on. If this is true, then under this order there will be literally hundreds of worth-while projects which will stop where they are. Some of them barely started; many of them only half completed; and many of them almost to the point of completion; and in many, many instances local communities have by bond issue and other means put up large sums of money to induce the Government to establish these camps, and at the time that the camps were established in my district the people of my district were assured that they would be established there upon a 5-year plan.

Therefore, assuming that the 2,158 camps now in existence are all worth-while camps, and that 206 enrollees are required to each camp to carry on its work, which is the figure given to me by Mr. Fechner's office, we should maintain an enrollment of 444,548 boys.

Mr. Fechner's office was not able to advise me as to exactly what the per-man-year cost was in keeping these boys in the camps, but I notice by the news story, above referred to, that there is $246,000,000 in the Budget for the purpose of carrying on the work of these C. C. C. camps.

Incidentally, reference was made to the fact that the per-man per-year cost in the past had been $1,140 for C. C. C. camps, but that it was only $700 per man under W. P. A. In this connection permit me to point out to the Members that these figures were furnished by Harry Hopkins. It is only fair to say that figured in the $1,140 per-man per-year cost in the C. C. C. camps is from $16,000 to $18,000 for the establishment of each camp, and figured in it also is all of the technical help and all of the equipment for the camps.

But in the case of $700 per-man per-year cost for the W. P. A. only the wages paid and general overhead were figured, and this does not include material cost nor cost of buildings to house personnel.

It is my opinion that it will take approximately $440,000,000 to maintain the enrollment at 440,000 enrollees. I am sure that it cannot take more than this, and I am of the opinion that this figure can be reduced materially. But, using that as a basis, if there are $246,000,000 appropriated as provided in the Budget, it will require an additional $154,000,000 to keep the enrollment to the figure that I have mentioned. And unless this can be done by some other method, I suggest to the House that when the relief bill comes before the House for consideration, or while it is before the Committee for consideration, that $154,000,000 of these funds be earmarked to keep the enrollment in C. C. C. camps up to approximately 440,000.

And as for the above newspaper statement that there are only 300,000 boys available from the relief rolls for work in C. C. C. camps, while I cannot readily agree that there are no more than this number available, yet, for the sake of argument, I am willing to admit it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, still I say that the number should be maintained at approximately 440,000, and I cannot agree with the President that it is dangerous to go outside of the relief rolls in order to find these enrollees. As a matter of fact, I am one of those who believe that this program is of enough importance that it should be broadened so as to permit the taking into these camps of some boys who are not upon relief, and I am sure that with all the wisdom we have in our Government that it will be possible to provide an equitable yardstick by which to measure to qualifications of the boys who are to enter the camps, outside of those who are upon relief.

With the problems above referred to in mind, and with many others that will readily present themselves, and feeling the great necessity of protecting this program, I have obtained the caucus room in the Old House Office Building for 10:30 Friday morning, and I am earnestly hopeful that every Member of the House who is interested in this matter will be present at 10:30, where we can discuss plans of further procedure to protect the C. C. C. camps of this Nation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Permit me to say to my colleague from Oklahoma that I am deeply interested in this matter of keeping our present C. C. C. camps. I feel, also, that a grave emergency faces this Congress that requires immediate action. I may say that I am interested in the suggestion that the Congress earmark certain relief funds to take care of the C. C. C. camps. May I suggest to the gentleman, however, that the relief bill will probably not come to this House until after the 1st of April, at which date the damage will be done, as more than 400 additional camps will have been closed.

Mr. NICHOLS. Perhaps that is the best we can do, but at the time we earmark funds we can provide for opening up the camps which have been closed.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Is it not a fact that the argument of the Federal relief authorities that it will increase the relief load if the C. C. C. camps are continued on the basis the gentleman desires is false in that now of the $30 per month paid, $25 goes back to protect the boys' families from relief, which will throw these families back on the relief rolls if the camps are closed? It will be a disaster to wreck the finest phase of the relief work program, and one that is universally popular.

Mr. NICHOLS. That is right.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HAMLIN. May I ask the gentleman if he knows that on last Saturday night in Portland, Maine, at the largest Jackson dinner we ever had, when the matter of C. C. C. camps was spoken of, the whole audience rose and showed their desire to have those camps not only kept but increased in number?

Mr. NICHOLS. I may say to the gentleman that I do not think there is any portion of the recovery program that has been as universally popular.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FERGUSON. To substantiate the claim of local cooperation, may I say that I have a city that put up a half million dollars to develop a camp, buy the land, and so forth, and the camp is to be abandoned in 6 months. There is another city in which the farm community has 72,000 acres under contract for soil conservation. All the contracts are to be thrown overboard by this arbitrary action.

Mr. NICHOLS. May I say to the gentleman that with a concerted effort on the part of the Members of this House, and if we all stand foursquare, this can be stopped if we will just do it.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. I received a protest from some prominent people in my district in which some of these camps are located, stating they wanted the camps retained. I was curious to know why they had been eliminated. It might be interesting to the membership to say that when I traced the matter down through the Department here I found that the recommendation had come from the State parks board of my State. That information was passed along here so as to show that it is nothing for which we are responsible.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION OF CERTAIN ASSETS OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged resolution, House Resolution 451, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 451

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3978, an act relating to taxation of shares of preferred stock, capital notes, and debentures of banks while owned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and reaffirming their immunity. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 4 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is it the gentleman's intention to try and finish this bill this evening?

Mr. SABATH. We are going to try to finish it if it is possible. We are going to ask unanimous consent to reduce the time for general debate from 4 hours to 2 or 1 hour, as the question is very well known to the membership. If it is at all possible, we will try to finish the bill this evening.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KENNEY. Can the gentleman tell us how many States now exempt these securities?

Mr. CELLER. Seventeen.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, the gentleman states 17, and I take his word for it. This resolution makes in order Senate bill 3978. It provides for 4 hours' debate, confined to the bill, after which it shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. The rule is broad and liberal, and no question is being raised against it. Although I have allotted 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY], the ranking Republican member of the Rules Committee, he has told me that in order to save time he will not use all the time allotted to him. I will therefore be brief myself.

This bill is similar to one brought before the House a short time ago, which was defeated by the small margin of 6 votes. Since that bill was first considered section 2 thereof has been modified to an extent which will eliminate one of the objections raised when the bill was before the House.

Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, this bill has the unanimous support of the entire 25 members of the Banking and Currency Committee, and when members of that committee appeared before the Rules Committee they told us that they have made satisfactory explanations to many of the Members who voted against the bill because of features which they did not clearly comprehend, and that these Members have expressed a readiness to vote for the bill at this time.

It has been charged on the floor—and many Members believed it to be a fact—that this bill would relieve banks from certain taxation. If this were true, I would be the last man to support it.

This bill will not deprive the States of any taxation to which they are entitled. The Government has lent tremendous sums of money to these banks through the R. F. C., and by this means or through the legislation passed by Congress has in many instances caused an increase in value from 50 percent to 300 percent in the common stock. The loans made by the R. F. C. to banks, as I have remarked before, not only saved the stockholders from double liability but saved millions of depositors from losing their savings.

Notwithstanding the aid rendered banks by the Government, they have failed to cooperate with our efforts to restore prosperity during these past few years. They have withheld credit to industries and in every other conceivable way made our task difficult. In view of this I repeat that I would be the last man to support any legislation exempting the banks from taxation. However, in exempting the preferred stock and debentures held by the R. F. C., the States are in no way deprived of any taxes, since the stocks and assets of banks have increased so tremendously because of R. F. C. advances and loans that the States are deriving far greater revenues than they did previously. Then, too, the tax is not levied upon the number of shares or upon the par value of shares, but upon the value of shares and the value of the assets of banks. I hope I make this clear to those who voted against the bill in the belief that it would deprive the States of certain tax revenues. I am including in my remarks today a statement I received from the R. F. C. as of January 31, 1936, which will enlighten the Members and refute the misstatements of certain people I have heard.

FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

Only sketchy data are available from this agency for comparative purposes between 1935 and 1932. This is due to two factors—first, a change in accounting methods occurred in 1933 which upsets the relationships of figures in 1932 and 1935; second, a billion dollars has been added to the amount outstanding in loans in the past 2 years which by law are not due in any part for 3 years. The following figures on delinquencies are interesting; however, they apply only to Federal land-bank loans:

1932 (end), 52.6 percent delinquent.

1935 (end), 19.3 percent delinquent.

PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION (REVOLVING FUND)

This morning's papers also carried an item to the effect that income-tax collections have increased nearly 50 percent, a clear indication that business is improving and industries are making money, which enhances the value of all stocks and bonds and increases the value of taxable property in the different States.

In considering this bill it should be borne in mind that the exemption of taxation is only in force while these debentures and preferred stocks are owned by the R. F. C. When they no longer hold such debentures or stocks the exemption immediately ceases. I do not feel that we should tax the Government for advances made on stocks and debentures. If we do so we permit the taxation by the States of preferred stock and debentures owned by the Government based on values made possible by the Government through the R. F. C.

In this connection I should like to call the Members' attention to evidence given this morning before the Federal Communications Commission, showing how the octopus American Telephone & Telegraph Co. has taken advantage of legislation enacted under President Roosevelt, and at the same time reduced the number of employees by 120,000 and reduced wages, while continuing to pay the regular $9 dividend per share, even on millions of dollars' worth of watered stock. This is true not only with the A. T. & T. but with all the leading industries of the country, which have continued to pile up huge surpluses and continued to pay tremendous salaries to their officers of from $100,000 to $200,000 per year, and at the same time to cut wages and reduce the number of employees.

While I cannot agree to everything done by the R. F. C., as one advocating the creation of such an agency in 1931 I have been interested very deeply in its accomplishments; and, while I believe there have been many mistakes, at the same time I think it is rendering a great service to the Nation and has been instrumental in a great measure for improved business and conditions generally throughout the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to detain the House further, and, in view of the fact that the other side does not desire to take any time on the resolution, and since the question now appears to be thoroughly understood, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3978) relating to taxation of shares of preferred stock, capital notes, and debentures of banks while owned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and reaffirming their immunity.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3978, with Mr. WHITTINGTON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, for some reason or other, this bill has been considered in the light of some mysterious undertaking on the part of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by which a decided advantage would be given to the national banks to the disadvantage of the State banks and the taxpayers.

Now, there is no mystery about this bill, as I see it, and the bill, as it is written, in my opinion, should be passed.

We saw fit to go along with this bill and vote for it when it was up here as a House bill, because we felt the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or, as some people expressed it, the Federal Government, should not be penalized for coming into our localities and bailing out situations which would have resulted in the loss of billions of dollars to depositors in banks.

When we passed the original Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, we exempted from local taxation their franchise, their own stock, their income, and everything except their holdings. I believe it was the intention of the Congress at that time to include the holdings of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and, as I view this bill, it is merely an attempt on our part to clarify what was very apparently our intention when the original Reconstruction Finance Act was passed.

Now, up to the present time the States have not assessed, levied, and collected any tax against the shares of stock held in State or National banks by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, for the reason that in some States the supreme courts have held that these shares were not taxable, on the theory that they were virtually holdings of the Federal Government and that the States could not tax the Federal Government. I presume they assume that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in respect of its duties and powers is a fiscal agent of the Federal Government. The attorneys general of many of the States gave opinions that their States could not tax these holdings of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and many of them were of the deliberate opinion that we had intended to exempt the holdings when we passed the original act.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should prefer not to yield right now. I shall be pleased to yield a little later.

Now, there has been a great deal said about the losses to the States, and this is why I have made this statement, reviewing altogether too briefly, possibly, the history of this matter to show that up to the present time no State has collected any tax, and therefore their situations will not be changed if this bill is passed.

We went along on our side on the theory that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the taxpayers of the Nation should not be penalized for doing a mighty good job with respect to bailing out banks and depositors in these banks.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, would it disturb the gentleman to yield for a very brief question?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Reference is made in the report, and the gentleman, in his argument, has referred to the fact, that it was evidently the purpose to incorporate this exemption in section 10 of the original act. Will the gentleman state, in substance, what that section 10 provides?

Mr. WOLCOTT. With respect to the exemption of holdings?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Section 10 provides as follows, and, of course, this is existing law:

Any and all notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations issued by the Corporation shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation, except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority. The Corporation, including its franchise, its capital, reserves, and surplus, and its income, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority, except that any real property of the Corporation shall be subject to State, Territorial, county, municipal, or local taxation to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

Now, if you read that paragraph in the light of the opinion given by the attorney general and the State supreme courts, it is very apparent that because we did not specifically except the personal property of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but did expressly except the real-estate holdings, it was clearly the intention of Congress that the personal-property holdings, which would include the shares of bank stock purchased by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, would be exempt from local taxation.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. Is it not a fact that at the time the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act was passed in 1932, and the time this provision was inserted in the law, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation could not purchase stock in the banks, but it was 14 months later. Therefore, Congress could not have contemplated taxing such stock, because at that time they could not purchase the stock.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. REILLY. Is it not a fact that the power given the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase the stock was another way of giving them power to acquire property that originally the law said should not be taxed?

Mr. WOLCOTT. In the original act we provided that the capital should be exempt from taxation. The preferred stock is a part of the capital and it was the intention of all of us to exempt from taxation the preferred stock of banks which might be held by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is my opinion that section 10 of the statute, wherein it exempts capital from taxation, has reference to the capital stock of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and not to capital holdings of other institutions.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] ought to be answered a little further. He asserts that in 1932, when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act was enacted, there was no preferred stock in the national banks. In 1864, when the act he is relying upon was passed, there was no preferred stock in national banks.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Now, I am sure there will be ample opportunity to discuss that matter. These are the reasons why it was concluded that the bill should be passed. After all, every dollar that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation pays in taxes is $1 less of profit that might be returned to the Federal Treasury when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is liquidated, and $1 more which the taxpayers, the people of the United States, will have to pay into the Federal Treasury.

But I am not going along with this bill, and I think that I speak for many others with whom I have talked since the intimation here on the floor that there has been some bargaining with the opponents of this bill, if there has been such bargaining. That bargaining was not in the committee; it was not with me; it was not with any member of the minority that I know of. Let us bring this matter out on the floor and fight it out upon its merits, and let the individual members of the committee speak for themselves, and not undertake to speak for the committee; and I say to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] and to the rest of the Members of this House that if they adopt the amendment to strike out the word "hereafter" in line 3, on page 2, they will be guilty of gross discrimination; they will be creating a situation where one bank will be getting money for 3½ percent while another bank across the street may be forced to pay 5 or 6 percent. I am not going to vote, and I am not going to ask the membership of this House to vote for any bill, whether it saves the corporation a little money or not, which would pass that on to some bank back home, to the prejudice of its status in its community, and possibly be just the reason by which one bank may keep open and another bank be closed. We cannot tell what is in the future; we do not know what will happen to the banking situation from month to month and year to year. We do not know but that next year we may be called upon to raise the capital stock of the R. F. C. for the purpose of further bailing out these banks, and we would be in the incongruous position of setting up one standard for one set of banks and another standard for another set of banks.

I give warning, if it means anything to anybody besides myself, that if that amendment is adopted, I shall oppose the bill as vigorously as we wanted to favor the bill in its present form. [Applause.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I say to the gentleman, as I tried to explain when I had the floor—and it seems to me that I was frank in what I said—I do not think what I said was obscure—that there has been no deal of any kind or character made by anyone. I said that I understood an amendment would be offered.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I make no reflection whatever upon any statement the gentleman made, but if I remember the gentleman correctly, he did say that he and some of the majority members of the committee would not oppose it.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. No.

Mr. WOLCOTT. My point is this. It is our duty as members of the committee to oppose any amendment which will destroy the effectiveness and integrity of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is the gentleman's privilege, but I tried to explain when I was on my feet that I was not speaking for anybody on the committee other than myself.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think the gentleman made that very plain, and I make this observation in that connection. If it is logical and right to exempt from taxation the holdings of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of the capital stock of institutions which now have sold capital stock to it, it is just as logical to exempt those purchased in the future, and if it is not logical to exempt those purchased in the future, it is not logical to exempt those which they now own. We cannot set up two standards by which the righteousness of our actions may be judged.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee, I say that our acting chairman has not undertaken to make any trade about any provision of the bill. He was speaking only for himself. I heartily concur with what the gentleman from Michigan has said and I shall oppose strenuously any offer to strike out the word "hereafter", which would result, as he has so ably stated, in gross discrimination in the way these banks are treated in an opportunity for the R. F. C. to rehabilitate them.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. CREAL. If I understood the gentleman, there are 17 States that have passed laws to forbid taxation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I did not mention the number of States. I said there were several States whose attorneys general had given an opinion that their States could not tax the shares of capital stock owned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. CREAL. This is the point I wish to make. If this amendment does not pass, those particular States that still insist on taxation will be in a difficult situation in trying to secure loans from the R. F. C. This being purely an optional matter and not on a State allotment plan, those States which furnish exemptions will be taken care of fully before those States that insist on taxing will be taken care of, if at all.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That would be a matter of policy for the board of directors of the R. F. C. They would have to decide that. I do not think the R. F. C. would adopt any different policy so far as the needs of one State are concerned from that adopted to apply to any other State. However there is some meat in the gentleman's suggestion that more consideration might be given to the needs of the banks of those States which exempt the shares from taxation.

Mr. MEEKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. MEEKS. I should like to put this question: as to those States which may have levied a tax on these shares of stock, then the States which imposed the tax would be at a disadvantage in the future, would they not, over States that did not levy the tax?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I said that would depend upon the policy that the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation adopted.

Mr. MEEKS. But ordinarily, naturally, and logically that would be true?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I would think that the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would not hesitate to consider that element. Of course, the rate of interest in those States would have to be high enough to overcome what the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would have to pay in taxes. There would be discrimination in that particular against the banks in those States which levied the tax in favor of those in States which did not levy the tax.

Mr. MEEKS. By failure to exempt these shares from taxation, are there any States that the gentleman knows of that would give State banks an advantage over national banks?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I cannot speak for any other State than Michigan, but I think the laws of that State and probably a majority of the States would not allow the taxing of an institution upon a different basis from that of any other one. In fact, it would be very much opposed to constitutional provisions to tax one institution upon a different basis than it taxed another.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MEEKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. MEEKS. Would that not be true in Illinois as well as in Michigan?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I believe that the laws of most of the States compel the assessing officers to assess and levy the tax to be collected on an equal basis. In other words, they cannot discriminate in the levying of taxes. I do not think the constitution of any State allows the assessing officer to assess upon one basis for one property and upon a different basis for another property. The Constitution of the United States provides that no State shall deny to any person the equal protection of the laws, which I interpret as embracing the mandate that taxes shall be levied as equally as possible, and I think that some similar provision has been written into the constitutions of a majority of the States.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. EDMISTON. Unless this bill as it is presented is now passed, all the banks still operating under conservators would be eliminated from any chance of ever reopening under Reconstruction Finance Corporation debentures. Is that not correct?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not know as it would go quite that far, but it surely might postpone the date.

Mr. EDMISTON. It would make it more difficult for them, and if they change this rate of interest certainly they would have an unfair handicap on the banks that have already taken advantage of it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes. It might postpone the date when they were able to meet the requirements.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. CARPENTER. Going back to the question in regard to the opinions of the attorneys general or advisers of the various States, some of them have held that the States did not have authority to tax these shares. Was that not a matter for them to determine what was the intention of Congress when they arrived at that opinion?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think that any attorney general, in giving an opinion to his State treasurer or to the local taxing authorities, would surely take into consideration the intent of Congress.

Mr. CARPENTER. Then if Congress refuses to pass this bill would that not indicate the intent of Congress, so that that would be determinative in rendering an opinion that the States should have a right to tax them, and therefore there would not be any discrimination between the various States?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think the gentleman is right. The defeat of this bill would be a clear mandate to the States to tax.

At least, it would give the States some affirmative action upon which to base a presumption that they could tax the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Of course, the Supreme Court has already said that. So they might have preceded us in that respect.

I just want to call your attention to page 39 of the hearings where Mr. Jones has picked out an occasional bank and given us some very worth-while information on what it would mean to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, if its investment in the capital stock of banks was taxed. He sets forth in some instances the amount that the tax would be as opposed to the amount of interest which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is receiving on those loans. In one instance it is $8,400. In another, $19,840. The loss to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, including the cost of money at 2½ percent, is as high as $305,000 in one case, and the amount of the tax quite generally either offsets the amount of interest which they receive, or is greatly in excess of the amount of interest they receive. It just turns upon the question of whether, for the purpose of distributing $5,512,736.38 over all taxable—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The amount of the tax which it is estimated they will have to pay is the figure I have just mentioned, which is rather infinitesimal when spread against the entire taxable personal property of the United States. It means a great deal to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in whether it shall show a loss or a profit to the Federal Treasury upon its liquidation. [Applause].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Ohio yield me a little time?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I might later.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I will yield the gentleman some more time.

Mr. PATMAN. We have 2 hours to a side. I would like to have 30 minutes to go into it fully and explain the side of those opposing the bill. The gentleman on each side having charge of the time are in favor of the bill, so there is a big difference.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I may say to the gentleman from Texas that I will speak to the gentleman from Maryland, and if his time is completely taken so that he cannot yield any more, I will be glad to see what I can do.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, two mistakes have been made on this question we are now discussing. One mistake was made by Congress. The other mistake was made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

In January 1932, when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation law was enacted, it is true a provision was placed in that law, section 10, that the capital, surplus, and other resources of the Corporation would be exempt from taxation; but at that time we could not have had in contemplation what we are now considering, because it was 14 months later that the R. F. C. was authorized by our law that we enacted to purchase this very stock. We could not, therefore, have had it in mind.

Where the Congress made a mistake was in not permitting the R. F. C. to purchase notes and debentures from national banks in exactly the same way they were allowed to purchase notes and debentures from State banks. Had this been done by Congress this question would not be before us today. Because the national banks are under the supervision and control of the Comptroller of the Currency and those here in Washington, it was not necessary to deal with anyone else. We could say, therefore, that we would take preferred stock from the national banks; we knew we could cause the national banks to issue preferred stock; but the R. F. C. did not know whether we could compel the States to pass laws to cause preferred stock to be issued by State banks, and up until that time no State had authorized the issuance of preferred stock by State banks and the Federal Government did not permit preferred stock for national banks. As a matter of expediency, therefore, we permitted the R. F. C. to purchase notes and debentures from State banks but restricted the R. F. C. to the purchase of preferred stock only of national banks. We did not give consideration to what effect it would have in the local communities.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Let us assume that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had purchased debentures instead of preferred shares. No taxes would have accrued to the States at all. The situation would have been no different from what the situation would be if this bill is passed.

Mr. PATMAN. Let us see. There is a serious difference of opinion. The gentleman has asked a question that probably reaches the fundamental principle involved here.

Let us take this illustration: I have in my home town a bank that had $500,000 of capital stock; $250,000 of this capital stock was converted into preferred stock so the R. F. C. could purchase it.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I hope the gentleman will permit me to answer the gentleman from Maryland first. If I yield for questions I never will get started and I have got to show that my position is right. I believe I can do it if I am given the time, and I hope the gentleman will let me do it.

Continuing with my illustration, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation purchased $250,000 of that stock. When the tax assessor comes around he is told by the bank: "No; we are not paying any more tax now, the R. F. C. owns half our stock. Heretofore we have always paid on $250,000 of our stock and $250,000 of our real estate which offsets that much stock. The R. F. C. stock is tax-exempt, therefore, we are not paying any more tax to either the county, to the State, to the road district, or to the school district."

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Let me finish. I want to answer the gentleman's question. I will yield if the gentleman insists, for he has charge of the time, and I want more time.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Will the gentleman explain what Congress has to do with the fact that a tax assessor in Texas does not know how to assess property?

Mr. PATMAN. We have not got into that, I may say to the gentleman from Maryland. I hope the gentleman will give me some more time.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PATMAN. Let me finish answering the chairman's question. He has the time, and I have got to have more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. PATMAN. The situation is this: When we passed that law we created discrimination. The national bank had paid taxes on 50 percent of its capital stock theretofore, in the case of the national bank capitalized at $500,000 it paid on $250,000 of stock and $250,000 of real estate. Now they pay only on their real estate and not one penny on their stock. This is an actual case, and it is duplicated all over this Nation in just exactly this way.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I want to say to the gentleman that he is mistaken in the way he figures that proposition. It has been explained to him a half dozen times. Mr. Jesse Jones explained it to him, and we thought the gentleman understood.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman can be very patient if he wants to. You see, I cannot reach but one thing at a time, and I am trying to develop that point. But let me do it in my own way.

Here are the discriminations we created. Across the street, we will say, there is a State bank with a capital of $500,000, just like the national bank about which I have been talking.

The R. F. C. purchases $250,000 in debentures from that State bank. Certainly, those debentures are not taxable and should not be taxable. They are held by the R. F. C. But when the tax assessor goes in there he gets exactly the same amount that he always obtained from that bank.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. No; because the tax authorities of Texas had to reduce the capital stock in the case of debentures just as they did when the preferred stock was issued.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman is just mistaken. That is one discrimination that is created.

Mr. SPENCE. Will the gentleman tell us how the assessments are made in Texas?

Mr. PATMAN. Now, do not drag a herring across the trail. Mr. Chairman, I would like to yield, but I cannot yield further. I have the right side of this question, and I can show the Members I have the right side if I am permitted to have the time to do it. Of course, if I am not going to have the time, and if my attention is to be diverted, I cannot do it.

Mr. Chairman, I have shown one discrimination. Thirty-one States of the Union base their taxes upon capital stock. Seventeen States use a different method of taxation. It will upset the tax systems in those 31 States. Texas happens to be one of them. There are 30 other States in the Union that will be affected in exactly the same way as Texas. There is the first discrimination between the National bank and the State bank across the street.

The State bank continues to pay taxes on the same amount of capital stock as it has always paid. The National bank only pays half, because they claim instead of selling the debentures to the R. F. C. they sold half of their stock to the R. F. C.; therefore they claim an exemption and they thought they would get by with it, but the Supreme Court of the United States in a unanimous decision held that this stock should be taxed. There can be no doubt about the decision, because it is just as clear as a bell. Just read the decision. That is the first discrimination.

Now, let us take a National bank across the street from this one.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, there is a National bank across the street. That National bank did not sell any stock to the R. F. C. When the assessor goes in there to assess, they render him the same taxes as they have always rendered, giving one a 50-percent tax reduction and charging the other just as they have heretofore. If that is not a gross discrimination, I would like to know what you would call it. Of course, the Congress helped to cause this condition.

There is preferred stock issued by a bank to the amount of $200,000. $100,000 of it is sold to an individual in the community and $100,000 sold to the R. F. C. We are asked to make a law that will cause the individual to pay taxes on his half but exempt the other half; in other words, let the bank out of it.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Why, of course not.

Mr. PATMAN. Well, the gentleman does not know anything about his own bill.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation can pass this tax on to the banks and the gentleman knows it and the gentleman has admitted it.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman has not admitted anything that the gentleman said. I did not say I was not going to oppose this bill. Here is where there is a difference. Take the bank there at Texarkana. When half of the preferred stock is purchased, that makes the common stock a little more valuable, 50 percent under ordinary circumstances. In that event the city, county, and State would lose 25 percent of the taxable value instead of 50 percent. That is the only difference between us according to the hearings before the committee.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Does the gentleman know that this stock is taxed in accordance with its actual value?

Mr. PATMAN. That is true.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. If you reduce the number of shares from 200,000 to 100,000 you have not reduced the value of the shares?

Mr. PATMAN. There would not be any necessity for this bill if there was not the necessity to exempt something. The reason for the bill is to exempt property that local communities would ordinarily tax. Why does not the gentleman admit it? Everybody knows it, because it is in the law. The Supreme Court held they could tax it.

Mr. Chairman, here is where another mistake was made and it was made by the R. F. C. Congress created these discriminations. The gentleman says that on preferred stock where the individuals hold the stock the bank pays the taxes, although it is preferred stock, but we are asked to vote for a bill that provides that if the R. F. C. holds half of the same stock nobody will pay taxes on it. Mr. Jones, Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, told me that there is $100,000,000 more to be disbursed on preferred stock. One disbursement has already been made and the R. F. C. required the bank to enter into a contract that it would take care of all local, county, and State taxes, as they have always done, before the R. F. C. would let them have the money. If we pass the bill in its present form, we are giving those banks that received the $100,000,000 at least $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 a year that they are willing to pay in order to get this money.

Mr. McCORMACK and Mr. CELLER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. PATMAN. No; I do not yield, Mr. Chairman. I have got to finish my statement.

The R. F. C. made a mistake, and in order to get this thing corrected I am willing to yield, with the gentleman from Maryland, who says he is willing to sacrifice something. I am willing to sacrifice something, too. The R. F. C. has made a contract it should not have made. It reduced its interest rate on preferred stock to 3½ percent, when it could have charged 6 percent under the law, and the R. F. C. put in that contract "and no more until 1940." In 1940 it will get 4 percent.

Now, I will admit that the R. F. C. was acting in the best of faith. They thought it was exempt, but they made a contract that they should not have made. They cannot take that money and pay the taxes with it.

Congress made a mistake, the R. F. C. made a mistake, and I am willing to condone past mistakes made by both the Congress and the R. F. C., but write the provision in here that hereafter we are not going in the direction of taking local property that is taxable off of the tax rolls by a congressional act. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. No; let me finish my statement, please.

Mr. CELLER. I think the gentleman ought to yield.

Mr. PATMAN. I only have a few minutes. I am sorry, but I cannot yield to the gentleman.

Now, what will come up next if we make this exemption? When the R. F. C. takes over business corporations, when it takes over railroads, like the gentleman from Utah suggested, then the same argument will be made that we should exempt them from taxation.

I am willing to condone past mistakes. I am willing to say that we should just let them go; but, in looking to the future, let us not set a bad precedent. Let us not have the camel get his nose under the tent, which would cause the camel, hump and all, to get under, and everything that is owned by the R. F. C. to be exempt from taxation.

I am looking at this as a matter of principle and as a matter of precedent, and unless you create this precedent here today you will be acting by your vote to deny your local assessors and collectors from taxing property that they have always taxed. This is what you will be doing.

Yes; there will be a slight discrimination there between the $100,000,000 that is to be disbursed and the $229,000,000 that has already been disbursed, but is it not better to have a slight discrimination and a bad precedent removed and a sound principle established than to go ahead and have all these discriminations I have told you about in the present law?

Which are you going to choose? Are you going to say by your vote, sitting up here in Washington, that you are going to still the hand of the assessor who attempts to put this property upon the tax rolls of his community; that you are going to enjoin the local sheriff and the tax collector from collecting these taxes that he has always collected and would collect under present law, were it not for this bill?

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. FORD of California. Will the gentleman answer this question? It seems to me the gentleman is putting himself and his State in this position. An old chap owned a small ranch through which a stream ran, and he had signs all over it, "No trespassing"; and one day he fell in, and a stranger went in and rescued him, and then he had the stranger arrested for trespassing.

Mr. PATMAN. I know the gentleman's philosophy—keep on helping the bankers and give them all kinds of bonuses, like you want to give them here. This bill is a bankers' bonus bill.

Mr. FORD of California. That is an unfair statement.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman would pin medals on the bankers because he has permitted them to save their banks and to save themselves. Now he wants to pin a medal on them and give them tax exemption. I am not in favor of that.

Now, in regard to this $400,000,000 already in tax-exempt property, the gentleman used the phrase that he would rather get $400,000,000 tax exempt. Why would he use the words "tax exempt" if he is not exempting it? He is exempting it, and he used the correct phrase in stating "getting it tax exempt", but he is mistaken as to the amount. Two hundred and twenty-nine million dollars of that amount is in the 31 States that have elected the method of arriving at property value according to capital stock.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 more minutes.

Mr. PATMAN. Now, in 17 States they have selected a new method. Therefore, my friends, if you pass this law like it is you are telling the 31 States, "We are going to give the banks 50-percent reduction"; you cannot get away from that.

Next session of Congress, the Members of the 17 States, if they pursue it in a logical way, will come in and say, "Why cannot our banks that have selected a different method of taxation be given a 50-percent reduction as applies to the banks of the other 31 States?"

Instead of removing the discrimination, you are creating more discriminations and one of the worst precedents you could possibly set up. I hope if the amendment is offered, which I expect to offer, that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can purchase debentures instead of preferred stock; I hope that amendment will be accepted. I know it is subject to a point of order; I admit that; but I hope no one will make the point of order. If it is not made it will apply to all banks on a parity, and that is the way the law should have been written.

But if the point of order is made, I will offer an amendment to strike out the word "hereafter." In other words, you will condone the transaction because mistakes were made by Congress and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but you will say in the future, "We are not going to adopt that principle. It is a false principle, and we are not going in that direction."

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. I want to ask the gentleman why should not his amendment be germane to the bill, and the further question is what attitude does Mr. Jones take with regard to his amendment?

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Jones went before the Banking and Currency Committee and asked them to put it in.

Mr. Sisson. Oh, I absolutely deny that. Mr. Jones never made the statement or requested the committee either in language or substance to that effect.

Mr. PATMAN. I think the gentleman is mistaken; I am talking about the preferred-stock amendment. He got up a mimeograph statement and asked the committee to adopt it. Is not that right? If it is wrong, say so.

Mr. Sisson. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. Sisson. Mr. Jones suggested to the committee an amendment about the preferred stock which he thought would permit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to hold. I understood the gentleman referred to the amendment striking out the word "hereafter."

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman is confused. The point is that Mr. Jones and the R. F. C. realize that a mistake was made, and they want Congress to correct it, so that they can place all these banks on an equality, and the committee refused to do it, which means that you want this $100,000,000 that will come out soon from the R. F. C. at 3½ percent, to purchase preferred stock—you want those local communities to be denied taxation on $100,000,000. Mr. Jones wants that done for this reason, that in all cases where they have made disbursements since the Supreme Court rendered its decision, they have said to that bank, "You have to pay your local taxes just as you have always paid, but we are going to let you have the money at 3½ percent." That is what we want to do, and that is what this amendment will do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield 2 minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. PATMAN. If that amendment is held out of order, if the point of order is made against it, then I expect to propose an amendment to strike out the words "or hereafter", which means condoning past transactions, but denying that bad precedent to be used for the future. So why should not this House accept it if it is fair and the R. F. C. wants it and says it is fair? Why should we not accept this amendment and stop this bad precedent and remove some discriminations instead of creating additional discriminations? We want to go in the direction of preventing the issuance of more tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds, and we want to go in the direction of stopping Government bureaus from taking taxable property away from the local tax assessors and collectors. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Cross].

Mr. CROSS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter about which we should get a clear view. No one should try to mislead you. Everyone should talk about a matter of this nature in a logical, truthful way; and I say now, because I do not want to waste my time in wrangling, that I am not going to yield. Take what I say as you please. I want to get the facts before you as I see them, because as a member of the committee I am thoroughly familiar with all the testimony and I think every phase of this question and with the position of my good friend from Texas [Mr. Patman]. I say with respect to him that I think the reason he is here contending is that he went off at an angle in a wrong direction the other day. He had the idea that the stock of banks in Texas is taxed at par; and if that be true, then there would be some logic in his position. To show you that my friend has that idea I am going to repeat some of his testimony before the committee. I took it from this hearing, and I had it put on this piece of paper, so that it might be gotten to rapidly. I quote:

Mr. PATMAN. In Texas the assessor finds out the amount of capital stock. There this property is rendered at 75 cents on the dollar. So the capital stock is rendered that way.

Yes. It is the value of the stock that they assess for taxation at 100 cents less whatever property is rendered.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. It had been assessed at the par value?

Mr. PATMAN. They assess it just like other property. They take the par value.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Isn't there a certain formula that they use?

Mr. PATMAN. No. They just take the par value. I have never known any of them taking less than the par value. * * * If they assess real estate at 75 cents on the dollar of its value they assess the bank stock at 75 cents on the dollar.

Then I asked this question:

Suppose that I have a bank in which the stock is worth 10 cents on the dollar. Do you mean to say that the assessor will come to me and make me pay on 100 percent?

Mr. PATMAN. No. I don't think so. I doubt that. It would not be justice if they did; but I just don't know. I am not informed. I am not going to say anything about the value of stock in Texas. I don't know.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSS of Texas. No; here is the testimony.

Mr. PATMAN. Well, the gentleman does not want to do me an injustice?

Mr. CROSS of Texas. Oh, no. Go ahead.

Mr. PATMAN. Did not I show the gentleman a telegram from the comptroller of Texas stating that that was the uniform rule?

Mr. CROSS of Texas. No; I did not see that. The gentleman did not show it to me. The gentleman may have had it there, but he did not show it to me. Then we got the law of Texas and read it to him, and he was there when it was read, and here is the law:

Every shareholder of said bank shall, in the city or town where said bank is located, render at their actual value to the tax assessor all shares owned by him in the bank. Each share in such class shall be taxed only for the difference between its actual cash value and the proportionate amount per share at which its real estate is assessed.

Now, he talks much about the bank in Texarkana. Let me tell you about that bank. It had a capital stock of $500,000. What happened was, its capital became impaired to the extent of $391,000. That is the testimony of Mr. Jones, and I am sure Mr. PATMAN will admit it. It was impaired $391,000, and the State banking authorities made them reduce that stock down to $250,000. In other words, the stock was worth less than 50 cents on the dollar.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSS of Texas. Now, wait a minute. I am talking facts.

Mr. PATMAN. But it is not a fact that the stock was reduced, and the record does not show it. The stock remains $500,000 as before. The gentleman should read all the testimony and not just parts.

Mr. CROSS of Texas. Oh, yes; it was.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CROSS of Texas. It was impaired $391,000. Other members of the committee will remember it. Now, they reduced that stock to $250,000. The banking authorities made them do it. It does not matter what the assessor wanted. His duty was to assess that stock, whether it was on the books at $500,000 or $700,000, or what not, at its actual cash value. That is all the tax he ought to get out of that bank. If that stock was impaired to that extent, and the stock was worth only $250,000, all the tax collector could do was to get taxes on $250,000. When they reduced it to $250,000 the Reconstruction Finance Corporation let them have $250,000, and it made that stock worth 100 cents on the dollar, so that the amount of taxes was exactly the same for school, State, and county as it always was. In other words, the bank simply shifted its debt from there to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Now, let me talk to you a little about the situation in connection with this thing. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act was passed in 1932 exempting capital stock, reserves, and surplus. The banks at that time were issuing preferred stock because they had been authorized to do it, but when that was done the law provided that State banks, many of which could not issue preferred stock, could, in place of that, issue debentures and capital notes. So the three performed exactly the same function. Where a State bank could not issue preferred stock, it could, of course, issue debentures or capital notes. The national banks were permitted to issue preferred stock. They were all treated just alike by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. There is not a bit of difference between those three things, except in the preferred stock there is no specific date of payment. They are supposed to pay it back in 20 years, paying 5 percent if they make that much, each year; but there is no specific date of payment for the preferred stock. Of course, in the debentures there is a specific date. To show how the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has always treated this stock merely as a debt, we amended the Revenue Act in August 1935, and provided that banks, in making up their income-tax returns, should have the right first to take off the interest and dividends that they paid to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on this stock, to ascertain their net profits. In other words, just treat it as a debt. It is nothing more than a debt.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is the American people. The Treasury is the American people. It is the people's money. After it goes into the different communities and plays the part of the good Samaritan, then why come in and say, "Now, we are going to take advantage of you and skin you"? That is what it is. This bill, if enacted, does what unquestionably was intended to be done, and just what so many State courts have said was the law—that you could not tax them. That is just what so many attorneys general of States have said. It is true one man over in Maryland took the opposite view and agreed with Mr. WRIGHT PATMAN, and Mr. WRIGHT PATMAN and that fellow went up to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court agreed with them. That is what makes me know they are wrong. [Laughter.]

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CROSS of Texas. Well, yes; for a short question.

Mr. PATMAN. I differ with the gentleman on the Texarkana bank. The gentleman is mistaken about the stock being reduced. It was not reduced. That stock remained the same.

Mr. CROSS of Texas. I am taking Mr. Jones' testimony. He so testified.

Mr. PATMAN. But the gentleman is mistaken about that. The record of the bank is the best evidence.

Mr. CROSS of Texas. Well, I do not know about that. Jesse Jones loaned the money; and, believe me, when he lets out a dollar he knows what he is doing.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CROSS of Texas. Just a moment. Let me finish first. I want to read from the hearings:

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, now, Mr. Jones, let us get back to this question of preferred and common stock. For instance, the case that has been used here so much—of the Texarkana bank—it is said that the original stock in it was $500,000?

Mr. JONES. Yes; the common stock.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is that common stock now?

Mr. JONES. $250,000.

Mr. PATMAN. That is correct. They converted $250,000.

Mr. CROSS of Texas (reading):

Mr. WILLIAMS. In what way was it adjusted; was the bank reorganized?

Mr. JONES. No; they amended their charter and reduced the common capital to $250,000 and authorized preferred stock of $250,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And, of course, that was necessary by reason of the fact that there had been some $300,000 charged out, and that impaired their capital stock.

Mr. JONES. Yes; $391,000.

So you see it was not their cash. They had paper there, they had figures there, but they did not have property; and under the tax laws of Texas the basis of assessment is the actual value of the property back of the figures, and not upon figures and paper.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. Is it not a fact that the Texarkana Bank was in a similar position with many other banks? Its assets were very low at that time, but since that time they have come back. They should, therefore, pay taxes like everybody else.

Mr. CROSS of Texas. All right; I will take the gentleman at his own statement. Since then values have come back. Who put the values back? Who has made it so that the stock now is worth 2 for 1 what it was when they put it up so that now you can tax it and get your revenues? It was the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Does the gentleman want to wreck it and put it where the stock will be worthless again? Is this the gentleman's idea? Why, if there ever was an organization that has earned a crown, and a starry one at that, in this country it is the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; and I want to say for the Chairman of that Board—and every member of this committee will vouch for what I say—there never was a straighter shooter than Jesse Jones. The other day one of the boys said: "That money was loaned in Chicago under another administration." "Yes," Mr. Jones said, "it was, but I want to take my part of the responsibility. I am just as responsible for making that loan as anybody." Then somebody made the remark that the Chairman at the time that loan was made was an appointee of Mr. Hoover. "Yes," said Mr. Jones, "he was appointed by Mr. Hoover, but I was appointed by Mr. Hoover, too, and I want to stand here flat-footed and take all my responsibility."

I like a clean, clear-cut man. I like a man who will tell the truth under all circumstances whether it pleases him or not.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CROSS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. Since Mr. Jones is such a fair man, and I agree with what the gentleman said, and he knows this business from beginning to end and knows what this amendment is and has agreed to it, why does the gentleman not agree to it?

Mr. CROSS of Texas. I do not know that. I do not know anything about the gentleman's amendment. I know Jesse Jones had an amendment there that he thought maybe would satisfy, but I do not know whether it is the one the gentleman is talking about. He said there was nothing to it; it did not mean anything one way or the other, but probably would enable them to get out of the business quicker, because it would not increase the interest rates they would charge and it would be satisfactory. I do not know what the gentleman's amendment is. I am not really familiar with Mr. Jones' amendment, but the effect of it, it seems to me, was that the national bank could put up debentures and capital notes in place of preferred stock; and, of course, you gentlemen understand the difference. A debenture or a capital note is not returned for taxes by the bank. The bank, of course, returns their taxes on stock deductions from the gross earnings before it pays the dividends; but a debenture or promissory note—that is all it is—a capital note is held by individuals and, of course, they hide them out, do not render them for taxes. The bank does not have anything to do with it and they can escape taxation. Oh, the gentleman said awhile ago, just think about the man down there in Texarkana who buys $100,000 of preferred stock.

Are you going to exempt him? You are going to exempt the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The man down there when he puts up his $100,000 has to be paid a rate of interest that will make the proposition attractive to him as a money-making matter.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Is it not a fact that is exactly what I want done? In other words, the bank pays the tax just like taxes are paid by local individuals living there in that town. The bank pays the tax. The individual pays the tax. My amendment would provide just that.

Mr. CROSS of Texas. The gentleman's idea is to let the Reconstruction Finance Corporation charge a rate of interest that would justify it in taking on a dangerous loan and charging 10 or 15 percent. You would bust the banks if you did that. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I move the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WHITTINGTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 3978) relating to taxation of shares of preferred stock, capital notes, and debentures of banks while owned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and reaffirming their immunity had come to no conclusion thereon.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate no. 9 to the bill (H. R. 9863) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2603. An act to authorize the Attorney General to determine and pay certain claims against the Government for damage to person or property in sum not exceeding $500 in any one case.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. Con. Res. 31. Concurrent resolution to authorize the printing and binding of additional copies of House Document 755, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, entitled, "The Life and Morals of Jesus of Nazareth", by Thomas Jefferson.

REPORT OF THE UNITED STATES CONFERENCE OF MAYORS

Mr. WEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a portion of the report made by the conference of mayors to the President of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, was not that matter placed in the RECORD by the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No. This is a different matter entirely.

Mr. RICH. It is the same thing that the gentleman from Alabama placed in the RECORD?

Mr. WEST. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman answer the question whether it is the same thing that has already been placed in the RECORD?

Mr. WEST. No; it is not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEST. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

A DETAILED REPORT PREPARED BY THE UNITED STATES CONFERENCE OF MAYORS AND SUBMITTED TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES BY HON. F. H. LA GUARDIA, MAYOR OF NEW YORK CITY, PRESIDENT, UNITED STATES CONFERENCE OF MAYORS, ON MARCH 12, 1936

Section II—Part I

INTRODUCTION

In answer to the series of questions which have already been stated regarding the Federal work-relief program, the conference of mayors' survey covers over 100 metropolitan areas of the United States. Approximately 25,000,000 people live in the areas reported upon in this study. The results of this survey of the leading cities of the country answer three questions before the American people:

1. Do the unemployed want work or the dole?
2. Are we doing useful work under the W. P. A. program?
3. Is there useful work yet to be done under a continued W. P. A. program?

On these three issues the chief executives of over 100 of the major urban areas of the country give their reports. These reports contain for the first time factual data from those who are on the firing line in this whole relief business.

1. DO PEOPLE WANT WORK OR THE DOLE?

What group is more competent to interpret the attitudes of the people on relief than the city officials of the country? The unemployed, as the mayors of the country well know, are on the doorstep of every city hall in the land. Work versus the dole is but an academic question if the destitute unemployed themselves are to be provided for in what we consider to be the American way.

Indicative of the fact that we believe work relief is the American way of meeting the relief problem, we cite the following statements from the chief executives of the larger cities of the country. These are but typical of the reports filed by practically every municipality in the country:

CHICAGO

It is well you have some facts and viewpoints regarding Chicago. The advocate of direct relief fails to appreciate the fundamental training, habits, and desires of our citizens. In my opinion:

They do not want charity.

They do want employment.

They do want to earn the money they obtain.

They do want to spend their money as they see fit.

These form the basic foundation for W. P. A. From them it is impossible to form a similar solid structure for direct relief or the dole. Of course, I exclude those of our people in need who are unemployable. They must have proper and adequate care by some form of direct relief.

It is of inestimable value to the Nation that the unfortunates of our population retain their self-respect. That is not possible under the direct relief or dole system. There is no question in my mind whatsoever that the work relief is much to be preferred to the dole.

Mayor EDWARD J. KELLY.

DETROIT

The advantages of a system of work relief for employables over the dole are so obvious and have been recounted so many times that I shall not repeat them. We all know the great social benefits that a community derives by keeping the minds and bodies of the unemployed employed at some useful endeavor until they can once again return to work in private industry without degeneration of their moral and physical fiber.

Mayor FRANK COUZENS.

KNOXVILLE

It has been our experience that our people are better satisfied when they have something to do, especially when they are employed in their respective trades. It has been aptly said, "An idle brain is the devil's workshop." I know that we have gotten a better unit of work done under the W. P. A. than by its predecessors. The workers are better satisfied, they are receiving a standard wage for their work, and they are not bothered with budget allotments or deficiency.

GEORGE R. DEMPSTER,
City Manager.

MILWAUKEE

Before presenting you with the data and facts of what has been done so far by W. P. A. in this city, and the many useful projects that should be completed or that could be started, let me assure you that there is no question in my mind that as far as the city of Milwaukee is concerned the work-relief method of taking care of our needy is far superior to any system of direct relief or dole. Long before the C. W. A. was inaugurated our city resorted to work-relief programs in a smaller way, and with all the trials and tribulations that we have had with the different work programs, I am still of the opinion that the benefits received by the public, through added improvements, have been worth more than whatever additional cost they have been over that of taking care of the needy on direct relief or dole.

R. E. STOELTING,
Commissioner of Public Works.

BUFFALO

When W. P. A. began to function last November, Buffalo had a relief case load of approximately 34,000 families. This case load was shown by analysis to be approximately 90 percent employable. That is to say, in all except 10 percent of the families there was one wage earner able to work. In December and January about 24,000 were transferred from the relief rolls to W. P. A. projects pay rolls, and at the present time this number has diminished to about 20,000 workers, representing about 18,000 families.

Employment has been proved to be the healthier way to maintain these destitute people.

GEORGE J. ZIMMERMAN, Mayor.

HOUSTON

In considering the question of relieving the distressing unemployed situation in this country through a works program or a dole, in my opinion, there is no question but what the works program is far superior to the dole system.

Mayor OSCAR HOLCOMBE.

NEW ORLEANS

May I again reemphasize what has been stated so often, namely, that our people will never consent to the substitution of a system of direct relief for a system of work. The policy of the city of New Orleans, even before the Federal Government entered into the relief picture, was based upon a policy of providing work for the destitute people of our community. The only direct relief that was permissible under the ordinance creating the fund was for those who were physically incapacitated from doing the work. We believe that it is needless for us to argue any longer as to the merits of work relief versus the dole.

T. S. WALMSLEY, Mayor.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

I wish most emphatically to record Springfield, Mass., among those cities favoring work relief rather than direct relief or dole.

PHILIP V. ERARD, Acting Mayor.

TRENTON

It is my judgment, from the viewpoint of municipal management, that the work relief is by far the more preferable, assuming, of course, that the conditions which may be imposed by the Federal Government with respect to financing any new program will be no less advantageous to the cities than those imposed in the present program. That there are advantages and disadvantages is self-evident, but with both revealed to the light of public good and information and weighed in the balance, the odds are so substantially in favor of their merit—as far as Trenton is concerned—that to hold them in dispute as asinine.

RAYMOND F. RICHTER,
Executive Secretary to City Manager Morton.

NEW BRITAIN

It is impossible for New Britain or any other community in Connecticut to finance a work program, and it is very evident that our people do not wish to go on the dole. The Government must continue to aid us or I fear for the effect on the client who would be deprived of an opportunity to earn sufficient to care for his family.

Mayor DAVID L. DUNN.

READING

The administrative officials militantly endorse the principle of work as against the direct relief or dole in handling the relief requirements of our cities.

Mayor J. HENRY STUMP.

HUNTINGTON

Great as have been the material gains of W. P. A. projects of this community, I feel that they have been superseded by the moral gain of providing useful employment to the needy unemployed of this community.

Mayor M. V. CHAPMAN.

NEW BEDFORD

It has been very gratifying to me, as mayor of the city of New Bedford, to find that our people do not want direct relief. They have shown during the past 2 years that they will not accept direct relief when they can obtain work of any nature. We have had any number of cases who were obtaining soldier's relief in the city of New Bedford in 1934, who obtained $10 to $14 in money and merchandise as direct relief, who gladly gave that up to accept weekly wages of $12 per week on the E. R. A. We have never been able at any time in New Bedford to pick up all of our workable relief cases on the Federal program.

Even today we are carrying people on our welfare rolls who are able to work and who are constantly pleading to be put on to the W. P. A. work relief, that they might live just a little better and earn their food and shelter. I wish to go on record as being strongly opposed to any program which will take away the self-respect of our people in forcing them to accept charity because employment is not available.

The people throughout our country who must temporarily be recipients of Government relief must be given the privilege of earning their living. We do not want to force the stigma of charity on our people when it is unnecessary.

Mayor CHARLES S. ASHLEY.

CAMDEN

As a member of the city commission, I would urge the Conference of Mayors to use all of its efforts to see that the W. P. A. program is carried on, because many of the unemployed, from my past experience, desire work and not dole or relief.

GEORGE E. BRUNNER,
Director of the Department of Parks and Public Property.

DECATUR

The matter of continuation of W. P. A. is, in my opinion, very serious, and if at all possible, additional money should be appropriated by the Federal Government for this purpose. It is a wonderful sight to see, on riding around the city, various gangs of men, numbering from 15 to 200, busily engaged in various occupations. It is of interest to watch and see that the majority of the men employed on W. P. A. are interested in their work and try to give value received.

Mayor HARRY E. BARBER.

ATLANTIC CITY

I am very much opposed to the dole method, and for that reason I have been very active in assisting our local W. P. A. office in every way possible to carry on the good work which they are now doing.

WILLIAM F. CASEY,
Commissioner of Public Works.

FLINT

We consider it highly desirable for W. P. A. to continue and believe that the continuation of same is much preferable to putting these men back on direct relief.

J. M. BARRINGER, City Manager.

OKLAHOMA CITY

We are emphatically opposed to the dole system, as our experience with the work program has shown that men worthy of support are anxious to work and do not want to be charity clients.

O. M. MOSIER, City Manager.

DURHAM

We are in complete harmony with a program of work relief.
H. A. YANCEY, City Manager.

NEW ORLEANS REGIONAL MEETING OF SOUTHERN AND SOUTHWESTERN CITIES

The consensus of opinion of this southern regional meeting of mayors is that work relief, as exemplified through the present Federal W. P. A. program, is the American way and method of meeting the needs of the destitute employable unemployed. Through the present program of providing work instead of the dole, not only are we maintaining the morale of those forced to depend on governmental assistance, but we are building valuable and worthwhile public projects in every city of the southern and southwestern area.

Cities represented: Houston, Dallas, San Antonio, Fort Worth, Austin, Amarillo, New Orleans, Oklahoma City, Fort Smith, Montgomery, Birmingham, Chattanooga, Knoxville, and Savannah.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the reading of the Journal and disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and following the special orders heretofore granted, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes, tomorrow being the anniversary of the birth of William Jennings Bryan, the great Commoner.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what special orders have been arranged for tomorrow?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BINDERUP] has 10 minutes, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] 5 minutes.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall not object to this request, of course, but we are behind our schedule. We have another matter that we expected to bring up tomorrow. I shall not object to this request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HOBBS (at the request of Mr. HILL of Alabama), indefinitely, on account of important official business.

To Mr. LEWIS of Maryland, for 2 days, on account of important business.

WHY WE SHOULD STOP TAX EXEMPTION OF BANK STOCK

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include certain excerpts and tables with reference to the R. F. C.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what are the tables?

Mr. McFARLANE. Tables of the R. F. C. that will be discussed in connection with the pending bill tomorrow. I want to put them in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to analyze S. 3978, now pending before us which provides—

Notwithstanding any other provision of law or any privilege or consent to tax expressly or impliedly granted thereby, the shares of preferred stock of national banking associations, and the shares of preferred stock, capital notes, and debentures of State banks and trust companies, heretofore or hereafter acquired by Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the dividends or interest derived therefrom by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, shall not, so long as Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall continue to own the same, be subject to any taxation by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or the District of Columbia, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority, whether now, heretofore, or hereafter imposed, levied, or assessed, and whether for a past, present, or future taxing period.

This is admittedly, as the above clear expressions indicate, a bill to exempt from taxation the preferred stock of national banks and the preferred stock, capital notes, and debentures of State banks and trust companies heretofore or hereafter sold to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation from the payment of any taxation by the Federal Government or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authorities.

HISTORY OF LEGISLATION

Let me briefly review the history back of why this legislation is now before us. In 1864 the Congress enacted section 5219 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that any State may tax national-bank stock within their limitation in any one of the three ways, as follows:

First. To tax said shares of stock.

Second. To include dividends derived therefrom in the taxable income of a holder or owner thereof; and Third. To tax the income of such association.

In 1932 the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act was passed, and section 10 exempts "the Corporation, including its franchise, its capital, reserves, and surplus, and its income" from all taxation, both State and Federal. But the act creating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation did not give it the right to subscribe for shares of preferred stock or for any others, nor was there any power on the part of national banks to issue preferred stock up until the emergency banking act was introduced and finally passed by the Congress on the first day of the called session in March 1933.

So we find that law existing since 1864 to date allowing such bank stock to be taxed by the local taxing authorities, that the Reconstruction Corporation by the act creating it in 1932 had no power to buy preferred stock or other such issues, and national banks had no power to issue such preferred stock until the Emergency Banking Act was passed and became a law March 24, 1933, which act for the first time gave national banks the right to issue preferred stock and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the power to purchase same. While it may be argued that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is a nonprofit governmental agency and as such should not be taxed, so is a national bank a governmental agency, and the laws above mentioned from 1864 clearly show as said by the Supreme Court in the case of the Baltimore National Bank against State Tax Commission of Maryland in their opinion rendered February 3, 1936:

For the tax now in controversy, whatever its indirect effect, is not laid directly upon the capital, reserves, or surplus of the corporation claiming the immunity or accorded the exemption. It is laid upon the shares in another corporation, a member of the banking system, which must pay it in the first place.

This decision closes with the statement:

All shares in national banks, no matter by whom owned, shall be subject to taxation.

Now, 31 States in the Union have elected under section 5219, to tax national banks upon their shares of stock. These States are as follows: Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and West Virginia.

Seventeen States and the District of Columbia have elected to tax national banks according to earnings on their shares of stock, or according to the income of the corporation, but do not tax directly the shares of stock. According to the Federal law, if a State elects to tax according to one of the three methods, it cannot levy taxes by any of the other two methods. These 17 States are as follows: Louisiana, Maine, Mississippi, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Utah, Vermont, Washington, Wisconsin, Alabama, California, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New York, Oklahoma, Oregon, and Wyoming.

THIS SAME BILL KILLED FEBRUARY 25

The Senate on February 24 passed this measure by a vote of 38 to 28, after very little debate and very few of the questions raised in the House were raised in the Senate debate. On February 25 the House considered the same bill, H. R.

11047, introduced by Congressman T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH, and after 3½ hours of debate, only 48 minutes of which were given to those in opposition to the bill, the measure was defeated on a record vote of 165 to 173. The House Committee on Banking and Currency, it was learned, expected to report out the Senate bill, despite the defeat of the House bill on the same subject, and Congressman WRIGHT PATMAN asked to be heard on same, and after these hearings the Banking Committee unanimously again reported out the same bill, adding section 2, a similar amendment which was defeated in the other body.

SETS BAD PRECEDENT

Now, Congressman PATMAN has thoroughly analyzed this bill, both in his speech today and in his remarks in the RECORD of yesterday. I believe his analysis sound and constructive as to why this bill should not be enacted in its present form. I do not believe it can be successfully denied that this bill sets a precedent that will open wide the gates which will cause additional demand for legislation for the rights of other taxpayers similarly situated. I am unable to understand why the House Banking and Currency Committee failed and refused to accept the two amendments proposed by Congressman WRIGHT PATMAN, which were thoroughly discussed by him today on the floor, which amendments are as follows:

A new section to be inserted immediately after section 302, title 3, of the act approved March 9, 1933, as amended, and designated as section 302 (a), reading as follows:

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any national banking association may, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, pursuant to action taken by its board of directors, issue to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation its capital notes or debentures in such amounts and with such maturities as the Comptroller of the Currency may approve. The holders of such capital notes or debentures shall be entitled to receive such interest, at a rate not exceeding 6 percent per annum of the principal amount thereof, and shall have such conversion rights, priorities, control of management, and other rights, and such capital notes or debentures shall be subject to retirement or redemption in such manner and upon such conditions as may be provided therein with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Section 303 of said act approved March 9, 1933, as amended, should also be further amended by inserting after the words "preferred stock", appearing in the last sentence of said section, a comma and the words "or capital notes or debentures."

Section 304 of title 3 of said act approved March 9, 1933, as amended, should be further amended, as follows:

Strike out the words "preferred stock" appearing in the first sentence of said section and insert in lieu thereof the words "or purchase preferred stock, capital notes, or debentures" and strike out the third sentence of said section.

HOUSE COMMITTEE REFUSES TO FOLLOW HON. JESSE JONES' RECOMMENDATIONS

During the debate it was pointed out that Hon. Jesse Jones, Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, had asked the House Banking and Currency Committee to approve both of these amendments in substance. Now, since the Supreme Court in a well-written opinion has held that such bank stock in the hands of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is not tax exempt and has never been tax exempt but in keeping with the clear letter of the law as above quoted has always been subject to taxation by the State, county, city, and local taxing divisions, and since it further appears that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has entered into written contracts with these different banks from which they have purchased about $1,000,000,000 worth of stock, notes, and debentures, which contract is binding upon both parties at a 3½-percent interest rate until 1940, and it further appearing that unless proper legislation is worked out that will permit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to exchange the preferred stock on hand for notes or debentures that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will be required to pay to the local taxing authorities the amount of taxes justly due, and it further appearing that if the two amendments to be offered on March 19 by Congressman PATMAN are adopted, which amendments, as I understand it, have the endorsement of Mr. Jones, and will permit him to satisfactorily adjust this matter so as to relieve the Reconstruction Finance Corporation from further tax payment and to leave this question of taxation in status quo among the respective States, then it seems to me that in all good faith and conscience that the Members of the House, regardless of what the House Banking and Currency Committee thinks about it, should go on record favoring these two amendments which will stop this further tax-exempt encroachment program and will permit the respective States to tax said banks and their stock as they have done since 1864. If these amendments are defeated, or points of order are sustained against either or both of them, then the bill should be defeated. The House Banking and Currency Committee has ample time in which to work out satisfactory legislation on this subject, and same may be easily enacted into law before the close of this session.

BILL FULL OF DISCRIMINATIONS

Let me refer briefly to some of the discriminations that will be brought about if this bill is enacted into law.

First. If a bank's capital stock is a million dollars, one-half of it, $500,000, is preferred stock; and if $250,000 of this preferred stock is held by the R. F. C., it will be tax-exempt; and although it has been on the tax rolls in that locality for years before, it will be taken off by orders of the United States Congress, whereas the other $250,000 of preferred shares held locally will be taxable, and the bank will pay taxes on it as heretofore.

Second. A national bank that has sold half of its shares to the R. F. C. will obtain a 50-percent tax reduction under this bill, while the national bank across the street that has not sold any of its shares to the R. F. C. will not obtain any tax reduction. It will pay taxes as heretofore.

Third. A national bank that has sold half of its shares to the R. F. C. will obtain a 50-percent tax reduction, but the State bank across the street will be compelled to pay taxes as heretofore.

Fourth. It will set a precedent which, if carried to its logical end, will cause Congress to pass the necessary law that will give all other national banks the same amount of tax exemption in the respective States and local communities where they are located.

Fifth. It will be a precedent for Congress to pass the necessary law to reduce taxation 50 percent on all banks in the 17 States and the District of Columbia where another method other than taxing shares of stock is in force. I refer specifically to the 17 States listed above.

TAXES LOST TO STATES

It was brought out in debate on the floor that over $100,000,000 of bank stock has already been sold to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and final consummation is waiting the outcome of this legislation. If this legislation is enacted and this stock is purchased it will mean that the State, county, city, and school will lose at least another two and one-half million dollars in taxes stricken from their tax rolls. If this measure is enacted into law, according to the information Mr. Jones has furnished the committee, the local taxing authorities will lose $55,512,736.38, as shown by the following schedule:

Schedule of taxes on national-bank shares

States taxing national bank shares	Investment of Reconstruction Finance Corporation in national banks and trust companies	Percent of actual value at which property is assessed for taxation	Approximate annual tax rate, based on information available (per $1,000)	Approximate amount of tax per year, based on information available

CAN PAY BIG SALARIES BUT CANNOT PAY TAXES

If the Congress is going to set up this discriminatory system of tax exemption for the favored groups on the plea that the poor banks are unable to pay the taxes, and that because the Government has purchased their stock, the Government should not be forced to pay their taxes, where will this policy and all of our tax exemptions end? If the banks of the Nation have been greatly benefited by the aid rendered by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the purchase of their stock, as we all know they have been tremendously benefited, and cannot pay their proportionate part of the tax burden, does it sound reasonable that they should be able to pay their bank officials salaries amounting from $15,000 to $50,000 per year?

In keeping with the condition of the country it seems that common justice should require these banks to pay their proportionate part of the local taxes, for it is well known that all the taxes so exempted must be paid for by increased renditions on the others in that community.

FURTHER DISCRIMINATIONS

If we are to exempt from taxation preferred stock of the bankers in the hands of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, then why should not the farmer who owns a $10,000 farm and gets a loan from the Government for $5,000 to save his farm be entitled to the same exemption; for the same reason the home owner who secures a Government loan on his home, or the businessman who receives a Government loan on his business through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or the railroad who secures a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Why should not all of these parties receiving help from the Government in the aid being rendered to save their property be entitled to the same fair consideration as is being given, under the provisions of this bill? If we are to exempt the bank stock from taxation we should exempt the farmers, the home owners, the merchants, the railroad men, and so forth, from the further payment of taxes up to the amount of the loan they have received from the Government and allow them to pay taxes on the equity they own in their property.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 3669. An act providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 9863. An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 2664. An act to aid in defraying the expenses of the Third Triennial Meeting of the Associated Country Women of the World, to be held in this country in June 1936; and S. 3173. An act for the relief of certain formerly enlisted members of Battery D, One Hundred and Ninety-seventh Coast Artillery (Antiaircraft), New Hampshire National Guard.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, March 19, 1936, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

THURSDAY, MARCH 19, 1936

(Legislative day of Monday, Feb. 24, 1936)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess, the meeting being in executive session under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into March 12, instant.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into on March 12, instant, the Senate automatically goes into executive session to consider the nomination of Edwin R. Holmes to be United States circuit judge, fifth circuit.

THE JOURNAL

As in legislative session,

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Wednesday, March 18, 1936, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LEWIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] are absent because of illness; and that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], my colleague the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from California [Mr. McABOOL], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] are necessarily detained. I ask that this announcement stand of record for the day.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] is detained at home by illness. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] is necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators have answered to names. A quorum is present.

RECOVERY FROM THE DEPRESSION

Mr. WAGNER. As in legislative session, I wish to make a very brief statement, and then I am going to request unanimous consent to have a speech printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the Senator from New York proceeding as in legislative session? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, every new development, such as the recent reports on income-tax returns, bears evidence of the phenomenal recovery of business during the past year. This improvement has now reached the stage where it cannot be denied by anyone. There is room only for explanation as to what has brought it about. One explanation, which we may call rational, is that progress has been stimulated by the Roosevelt policies, by applying an affirmative remedy to the troubles that beset the farmer, the home owner, the banker, the businessman, and the worker. The other explanation, which we may call irrational, is that the recovery, like the depression, just happened by accident. Some of those in this second school of thought go even further. They claim that the gains would have come even faster if we had done nothing, and that the New Deal is waving a red banner and trying to flag down the train of progress.

I should like to call to the special attention of these critics, who try so frantically to cut the thread of relationship between the New Deal policies and recovery, to a speech made just a year ago by one of the leading businessmen of the Nation. I refer to the Honorable Joseph P. Kennedy, of New York, recent Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

His speech was delivered before the American Arbitration Association, New York City, on March 19, 1935.

Mr. Kennedy spoke at a time when many businessmen felt blue. Although there were already unmistakable signs of better times, they were afraid of the new things that the Government was doing. They were particularly worried by the activities of the Securities and Exchange Commission. They thought they saw in this agency a further design to impose horrible shackles upon industry, and to convert our country from a democracy into a bureaucracy.

Mr. Kennedy, at this opportune moment, stressed two vital issues. In the first place, he traced brilliantly the history of the abuses that had produced the need for the Commission and for the other regulatory activities of the New Deal. But more important he predicted that within a year's time the beneficial effects of these new reforms would be hailed, not only by those connected with the marketing of securities but also by businessmen in general. He prophesied that the country would take tremendous strides forward during 1935.

Every one of Mr. Kennedy's words has come true. He had the courage to predict in advance what our policies would accomplish. Now that the execution of the policies has confirmed the prediction, there is no room to quibble about cause and effect. The record speaks for itself.

On the occasion of the first anniversary of Mr. Kennedy's speech, I want to commend him to the Senate, not only for the statesmanlike quality of his address, but also for the statesmanlike quality of his actions when participating in so important a phase of the New Deal. His example and his influence are still manifest in Washington and throughout the country.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD Mr. Kennedy's speech to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. JOSEPH P. KENNEDY, CHAIRMAN OF SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION, BEFORE AMERICAN ARBITRATION ASSOCIATION, NEW YORK CITY, MARCH 19, 1935

It would be difficult to pretend indifference to the warmth of your greeting. I thank you for it and rejoice in the opportunity given me to talk to your association at just this time.

For, after all, this is New York, the barometer of the Nation's business. I have lived in New York, shared its prosperity in former years, and hope and expect to again. I therefore claim the privilege of speaking frankly to you about matters of common concern. And in all frankness I must say that this age of American cities is not giving a good account of its stewardship as the pace setter of business enterprise. Those whom I have been meeting recently in other sections of the country are unanimous in declaring that New York is the "bluest" spot in the country with respect to business morale. Indeed, one of your financial editors told you so in his column only a few days ago. And when New York is "blue", every other section of the country is confused and confounded.

Gentlemen, I am deeply concerned about the low state to which courage and confidence among businessmen have fallen. Moreover, because the rest of the country has a high estimate of the prophetic value of New York's opinion, you should be satisfied that your pessimistic frame of mind has a reasonable basis before you allow its influence to infect other communities. This industrial machine of ours is so delicate an instrument that opinion everywhere else is sensitive to its fluctuations here. And we must admit that, today at least, New York registers gloom and not sunshine; discouraging prophecies, not hopeful suggestions. As another clear-headed editorial observer stated the other day, "Cassandra has dethroned Pollyanna."

Let us see if this brooding is worthy of us; whether the "jitters" we talk about today isn't merely a manifestation of temporary ailments common to every generation in our history. Is there really any justification for the universal lament that things are worse today than ever before because today, in contrast to other periods, there is "too much Government in business"?

You may well question my right to drift so far beyond the pale of the technical subject matter of the Securities and Exchange Commission; but in the discharge of our specific functions we of the Commission have necessarily had to study attendant economic and social factors. Some first-hand knowledge of conditions leads me to suspect that those who despair of the future because of governmental activities are too often substituting guesswork for fact and emotion for reason.

I happen to head one branch of the Government which has been pointed out as the arch example of Government interference. Because of this fact I ask you to bear with me while I attempt to develop three points which I believe will be of interest to you.

First, I would like to show you from the testimony of an unimpeachable source the logic of the expansion of Government activities in the affairs of our daily lives; secondly, I wish to show you how one branch of the Government—the Securities and Exchange Commission—actually operates in those activities of our daily lives which are its concern; and, third, I hope by this demonstration of our objectives and activities to persuade you that it is cowardly and unmanly and un-American for one to blame the Government for his own lack of courage and enterprise.

Both the Securities Act of 1933 and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 are the products of a civilization which had attained the ultimate of complexity in the daily routine of its life. Indeed, almost 20 years ago the sagacious Elihu Root said:

"We are entering upon the creation of a body of administrative law quite different from the old methods of regulation by specific statutes enforced by courts. As any community passes from simple to complex conditions the only way in which Government can deal with the increased burdens thrown upon it is by the delegation of power to be exercised in detail by subordinate agents, subject to the control of general directions prescribed by superior authority."

That in essence is your own method of procedure. If I understand correctly the purpose of the American Arbitration Association, you seek to take disputed matters out of the delays of courts and into the expediency of arbitration and conference.

This, gentlemen, I submit is government by commission. I cite Mr. Root's prophecy of law administered by Government agencies as my text, because I seek to enlist your support of our efforts to stimulate financial enterprise. To quicken the flow of money into business and to relieve the apprehension and fears of businessmen and bankers, which seem to have paralyzed corporate financing, should be a common ambition. I am persuaded that if I can remind the businessmen of America that the regulation of the business of dealing in securities is not the petulant imposition of discipline born of hatred and rancor, cooperation and response would be certain. If I can convince you that securities regulation was the inevitable and logical result of the complexities of life so accurately forecast by Elihu Root, there will be less "quitting" and more "carrying on" and fewer baseless nightmares about governmental control.

If I can show you further a practical reason for accepting and adopting the interpretative rules and regulations promulgated by the Commission, I am sure that you, as practical businessmen, will follow Mr. Root's admonition.

"There can be no withdrawal", he said, "from these experiments. We shall go on; we shall expand them, whether we approve theoretically or not, because such agencies furnish protection to rights and obstacles to wrongdoing, which under our social and industrial conditions cannot be practically accomplished by the old and simple procedure of legislatures and courts."

How well these words describe what Congress attempted when it said that the sale of securities was affected with a public interest. Surely the phrase "public interest" means "protection to rights and obstacles to wrongdoing."

That, gentlemen, is the objective of the Securities Commission. Make no mistake about the purpose of the legislation. Business must be financed. Those who do that financing—the investors—must be protected. Those who borrow that money—the businessmen—without whose initiative and courage there can be no country worthy of our history, must likewise be protected. If the tenor of the original 1933 act seemed to be largely or exclusively in the interest of the investor, let me say that the efforts of Congress and of the Commission since seem to have been in the interest of the borrower without impairing the rights of the investor.

In the complex setting in which we live and work and build, the necessity for a healthy regulation of the investment market must be apparent to all right-thinking people. We cannot turn back. It is idle to dream and wish for the return of a former day, with its unrestrained opportunity for unfair and dishonest practices. Our task is to face the future and with the aid of these regulatory laws to restrain the power of the strong over the weak. These laws are to be administered in the spirit of their enactment, protecting the investor and stimulating the free flow of capital into new enterprise. We have tried to encourage expansion by removing the obstacles of unnecessary procedural requirements and by minimizing the hardship of undue effort, the risk of liability, and the burden of expense. Our efforts, while they have received the approbation of even the most caustic critic, have brought little success in financing until some notable recent registrations. These, I am hopeful enough to believe, mark a turn in the road.

In my very first talk after taking office I said that the charge that pioneering and daring in business had been discouraged by the new securities legislation was insincere. Happily, some able businessmen have agreed. You cannot minimize the fact that the two major pieces of financing registered within the past fortnight have represented a true cross section of the country.

Forty million dollars in Chicago in the case of Swift & Co. Forty-five million dollars on the Pacific coast in the case of the Pacific Gas Electric Co.

Only a trickling little stream of private corporation finance as yet, where before there was a flood tide. But the stream is large enough and representative enough to justify the statement that there is no longer any excuse left to the corporation which has hitherto hesitated to go forward with confidence.

Can any reasonable man say that the control of those great corporations is in the hands of men recklessly imprudent about the management of their affairs? And if these men, after careful consideration of all the problems involved, have concluded that there is no unreasonable liability, burden, or responsibility imposed by the new securities law, who dares to assert any longer that the Government has made corporate financing legally impossible?

Let me reiterate to emphasize. Can these men, representing some of the best minds and hearts in American business, be entirely wrong, and the hesitant majority who carpingly criticize the existing law, without taking the trouble to become informed concerning it, be correct? We know better.

Let us accept today's promise on its face. I am rash enough to believe that these recent registrations are harbingers of a real upward trend. Do not be disappointed if new financing is not a daily occurrence and business does not boom immediately. There will be lapses of course. A snow storm in March cannot delay the advent of spring. It is enough if the turn has been reached.

You will find upon reflection that although the Pennsylvania Railroad financing in the early days of the 1908 depression unquestionably foreshadowed recovery, the stride of business activity was not manifest for some months. Also, that when the Northern Pacific financed during the 1920-21 reaction, that event was hailed as foreshadowing recovery, but it was some months before the recovery was recorded. The fact is that able businessmen, wisely advised, have flashed a green light signaling that the road ahead is clear of disaster; that the hurdles of legal complexities, expensive fees, and laborious detail have been practically eliminated; that now there can no longer be any excuse for further delay.

For months we of the Commission have been advising business lawyers everywhere that the risks imposed upon honest business by the new legislation had been so greatly reduced by amendment and administration that the requirements today do not exceed those of the common law. Lawyers were not receptive at first and created a barrier which businessmen could not easily follow. The legal profession, naturally slow to embrace new legislation, and the businessman, proverbially timid to enthuse over innovations, have finally seen the light.

We expect some sizable financing will follow. We expect a declaration of faith in the future of our country such as has characterized American business at the turning point in every previous crisis. I urge you (businessmen) to seize the torch of leadership in this necessary crusade. For months it has been trite to say that business lacked confidence. That statement is still true. Business is better than confidence, but business today has an underlying courage which sadly lacks aggressive leadership. New York, which has been holding back largely because of misapprehension and unwarranted fears, we hope will provide that timely leadership.

Government regulation under the Securities Act will safeguard your financial structure, not penalize your initiative. Government regulation affords you accessibility to legal counsel and corporation accountancy advice never before available to businessmen anywhere in the world. America's ablest business lawyers and accountants have cooperated with the Securities and Exchange staff in setting up the registration forms which leading corporations have accepted as their guideposts on the road to financial stability. The most powerful businessman and the richest investor could never have had access to such authentic advice as was cheerfully and freely placed at the disposal of the Government in the studies which led to the adoption of present registration forms.

So I say to you—and I now speak having in mind the example of seasoned practical leaders—that the road to new financing so necessary to recovery has been cleared for you. Money and credit, the lifeblood of profitable business enterprise, have glutted the market recently. The cheapest thing in the world today is money. Cheap money and lack of business confidence are synonymous. But courage is returning and money may not always be cheap. Stockholders and investors will be served if business is now fortified against the financial vicissitudes of the future. Accept the fine example of these business leaders and resist the small-minded critic who sees evil in every Government agency. Wherever you lead, the rest of the country will follow, and 60 days before anyone knows it the victory over doubt and despair will have been won.

It is true, unfortunately, that at present the Street has apparently very little basis for optimism if the present volume of trading be considered the sole index of the future. But all intelligent men know that the present figures are far below normal; they belong with gloomy predictions about the future of the business which I believe are premature and unsound.

But this much I do know and make bold to state. The confidence of the investor has been so completely shaken that, regardless of blame or justification, it required an agency such as our Commission to help regain this lost confidence; to restore the shattered prestige of the business. In the work of protecting the investor, particularly the small investor, against unfairness and dishonesty, we are the recipients of numerous complaints daily. As one might expect, fraudulent charges are made most frequently. Misleading and incomplete prospectuses, manipulations, and the circulation of deceptive information—in other words, charges arising out of the new legislation of 1934—are far less frequent. The old standard complaints of "bucket shop" and "sell and switch" swindles have not disappeared.

Even a cursory review of the recent history of security swindling amazes one. The shrewdness, cleverness, and daring of these trade pirates cannot be minimized. With a remarkable, almost psychic sense of what the public is likely to "fall for", these racketeers constantly shift their wares and their technique. In fashionableness and up-to-dateness they rival the Parisian modiste. Colonel Lindbergh flew the Atlantic, and before he returned the country was flooded with aviation stocks, capitalizing the Nation's latest thrill. A substitute for silk was advertised, and rayon stock swindlers pounced the doors of unfortunate victims. The Sunday magazines feature the electric eye, the photoelectric cell, and the glib man from the "boiler shop", aided by the tipster sheet, speaks caressingly of the golden dawn of tomorrow's wealth. The Government abolishes the domestic market for gold, and mines long since abandoned are glorified in the language of fantastic promises to catch the unwary sucker, the only requisite being a hole in the ground, a ladder, and a feverish imagination. How reminiscent of Mark Twain's definition of a mine. "A hole in the ground owned by a liar." Remonetization of silver is discussed, and a flurry of silver mines with romantic names occupy the interest of the security underworld. Beer comes back, and its return is heralded by fraudulent brewery and beer-barrel stocks. Comes repeal and with it the intoxicating supersalesmanship of the distillery promoter. All of these are compelling evidence of the astonishing energy of the crook and the appalling credulity of the public.

Let me assure you that I have no intention of creating in your mind an inference that all promotions of stock in the various enterprises I have enumerated are fraudulent—far from it. Many of them are sponsored by honest and energetic individuals, but whenever a reputable company capitalizes something new there are the racketeers at all times ready to pass off their worthless wares for the sound securities of the honest promoter.

Let me relate to you a recent one. You can't guess it: It's potash. As you know, potash is used chiefly as an ingredient of fertilizer and is a very earthy substance. In this case the promoter reminds one of "the man on the flying trapeze." For his balance sheet he modestly claims a value of $3,000,000 for leases held by the company. Unfortunately, the company owned but one lease and the royalty charge was so high that even if it contained the richest deposit in the United States it could operate only at a loss. The contract rights were in fields where no commercial potash had ever been found, and even if the potash had been found, Federal regulations prohibited mining operations on this property. The prospectus is guaranteed to excite the envy of the Ananias Club. It lies about the value, earnings, geography, geology, metallurgy, economics, and history. A close examination convinced us that the only truth in the whole prospectus was the address to which you are invited to send your money. So much for potash.

So you see, gentleman, the magnitude of interstate frauds, the comparative helplessness of State officials limited by State boundaries, is a complete vindication of our intervention in this field.

In addition to its other work, the Commission, at the request of the Congress, is conducting a special study of reorganization and protective committees. This report is desired by Congress as a basis for intelligent legislation. It is hoped and believed that this study will constitute a significant contribution to the annals of American finance and will accomplish long-needed reforms in our reorganization system, a field where unfairness and overreaching has been the normal experience.

Students of the subject have long been aware of the need for thorough-going reform and revision of the reorganization system. That system has grown up unregulated and uncontrolled for the most part. During the current depression it has assumed gigantic proportions, with the result that there is hardly an investor in the land who is not somewhat affected by it, and hardly a court in the land which is not confronted by the problems which it raises.

The reorganization system in the past has proceeded largely on the basis of private initiative. The drive and incentive for consummating reorganizations has been in large part the desire for profit on the part of the reorganizers. This desire for profit has not always been compatible with the interests of the investors. Consequently there have resulted in many parts of this country vicious forms of racketeering by promoters of reorganizations. In many reorganizations we have found there exists a growing evil in the blackmailing tendency of certain individuals who by threats and suits and otherwise seek to embarrass the orderly administration of the enterprise in order to capitalize their nuisance value. For these reasons investors have had to pay a heavy toll. The designation "protective" committee has a misleading significance when the parties in control use their power to protect themselves at the expense of investors. Here we find the constant application of the materialistic philosophy that might is right.

It will never be possible for this Commission, any more than any other department of the Government, to transform into sound securities bonds, notes, and stock which never should have been issued. Nor will it be possible to design a reorganization system which will repair and restore losses which have been suffered. Substantial progress, however, can be made toward designing a reorganization system which will safeguard the interests of the investors and prevent their exploitation for or on behalf of promoters and foster the creation of sound successor companies. No new statutes or regulations can dispel the aura of disappointed hopes that surrounds every reorganization. Constructive measures can be taken to curb and control the fraudulent and unethical practices which have been so prevalent in that field of finance.

Time prevents my dealing in detail with the Commission's activities in promulgating forms and rules and regulations. It is sufficient to state that they have been well received by the bar and business alike.

Closely related to nearly every other aspect of the Commission's activities is the problem of the over-the-counter markets. It is probably the most difficult and most complex single problem before the Commission. Constantly we are asked what our plans are for controlling this so-called over-the-counter market. Shortly we shall publish the first step in our program, and in conformity with our established system the regulations will have been promulgated only after a thorough discussion with representatives of the business affected. As in the case of our first steps in exchange regulation last fall, our assumption of control shall be gradual so that needless friction and annoyance may be avoided. In this field, as well as on the organized exchanges, the investigation by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency disclosed numerous fraudulent, unfair, and other undesirable practices which have been eradicated in the interest of the investing public.

Congress would have seemed very naive if it intended this form of trading to go unrestrained. It is our plan, gentlemen, to carry out the definite will of the Congress in this respect so that, by the rules and regulations we shall prescribe, there will be insured to investors protection comparable to that provided in the case of national securities exchanges. The problems are being studied with the counsel and assistance of the country's security dealers.

This, gentlemen, is the story of Government supervision of the security business. Is there anything here that suggests persecution? Aren't we all too Government-conscious?

Things never are quite as hopeless as they are made to appear by fear, and never in the past 2 years has there been such fearing of fear itself as there is today. It is the cold hand of death on business initiative. Men see business sustained at a rate which would have been considered impossible 2 years ago, yet they continually cry out against the uncertainty of things.

Business is still not only better than confidence; it is better than we deserve to have it. We have not matched results with our courage. We have not been grateful enough for a 34-percent increase in general business, for the practical rehabilitation of the great motor industry, and for the sound revamping of other industries.

We have not used these experiences of genuine improvement as springboards to greater efforts. We talk about future uncertainties, ignoring present definite indications of progress. We seek assurance against the unforeseen, forgetting that risk and uncertainty have always been the ordinary incidents of business.

We continually ask, "Where are we headed?" I answer emphatically that we are still heading for the recovery and reform originally proclaimed by the administration in May 1933 as its goal. Why conjure up legislative monstrosities that will never see the statute books? Why not address our minds to business? In the midst of gloom last fall a voice sounded out of the wilderness—the voice of a single automobile manufacturer—to prepare for a record business in 1935, undertaking himself to produce and distribute 1,000,000 cars. The effect was immediate and dramatic. Competitors stopped their wishful thinking, went to work with confidence, and as a result automobile production so far this year is 47 percent larger than the output of the same period a year ago.

Frankly, I believe that many of the worries that impede business at the moment are unnecessary. I cannot forget an old adage oft quoted under similar conditions in the past: "Today is the tomorrow that you worried about yesterday, and it never happened." Most of the things we worry about today will never happen. As I said before, recently in Chicago, speaking of the relation of the Commission to business, "There is not the slightest thought of elimination or restricting proper profits, and I, for one, have no patience with the view that every man who has a dollar or wants to make one is a public enemy * * *." I have less patience, however, with that man who, blessed in a worldly way by the opportunities of living in America, smugly wraps the mantle of selfishness about him in a cowardly refusal to wager on our common future.

Do not let such a man tell you he is afraid of confiscation; afraid of socialization; afraid of government. Politics is the science of government. Politics is the living breath of representative democracy. Politics of a sort has been the lot of this Nation since Cornwallis' surrender. Politics troubled the last days of George Washington, harrowed the earned leisure of Lincoln, ruined the evening of Woodrow Wilson's life. Had the businessmen of those earlier days abandoned their jobs and committed industrial suicide because of politics, this Nation would never have advanced an inch. Let us stop talking politics to the exclusion of business. Every legislative step of importance since the Constitution was written was claimed by critics as foreshadowing doom. And after every attack of nerves, immeasurable progress resulted.

Let me illustrate with some examples of dire prophecies:

"On account of governmental and legislative attacks on corporate activities and on wealth and capital, enterprise has come to a halt and a blinding paralysis is spreading all over their industrial organization. There can be no enduring recovery until the causes responsible for this state of things shall have been removed."

When do you think this was written? It is a financial editorial of February 1908.

Here is another:

"The closed mill and empty dinner pail will be as conspicuous as in 1896: The future outlook is disastrous, and I hope it will not be enduring. The situation is appalling. It cannot be exaggerated."

When do you think that was written? It was the utterance of the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee in December 1920.

In the 10 years following the 1908 forecast the industrial output in this country increased 52 percent. In the 10 years following the 1920 outburst the industrial output increased 55 percent.

So you see the futility of taking counsel of present-day fears. You cannot chart politics. You cannot sit down and draw some crooked lines showing where the fluctuations of political sentiment are likely to lead. Then why watch politics exclusively?

Instead, let us stick to the one formula we all know—"business as usual." Never did this country need that slogan more than it does today. Box the compass of your own industry. Plan your future requirements. Cut your cloth according to your pattern, as the motor industry has done. Invest in America. Its people have purchasing power, cash reserves, bank balances, and savings accounts. Hoarding, mental hoarding, and spiritual hoarding keep these resources in hiding. The great American people, whose common sense solved every crisis in their history, have never failed to respond to sane, courageous business leadership.

So I appeal to you, "Be yourselves." Don't dodge the duties of citizenship by blaming Government interference for the lack of business initiative and enterprise. Government interference—politics, if you will—we have always had with us, yet our predecessors went ahead and developed this marvelous land which we enjoy today.

Let us imitate them. Talk and think and dream business progress today and tomorrow.

In closing I should like to leave with you the thoughts of one of your New York poets, Wallace Irwin. They dispose so effectively of those of us who magnify our troubles that I shall read them and then take leave of you.

I entitle them "A nautical diagnosis of a businessman, 1935 model":

"Suppose that this here vessel," says the skipper with a groan,

"Should lose 'er bearings, run away, and bump upon a stone,

"Suppose she'd shiver and go down, when save ourselves we couldn't."

The mate replies, "Oh, blow me eyes, suppose again, she shouldn't."

"I read in the statistics books," the nervous skipper cries,

"That every minute by the clock some fella ups and dies."

I wonder what disease they get that kills in such a hurry."

The mate, he winks, and sighs, "I think, they mostly dies of worry."

"Of certain things," the skipper sighs, "me conscience won't be rid,

"And all the wicked things I've done, I sure should not have did."

"The wrinkles on me inmost soul compel me oft' to shiver."

"Yer soul's first rate," observes the mate, "the trouble's with your liver."

During the executive session, by unanimous consent, the following legislative business was transacted:

PETITIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, memorializing the Federal Government to accept the immediate responsibility for relief and employment of transients, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

(See concurrent resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. BARBOUR.)

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask consent to have printed in full in the RECORD and appropriately referred a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of New Jersey requesting the National Government to accept the immediate responsibility for relief and employment of transients.

The concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolution requesting the National Government to accept the immediate responsibility for relief and employment of transients

Whereas industrial, legal, and financial conditions created by the prolonged economic depression have dislodged thousands of men, women, and children from their normal occupations and places of legal settlement, have thrown them, in their extremity, into communities where they are alien and have no legal right to relief; and

Whereas the Federal Government in the last 2 years by its program of relief and work for transients has demonstrated that it is possible on a national scale to alleviate the condition; and

Whereas the experience of these 2 years has further demonstrated that transiency is an interstate problem and that it has its migratory labor and other situations that are beyond the control of the individual States; and

Whereas the abandonment by the Federal Government of the relief program for these persons is returning these unfortunate, unsettled people to chaos and hopelessness, since they and the communities in which they find themselves lack the means to solve their problems; and

Whereas most States cannot legally use State funds to relieve unsettled persons, and residual Federal funds in the hands of State agencies are now practically exhausted; and

Whereas the interstate conference on transient relief held on March 6 and 7, 1936, at Trenton, N. J., represented by 21 States east of the Mississippi, unanimously agreed to press the Federal authorities to take such action: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Assembly of the State of New Jersey (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of New Jersey by concurrent resolution hereby memorialize the Federal Works Progress Administration and the Congress of the United States to accept the immediate responsibility for relief and employment of transients, and we urge that this relief in employment be made effective through permanent departments of State government and coordinate local units of administration, and that funds be made available by the Federal Government on a grant-in-aid basis; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary of the senate to the President of the United States, the Federal Works Progress Administrator, the Secretary of the Senate, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and to each Member of Congress duly elected from the State of New Jersey.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2553) for the relief of C. C. Young, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1709) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on March 18, 1936, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 2664. An act to aid in defraying the expenses of the Third Triennial Meeting of the Associated Country Women of the World, to be held in this country in June 1936; and

S. 3173. An act for the relief of certain formerly enlisted members of Battery D, One Hundred and Ninety-seventh Coast Artillery (Antiaircraft), New Hampshire National Guard.

BILLS AND A JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. RUSSELL:

A bill (S. 4311) for the relief of Cora Fulghum and Ben Peterson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ROBINSON (for Mr. TYDINGS):

A bill (S. 4312) to authorize the issuance of a special series of stamps commemorative of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Battle of Antietam; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. SHIPSTEAD:

A bill (S. 4313) granting an increase in retired pay to Frank E. Monville; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MCKELLAR:

A bill (S. 4314) to provide for adjusting the compensation of division superintendents, assistant division superintendents, assistant superintendents at large, assistant superintendent in charge of car construction, chief clerks, assistant chief clerks, and clerks in charge of sections in offices of division superintendents in the Railway Mail Service, to correspond to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 4315) to provide for the controlling of floods on the rivers of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 4316) to amend the retirement laws affecting certain grades of Army officers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 4317) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant to the city of Buffalo, N. Y., the right and privilege to occupy and use for sewage-disposal facilities part of the lands forming the pier and dikes of the Black Rock Harbor improvement at Buffalo, N. Y.; to the Committee on Commerce.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 236) to amend the joint resolution (Public Res. No. 67, 74th Cong.), approved August 31, 1935, relating to the neutrality of the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. KEYES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill to insert the following:

"For the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, $11,300,000, to be expended for carrying out the non-Federal flood-control projects in the State of New Hampshire described in Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works dockets nos. NH-1021, NH-1025, and NH-1041."

RELIEF OF PERSONS IN FLOOD-STRICKEN AREAS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, during the last few days thousands of the citizens of this country have been driven from their homes because of raging floods. Conditions throughout the Johnstown-Pittsburgh area are unspeakably bad. I do not recall a time during the last 50 years of intimate association with that section of the country when such havoc has been wrought by uncontrolled and flooded rivers.

According to the latest press reports, this flood condition extends from New Hampshire and Vermont on the north to southern Virginia on the south, and from Pittsburgh on the west to the Atlantic coast on the east. Estimates indicate that 25,000 persons have already been rendered homeless. The greatest devastation has overwhelmed the Johnstown-Pittsburgh area. In Johnstown the dead are estimated at from 3 to 20, with estimates of homeless running from 2,000 to 10,000. The great dams above the city, the breaking of which resulted in the disastrous flood of 1889, when more than 2,000 persons were killed, were holding, according to the latest reports. However, the city has been coated with mud, and in some places the water has been 28 feet deep.

In Pittsburgh the section known as the Golden Triangle, which includes the city's skyscrapers, was under 10 feet of water. Thousands of persons have been marooned on the upper floors of office and business buildings. In the district which lies between the Monongahela and Allegheny Rivers, banks, theaters, department stores, and the stock exchange were closed. Newspaper offices were flooded and the power lines were broken. Adding to the horror was a series of fires in homes and industrial plants. Firemen were seriously handicapped by the high water. The damage to property amounting to millions upon millions of dollars, the loss of homes, the loss of life, and danger to health have been beyond possible calculation, and words cannot convey an adequate idea of the distressing condition.

Mr. President, while I speak of Pittsburgh, I am not unaware of the situation which threatens the lives and property of our people periodically throughout the East and Middle West. We have long been confronted with the problem of flood control on the Mississippi River. Substantial measures are now in progress to improve the situation there. But, as I now speak, flood waters are lapping at the doors of residents in eight States in the worst catastrophe of its kind in nearly half a century. By walking to the dome of the Capitol anyone of us may view the damage wrought by the flooded Potomac. Millions of dollars of property has been destroyed by the muddy wall of water now rolling down the Potomac Valley.

Mr. President, I am not unmindful of these conditions of disaster which present problems of flood control in many parts of the country, but I should like to state that western Pennsylvania is in special need of consideration owing to the fact that it is so largely a region where great rivers join together. The Tygart, the Buchannon, and the West Fork merge into the Monongahela, which in turn is joined at McKeesport by the Youghiogheny. The mighty Ohio, Allegheny, and Monongahela Rivers are now pouring their roaring floods into the Pittsburgh area. This exercises a tremendous flood effect on southwestern Pennsylvania, northern West Virginia, and northwestern Maryland.

As a result red canoes are paddling down Wood Street past Roberts' jewelry Store at Fifth and Diamond in Pittsburgh, and down on Penn Avenue motorboats are running around taking people out of the business buildings. A majority of people in Pittsburgh live up in the hills, but the business section is down in the valleys where the flood waters are now destroying so much property.

Measures of a temporary nature have already been taken by State and Federal authorities to rescue the victims of the flood and to provide against the spread of sickness and epidemic. However, these are but temporary measures, and they cannot be expected to meet the present emergency unless they are supplemented by special appropriations from Federal funds. President Roosevelt has appointed an emergency flood relief committee and the Army has been instructed to extend full aid toward the prevention of further loss of life and destruction of property. The Red Cross has ordered its trained disaster workers to speed to the points of greatest need, and their efforts are being supported by several thousand volunteer chapter workers. Robert E. Bondy, national disaster relief director for the Red Cross has gone to Johnstown to superintend relief activities from that point. All honor to the noble Red Cross and its heroic workers. Voluntary contributions are now being raised to meet the needs of homeless citizens. But the emergency is so great that I advocate a special appropriation of Federal funds be made immediately to assist the victims of this flood disaster.

Measures of this kind are necessary at once. However, they do not insure protection against the repetition of this disaster, and this we should earnestly consider. Flood control is now being carried on at various places in the country and is desperately needed in the Johnstown-Pittsburgh area. Work for 50,000 or 60,000 men of great and permanent value to the Nation could be started at once if W. P. A. funds were now made available at prevailing wage rates for adequate flood-control projects. This would be an expenditure of lasting value to the country as a whole and would set a higher standard of work-relief projects. I advocate that Federal funds for this purpose be made available at once.

In April 1934 the President's Committee on Water Flow made its report. In that report the project proposed for the Allegheny River included:

First. The extension of the existing 9-foot navigation project, at a cost of about $2,650,000, and completion of pending investigations of the desirability of making further extension of the navigable channel.

Second. The step-by-step development over a period of years of a system of flood-control reservoirs for the reduction of floods on the Allegheny and Ohio Rivers, eventually to include eight reservoirs, at a cost of about $53,406,000.

The Water Flow Committee report also included a project for the Monongahela River calling for the completion of the Tygart Reservoir, at a cost, in addition to funds already provided, of about $9,000,000.

I now quote from the committee report on page 219:

The Ohio River Valley is subject to destructive floods. Over 90 percent of the damage is sustained by the numerous towns, cities, industries, and railroads which line the banks of the stream. After a thorough study of the various means of flood control, it has been concluded that a system of flood-control reservoirs appears to be the most practical means of providing general flood relief for the Ohio River Valley. Approximately 90 possible reservoir sites throughout the basin have been studied. Thirty-nine sites were finally selected for a system of reservoirs believed to represent the best possible development, from an economic viewpoint, of a flood-control plan which would offer a fair general solution of the flood-control problem throughout the Ohio Basin. The proposed reservoirs are all situated on tributaries of the Ohio River above Cincinnati, and the system has a total capacity of about 7,418,000 acre-feet. The estimated total first cost is about $210,000,000. The total annual cost, including finance cost at 4 percent and maintenance cost, is estimated at about $9,071,000.

Mr. President, I am convinced that the time has come when we shall be guilty of criminal negligence if we do not take practical measures at once to protect the lives and property of the people whose destiny is so closely allied with proper flood-control projects.

Projects of these proportions which fit in with the proposals of departmental committees based on years of intensive investigation and practical experience afford an opportunity for work relief of a high order. Man power and money invested in work of this kind would bring permanent dividends to the Nation in giving work to the unemployed and protection of life and property in flood-endangered areas. If we are to have work relief, I believe that so far as possible it should be used to serve practical ends. I am confident that no better expenditure of work-relief money could be made than to follow the suggestions of the President's Committee on Water Flow as I have stated them.

Work relief on practical projects of this kind should be given to qualified workers at prevailing wage rates, so that the work will be accomplished efficiently and so that those who do the work will have a decent standard of living for their families.

Mr. President, I ask that the resolution which I now submit to the Senate be read by the clerk and referred to the Appropriations Committee for appropriate action.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 259) was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

Resolved, That the President is hereby requested to transfer immediately the sum of $3,000,000 to the American Red Cross, out of relief funds already appropriated, to be used by it for the relief of persons in flood-stricken areas.

OPERATION OF FOREIGN AND AMERICAN SHIPS IN THE FOREIGN TRADE

Mr. ROBINSON (for Mr. TYDINGS) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 260), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce is requested to furnish to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the following information: (1) A list of the most important acts of Congress governing the operation of American ships in foreign trade; (2) a brief summary of the handicaps which confront American-flag ships when competing with ships of a foreign flag; (3) show how these handicaps result in higher operating costs to the American shipowners; (4) whether it is the general practice of American shipowners to purchase fuel and supplies in this country or abroad, and the approximate annual amount of such purchases for all foreign-trade ships of the American merchant marine; (5) whether it is the general practice of foreign shipowners to purchase fuel and supplies in this country or abroad, and the approximate annual amount of such purchases for all foreign-flag ships trading with the United States and its possessions; (6) the estimated percentage of the relative operating costs of ships flying the flags of Great Britain, Germany, France, Italy, and Japan, on the basis of 100 percent for ships flying the flag of the United States; (7) the percentage of American trans-Atlantic cargo carried by American-flag ships, and the percentage carried by foreign-flag ships; (8) the percentage of American trans-Pacific cargo carried by American-flag ships, and the percentage carried by foreign-flag ships; (9) the profit or loss of the six American lines operating the largest American-flag tonnage for the years 1926, 1928, 1930, 1932, 1934, and 1935; (10) the operating expenses of the same lines for the same years and their gross incomes for such years; (11) how many of such lines held mail contracts, either on a poundage or per-mile basis, and the aggregate amount of money paid to them under such contracts; and (12) what formula do you generally recommend as a matter of United States policy which would deal fairly with all shipping lines, large or small, for the carrying of the mail.

RELIEF OF FLOOD-STRICKEN AREAS IN PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, the appalling conditions that are daily appearing in the press describing the ravages of floods in the State of Pennsylvania require the cooperation and assistance of the Federal Government and the American Red Cross. I submit a resolution requesting the President of the United States to transfer $10,000,000 of Emergency Relief appropriations to the American Red Cross for use in relief to flood-stricken areas in my State, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations for prompt action.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 261) was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to transfer from appropriations under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 the sum of $10,000,000 to the American Red Cross for use in relief to flood-stricken areas in the State of Pennsylvania during the present emergency.

RELIEF OF FLOOD-STRICKEN AREAS IN WEST VIRGINIA

Mr. NEELY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 262), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to transfer from appropriations under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 the sum of $5,000,000 to the American Red Cross for use in relief to the victims of the flood-stricken areas in the State of West Virginia during the present emergency.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR BYRNES TO SOUTH CAROLINA TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an interesting and informative address delivered by the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to the State Teachers' Association at Columbia, S. C., on March 13, 1936.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, I esteem it a happy privilege to address an organization having among its purposes the increased efficiency of the teachers of South Carolina, the promotion of their welfare, and the development of our system of education. If you counsel wisely, plan courageously, and renew your courage and devotion by coming together in this way, I am satisfied you will continue to hold the line for education, for knowledge, and for tolerance against ignorance and intolerance.

We are proud of our country. For that pride we have just cause. But men are apt to forget that success and lasting future are not assured because of a brilliant and successful past. The extent to which we progress is going to depend upon the manner in which we meet our common problem of common education. The present generation must not forget its responsibility to the Nation, and the State must not forget its responsibility to education.

The education of the youth of America cannot be laid aside for a year or a period of years. For in them lie the life and the spirit by which alone America renews herself. And yet only a few years ago we found the terms of our public schools being shortened, with the inevitable effect upon the next generation.

In 1932 and 1933 the State superintendent of education, in his annual report, pictured a demoralizing condition. With the inability of the State, the counties, and cities to collect taxes, and the resulting impairment of the credit of these governments, our schools necessarily suffered. We will not soon forget the curtailment of school sessions, particularly in the rural districts. Nor will we soon forget the number of teachers who were thrown out of employment and the reduction in the compensation of those who were retained.

The support of schools is a State function. Notwithstanding this, the Federal Government in the emergency, rendered material assistance to the educational system of South Carolina. Ordinarily, when people speak of those who during the depression were unemployed, they speak only of the laborer. Little sympathy has ever been expressed for the thousands who were employed in the professions such as teaching, and who were suddenly thrown out of employment. I do not know what would have become of them but for the relief measures of the United States Government. Without interfering with the school system of a State, and without changing its policy that education is the function of the State, the United States Government contributed money for the employment of teachers, just as aid was given to all other people in need, and thereby made it possible to extend the terms of rural schools and promote adult education.

Since 1933 the United States Government has contributed $2,642,000 to pay the salaries of teachers and aid students in the schools of South Carolina. During the same period $1,950,620 was contributed for school projects and $1,172,000 was loaned for educational buildings. The building program provided only for essential projects, urged by school officials, and which the State and its subdivisions were unable to construct. The program established no policy on the part of the United States Government to build schools for local governments. The Government does not seek to acquire jurisdiction over the schools constructed. The program, however, provided employment for persons on the relief rolls. Had this not been done, local governments would have been forced to construct these buildings, and this would have meant the collection of additional local taxes. We hear much about governmental waste, but I certainly do not consider as waste the money given to aid the schools and teachers of South Carolina.

President Madison is quoted as having said, "A people who mean to be their own governors must arm themselves with the power that knowledge gives." A people cannot thus arm themselves except by education. The fight for freedom is successful only to the extent that the fight for free schools is successful. And the success of our free schools is dependent upon the character and the ability of the teachers we place in charge of these schools.

Today, as never before, the people of this Nation are interested in the efforts to maintain government by the people. Through the press and over the radio conflicting views of government are daily presented. As teachers, as citizens, and as leaders of thought in your respective communities you are interested in these problems, because the correctness of their solution will affect you and those who look to you for guidance.

It is difficult for us to understand or appreciate the problems confronting us unless we have what is commonly called "the background." For 70 years, with the exception of a period of 16 years, the Republican Party was in control of the United States Government. Possibly because they were in control they believed in giving greater power to Federal Government. In any event, great power was conferred upon the Federal Government. Through the instrumentalities of tariffs, subsidies, and expenditures for public works the Federal Government developed certain sections of the country controlled by the dominant party, leaving other sections at the mercy of the favored States. The acts of Government contributed to a further accumulation of great fortunes in the hands of a few, and these few used that accumulated wealth to continue control of the Government in order to enrich themselves and impoverish the masses of the people. The extent of that accumulation is demonstrated by the income-tax returns of 1933.

Returns are made for families, and of the 27,500,000 families in the United States less than 1,800,000 had incomes above $2,500 on which Federal taxes had to be paid. Of this number, 325,000 reported incomes of more than $5,000 per year. There were 46 who had incomes of $1,000,000 or more per year. Now, think of that. Out of the 130,000,000 people in this country there were 46 who possessed such vast estates that their incomes in 1 year, after all deductions, amounted to $1,000,000 or more. If you were 1 of those 46, would you want to change the rules of the game or the provisions of law which had so favored you? Well, you might be so magnanimous, but I do not think any 1 of the 46 was ever heard to be in favor of a new deal.

But let us consider the other side of the picture. Over 25,000,000 families paid no income taxes. In other words, their incomes ranged from a mere nothing to $1,000, $1,500, and $2,500, with the great bulk below $1,000. I am not one of those who believe the Government owes every man a living, but I do believe that Government should use its power to furnish to every man and woman who is willing to work, an opportunity to earn an income sufficient to provide the necessities of life. This became impossible under the system of greed and privilege which had developed in the United States prior to March 4, 1933.

To correct this situation has been the underlying objective of every New Deal measure. Every heartbeat of your President is for the average man; yes—the forgotten man prior to March 3, 1933. It is among these average men and women of the country that you will find support for the New Deal, and it is these people who, notwithstanding the howling of the die-hards, are going to reelect Franklin Roosevelt President of the United States.

During the period of 12 years preceding March 4, 1933, the captains of industry were in more complete control of this Government than ever before in our history. They dictated the policies of this Government, and many little fellows, who were content to receive the crumbs that fell from their tables, urged a continuance of their dictatorship. The failure they made of Government will never be forgotten. I know they do not like us to recall conditions, but you will remember them. Schools were closing, teachers were being thrown out of employment or their salaries being reduced. The railroads were threatened with bankruptcy, and the Government had to consider taking them over. The insurance companies, to whom we looked in case of death for the protection of loved ones, were seriously crippled. In the cities people were driven from their homes; in the country they lost their farms. In the West, as some judges signed foreclosure decrees they were mobbed by angry people. It was estimated that 16,000,000 men walked the streets out of employment.

In New York City one night in January 1933, in company with a group of Senators and Congressmen, I was at the home of Governor Roosevelt, discussing the legislative program to follow his inauguration. We heard a noise. I thought it sounded like the cry of a mob. Afterward we learned that several thousand persons had been stopped by policemen a block from the Governor's home. They wanted to gather before his door and present to him and to the group of legislators their requests for food to relieve their hunger. They were hungry men. Hungry men are dangerous men.

The former President of the United States, Mr. Hoover, may not recall the serious conditions then existing; but I recall that just before the adjournment of Congress in 1932 he sent word to a subcommittee, of which I was a member, that while he advocated a reduction in the compensation of all Government employees, that an exception should be made as to the enlisted personnel of the Army and Navy because he did not know what would happen in the next few months and he did not want to have to rely upon an Army that might be dissatisfied because of a reduction in compensation. It was under such conditions that this administration came into power.

At that time we didn't hear any talk about the Constitution. We didn't hear the former Governor of New York, Alfred E. Smith, talking about the platform adopted at Chicago 9 months prior to that time. All we heard was the cry from the bankers, manufacturers, and businessmen of America that the President do something, do anything, to save the country. Well, the President and the Congress did do something. They could not follow the beaten path because that had been followed by the previous administration and had resulted in chaos. They had to blaze new trails. They had to experiment. The banks were opened. We experimented with the insuring of deposits. The result is that since that time we have had no bank failures, with the exception of a few inconsequential institutions, and the depositors in these banks had their money within 24 hours after the closed notices were posted. What would that insurance of bank deposits have meant to our people when the banks in South Carolina closed their doors prior to March 4, 1933? The question answers itself. I am glad that the people can now go to sleep at night without the fear that in the morning they will learn that the savings of a lifetime have been swept away.

In 1933 we enacted an emergency banking law. It put an end to speculation with the money of depositors. In 1935 we made a permanent revision of the banking laws. At first the bankers complained of this proposal. Now they admit it has been beneficial to the banking institutions of the Nation. We regulated trading upon the stock exchange and the sale of securities to the people of the Nation. We loaned money to the closed banks of the Nation in order that the banks might pay their depositors without waiting for the final liquidation of the banks. We refinanced the farm mortgages of the Nation, lending money at a new low rate of 3½-percent interest and for long periods of time so as to save the constant cost of refinancing mortgages. We performed the same service for the home owners of the cities.

Few people realize the assistance this gave to local governments. In South Carolina $13,135,000 was loaned upon city homes. In making these loans provision had to be made for the payment of back taxes. Ten percent, or $1,313,000, was in this manner paid to the State, counties, and cities of South Carolina for back taxes. In refinancing the farms of the State $1,305,700 was paid to the State and the counties for back taxes. The payment of these taxes helped local governments to function. It made it possible for schools to run. It restored the credit of the State, its cities and counties, so that they in turn could borrow for their needs.

Through Government assistance the railroads were aided, so that today there is no danger of Government operation. The insurance companies were assisted and today our policies are safe. We can best understand the improvement in conditions by discussing the conditions of our own State.

In South Carolina the receipts from the sale of the principal farm products in 1932 amounted to $46,219,000. In 1935 the receipts amounted to $92,026,000, an increase of almost 100 percent.

In 1932 the contracts for residential construction awarded amounted to $2,033,900. In 1935 the amount of contracts awarded amounted to $5,075,300.

In 1932 the total construction of all kinds in South Carolina amounted to $7,658,800. In 1935 it amounted to $18,493,300.

In 1932 we had on deposit in the banks of South Carolina, National and State, $74,522,000; in 1935 we had on deposit in the banks of South Carolina $120,814,000.

When people file income-tax returns with the United States Government for tax purposes you can rest assured that they do not overstate their incomes. In 1933 the total income tax paid in South Carolina was $1,108,624; in 1935 it was $2,976,370, or an increase of 168 percent.

From 1933 to January 1, 1936, the United States Government paid to the farmers of South Carolina in rental and benefit payments $21,823,284. Of this amount $18,046,506 has been paid on account of cotton, $3,221,464 to tobacco growers, and the balance on account of corn, hogs, and peanuts.

New Deal recovery is not restricted to South Carolina. It is being felt throughout the land, and all citizens, even those who now so severely denounce the Roosevelt administration, have been its beneficiaries. Let me give you a few percentages contrasting conditions under the New Deal and under the Old Deal. Between April 1, 1933, and December 1, 1935, unemployment declined 30 percent. Between March 1, 1933, and January 1, 1936, cotton advanced 92 percent; wheat, 111 percent; corn, 152 percent.

Between January 1, 1933, and January 1, 1936, industrial production advanced 51 percent, steel production advanced 257 percent, auto registrations advanced 326 percent. Between January 1, 1933, and December 1, 1935, the dollar value of exports advanced 33 percent and imports 37 percent.

Mark this: Listed stocks on our security exchanges advanced 134 percent from March 1, 1933, to January 1, 1936. Listed bonds during that period advanced 22 percent.

Finally, for the benefit of our utility friends, who are so worried about the final effect of Santee-Cooper and Buzzards Roost, let me say that from January 1, 1933, to January 1, 1936, power production increased 19 percent.

Now let me cite some of the old-deal declines and the picture is complete. During the last 3 years of the old deal, from 1930 to 1933, cotton declined 61 percent, wheat 59 percent, corn 72 percent, industrial production 44 percent, auto registrations 66 percent, exports 56 percent, imports 52 percent, listed stocks 75 percent, listed bonds 22 percent, and power production 9 percent.

During the last 3 years of the old deal the only advance was the advance of unemployment. On April 1, 1930, there were 3,188,000 unemployed, and on the same day in 1933, 16,000,000 of our people were without work.

To all of this the confirmed critic will say, "You have spent too much money. This is evidenced by the increased debt." We have increased the debt. But the people should know that of the increased debt four and one-half billion dollars have been loaned. Some of the loans are secured by the assets of the banks, and not one dollar of such loans will be lost. As a matter of fact, $18,000,000 were loaned to closed banks in South Carolina, and $16,000,000 have already been repaid. Money has been loaned to cities to build waterworks and sewerage systems. These loans are secured by the bonds of the cities and are certain to be repaid. Advances were made to save the homes in the cities and the farms of the Nation. These loans were based upon values fixed during the depression. The Government will recover its money unless real-estate values decrease below what they were in 1933. If that occurs, balancing a budget will be one of our minor problems. Money has been used in the construction of public buildings throughout the country. The lots upon which these buildings are constructed have been brought at depression values. The life of the average post-office building is 50 years. The lots are located in the business sections of the cities of the country. Fifty years from now practically every one of them will be worth 1,000 times as much as the cost of the lots today.

A prominent critic says that in making these expenditures the administration violated the platform promise to reduce expenditures. In March 1933, when they were crying for help, these people didn't talk about the platform. In November 1934, after this Democratic program had been inaugurated, the people endorsed it by increasing the Democratic majority in the Senate and House.

In 1933 our critics had no suggestion as to what should be done. Now that we are emerging from the depression they denounce the people who saved them. Daily the representatives of big business cry, "Too much government in business." In 1933 they were crying for the Government to go into business—their business. They cry, "Back to the Constitution." What they mean is back to the conditions existing prior to 1933, under which they were able to concentrate the wealth of this country in the hands of the few and have that few dominate the Government of the United States.

But some of our critics say that, admitting that conditions have improved, you should now decrease expenditures. I agree. It is my theory that in times of depression we should engage in public works. If at such a time the Government throws people out of schoolrooms and out of Government offices, they simply increase the number of unemployed and make recovery more difficult. That is the time to begin public works. When we return to normal conditions we should stop public works so as not to compete with individuals for labor and materials; we should decrease expenditures and continue to levy taxes so as to make possible a reduction of the public debt just as we reduced the public debt by $10,000,000,000 between 1920 and 1930.

When unable to sustain any other indictment the critic will invariably speak of expenditures for relief. There can be no doubt it was the most difficult problem of all. However, it should be remembered that originally Congress passed a law which provided that no assistance should be granted to a State unless the Governor of that State certified that neither the State nor its counties and cities nor its charitable organizations could care for their unfortunates. The money was turned over to the Governor of the State. It became State funds. The administrator was appointed upon the recommendation of the Governor. I am satisfied they did the best that human beings could do, but all men realize that you cannot dispense charity without waste. No church committee ever undertook it without having some waste. If you respond to the pleas for help at your own door you are certain to give to some undeserving people. As States, counties, and cities return to normal condition they must assume the burden of relief, because they can best administer it. But during the depression they could not do it; and even though mistakes did occur, I am glad the Government of the United States, with its vast resources and unimpaired credit, did not stand idly by and permit human beings to starve.

The willingness of some persons to disregard human suffering is not new. We are told that long, long ago, on the road to Jericho, there lay a man wounded and suffering. He was in need. That was relief case no. 1. I imagine that the clergyman who passed without heeding his appeals contented himself with the thought that it was a case for the community chest or Salvation Army. Doubtless the Levite who passed and ignored the cry for assistance feared that if he granted relief he would not be able to balance his budget. But, fortunately, there came a good Samaritan, who heeded the cries of the unfortunate man. He did not stop to consider budgets. He took him to an inn, paid for his keep, and then, because his credit was good, pledged that credit for whatever amount was necessary to relieve the suffering of a human being. There comes a time in the life of a government, as in the life of an individual, when the spirit of the Samaritan must influence our actions and we must place the relief of human beings above the necessity for balancing budgets.

The Government has entered another field—that of social security. I think it time that the Government should show an interest in this subject. We have a duty to perform. There is nothing more pathetic than the condition of an aged person without means. It will always be the desire of a son and daughter when it is humanly possible to take care of them, but often it isn't possible. They may have children of their own to support, and the old man or the old woman, realizing the burden they are, go to their graves unhappy. Forty-one States of the Union have provided for old-age assistance. It shows a recognition by the people of this Nation that something must be done to provide for the aged.

Even more pathetic is the condition of the blind. They cannot earn an income. If they have no loved ones able to take care of them, they must take their place at the corner of a street with a bell and try to awaken in the hearts of those who pass by a generous impulse that will result in some small contribution toward securing food. I recall a woman coming to see me last summer to ask whether or not she was entitled to a pension by reason of the service for a few weeks in the Spanish-American War of her husband, who had recently died. She was totally blind. The driver of the automobile was a young woman. I assumed she was a relative. When I asked her to forward me all the correspondence the blind woman had in connection with the matter so that I could see if it was possible to assist her, I learned that the young woman was no relative; that she came from another county, and, learning of the unfortunate condition of this blind woman, had volunteered to bring her to my home. Fortunately, in life there are some people with hearts who will help the unfortunate. But there is no reason why that burden should not be shared, through a system of taxation, by the man whose income makes it possible for him to be of assistance but who is too busy or too selfish to be of assistance.

Whenever we discuss these measures in which the Government has shown an interest in the welfare of the individual, the man who loves to boast that he is "practical" will usually declare that such proposals emanate only from the "brain trust." That phrase has no terror for me. I have not much fear of a government influenced by brains. I am afraid of a government influenced by people without brains. By the "brain trust" these critics mean that too many men who have at some time in their lives taught school have been called into the service of the Government. They like to speak scornfully of a professor. Then they go home and take their children, whom they love as they love life itself, and send them to school to have their minds and characters molded and influenced by the hated professors and school teachers.

Ladies and gentlemen, you must realize that you can never be compensated in dollars and cents for the service you render. You must teach for the love of teaching. One of the greatest of modern teachers, Horace Mann, has said, "I love to teach as a painter loves to paint, as a musician loves to play, as a singer loves to sing, and as a strong man rejoices to run a race." Yours is the inspired undertaking and the heavy burden. The legion of youth must look to you for knowledge, for the formation of character, for the shaping of ideals, and for preparation for life. There is no nobler task. There can be no more satisfying service.

When I think of the experiences you must have had, of the discouragement, the seeming failure of pupils, your patience and devotion, there comes into my mind a story I heard long ago. The school had been dismissed. The tired teacher, just as you have done, perhaps, sat at her desk to rest a while, and looked out upon the empty seats. She bent her head over her desk. The noise and bustle of the day had gone, quiet reigned, and she fell into thought. Suddenly, the room was no longer empty. The chairs and desks were filled with her pupils. But they were not the boys and girls who had just left in the joy of school dismissed. They were pupils of other years; grandmothers, doctors, lawyers, teachers, farmers; successes and failures, gray-haired and with the marks of years upon their faces. As a distant bell sounded, they vanished, leaving behind them the admonition, "Remember, 'tis us you teach!" And you, my friends, must ever remember that it is the future citizen you are teaching.

Possibly the most important address delivered by the President of the United States within the last year was his message to the Congress when it convened in January. Those of you who heard the President over the radio will recall that in closing that address he stated that in what he had done and was trying to do for the welfare of the people of this Nation, he was influenced by thoughts expressed to him years ago by one of his teachers. As he quoted from that educator I could not but think, if that teacher were still alive and could hear the President, he would realize as never before the responsibility of a teacher. He would learn that his thoughts expressed to one of his pupils were influencing the actions of the man who guides the destinies of 130,000,000 people.

Immediately after this speech, newspapermen were inquiring as to the identity of that teacher who had thus impressed himself upon the mind of the President. To the Nation he was unknown. It caused me to think that it was a splendid sentiment which had prompted the people of one State in the Union to erect a memorial to the unknown teacher. I could think of no more worthy cause, of no cause to which I would more willingly contribute, than the erection in this Capital City of a memorial to the unknown teacher. I commend the suggestion to you, and in justification of it recall the poem of Henry van Dyke:

"I sing the praise of the Unknown Teacher. Great generals win campaigns, but it is the Unknown Soldier who wins the war. Famous educators plan new systems of pedagogy, but it is the Unknown Teacher who delivers and guides the young. He lives in obscurity and contends with hardship. For him no trumpets blare, no chariots wait, no golden decorations are decreed. He keeps the watch along the borders of darkness and makes the attack on the trenches of ignorance and folly. Patient in his duty, he strives to conquer the evil powers which are enemies of youth. He awakens sleeping spirits. He quickens the indolent, encourages the eager, and steadies the unstable. He communicates his own joy in learning, and shares with boys and girls the best treasures of his mind. He lights many candles, which in later years will shine back to cheer him. This is his reward. Knowledge may be gained from books; but the love of knowledge is transmitted only by personal contact. No one has deserved better of the Republic than the Unknown Teacher. No one is more worthy to be enrolled in a democratic aristocracy, 'king of himself and servant of mankind.'"

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA—ADDRESS BY SENATOR O'MAHONEY

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, on March 17 the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] delivered a very able and interesting address before the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick of the City of New York, his subject being The United States of America, the Only Refuge of the Liberties of Mankind. I ask unanimous consent that this address may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, THE ONLY REFUGE OF THE LIBERTIES OF MANKIND

Speaking in the Irish Parliament at Dublin in October 1783, just a few months before the first of the long series of 152 dinners held by this society, Henry Grattan, the great Irish orator, referred to America as the "only hope of Ireland and the only refuge of the liberties of mankind." In this eloquent and apt phrase he epitomized the feelings of all men of Irish blood toward the United States. His words constitute a fitting theme for this occasion, and, responding to the gracious invitation of your officers, I can think of nothing more appropriate than to adopt his language and give you the toast, "The United States of America, the hope of Ireland and the only refuge of the liberties of mankind."

That the hopes of Ireland have not been disappointed in America every person at this board can testify. The life of every member of this society has been evidence of the fact that here the aspirations of Irishmen, crushed and frustrated in their homeland, have flourished like flowers in the friendly sunlight. I am not concerned tonight, however, with the personal achievements in America of any Irishmen or of the descendant of any Irishman. No contribution that men of our race have been able to make to the military, political, or economic history of America can ever be more than a partial recognition of what the free air of America has done for us.

Our emigrant fathers reached these shores, refugees from oppression, with nothing to sustain them but their racial heritage and a deep conviction that they were casting their lot with a Nation in which arbitrary power in whatever guise it might manifest itself would never be permitted to restrain them in the pursuit of happiness. Let us, therefore, think of the past only to the extent to which it may point the path for the future.

IRISH AND AMERICAN IDEALS THE SAME

There is an ancient Gaelic tradition that the Milesians in their wanderings from eastern Europe through Africa and Spain to Ireland were inspired by a prophecy that they would eventually reach a land, a beautiful and glorious land beneath the setting sun, in which happiness and liberty would be forever theirs. Irish bards have envisioned Erin as this isle of dreams, but sometimes I like to think that the prophecy pointed not so much to Ireland as to the United States. For here, of all the places in the world, there seems to be now the only opportunity for the achievement of the ideal which sustained our Gaelic ancestors through all their wanderings and all their struggles against entrenched power.

There is an affinity, a deep and abiding affinity, between Ireland and America, for their ultimate ideals are the same. We are accustomed to hear our people referred to as the "fighting Irish", sometimes as though they fought solely for the pleasure of the row. I will gladly acknowledge that the Irishman enjoys physical contest, but you will search the records of mortal combat in vain for any instance in which a true Irishman was found enlisted in any cause except the cause of freedom. All their long story is the story of a fight for liberty.

It is a circumstance in which every man of Irish blood may well take pride that in Irish Ireland there never was a slave. Oh, there were wars and conquests; men and clans were driven from authority and temporarily subjugated; but there never was a time, from the earliest dawn of Irish history to the present day, when the humblest son of the sod might not attain the greatest dignity in the land.

ECONOMIC FREEDOM IN ANCIENT IRELAND

Sometimes I think we give too much attention to the seven centuries of Irish resistance to English conquest and not enough to the social and economic standards that distinguished the Irish people long before the coming of the Norman, long before even the coming of St. Patrick. For it is in those ancient habits and customs, handed down to us from a time that lies behind the veil of history, that we find the explanation of the Irish love of liberty, the explanation of the Irishman's love for America.

No man of Gaelic ancestry should fail to keep always in mind the unique fact that of all the peoples of western Europe only the Irish have a history, handed down in their own tongue, from a time antedating the Roman conquest of Gaul. That history teaches us that among the Gaelic people the right of use for the living rather than the right of inheritance was the primary rule of property. It was innate antagonism to the feudal system more than anything else that made it impossible for Irishmen to submit to English rule. The ancient Irishmen lived in full recognition of the principle that there can be no political liberty without economic freedom, and every inhabitant from the lowliest to the highest was always economically free. More than that, he always took the fullest advantage of the political liberty which was the inevitable product of his economic freedom.

Land in those days was practically the sole source of livelihood, and no man could hold land in greater amount nor for a longer period than he could use it profitably. No man could hold in unproductiveness and idleness the means of livelihood which another member of the clan needed or could use, and so in ancient Ireland there never was such a thing as want in the midst of plenty. The Irish race instinctively believes that the earth and the fullness thereof belong to the people who can use it rather than to the people who can hold it.

LEADERSHIP COULD ONLY BE WON

There was another custom in this almost-forgotten past which tends to explain the Irish character, its impatience with restraint, its determination to stand upon merit, its refusal to accept subordination. Leadership in Ireland was never purchased. Leadership in Ireland was never imposed upon the people. Irish leadership could only be won and held by ability and worth.

We say sometimes that every Irishman boasts that he is descended from a king. The boast has this foundation, that the head of no Irish clan could bequeath his leadership to his son.

No superior right was ever accorded to the first-born in ancient Ireland. There were families, to be sure, who were called king-worthy, and from among whose members the vacancy was usually filled, but no Irish clan would ever accept a leader in whom it did not repose complete confidence and who was not true to the free traditions of his race. For centuries almost without number, among your ancestors and mine, the individual, whatever may have been his birth, could look forward to the highest honor if only he proved himself worthy and kept the faith of his people.

Perhaps in this circumstance is to be found the Irish love of politics—not politics in the mean and narrow sense of intrigue for personal advantage, but in the broader sense of public service. The Irishman is essentially a politician because through 2,500 years he has been trained to aspire to serve the general welfare, because through 25 centuries he has been accustomed to think in terms of public service, not in terms of the cheap race for the rewards of office. The Irish have seen that sort of politics used to crush them. It was, for example, that sort of sordid politics that the English used to suppress the Irish Parliament. Our people have seen it fail whenever it has been used, and they have seen the men who made themselves its instruments sink into dishonored graves. When all is said, when the whole story has been told, an Irishman would rather have fame and freedom than fortune.

THE CRISIS OF CIVILIZATION

Who can wonder then that the Irish heart beats in unison with the principles of Americanism? Who can doubt where Irish sympathy will repose in any conflict between the ideals of life, liberty, and happiness and the ambitions of those who would subordinate these objectives to economic or political privilege in any form? And who can look upon the world about him without realizing that this generation is facing what is probably the greatest crisis in the history of civilization?

In the Old World the earth trembles beneath the tread of imperial armies that know not the meaning of the word "liberty." In the New World, in this very land, founded by men who believed that it would be, indeed, the "refuge of the liberties of mankind", millions of our fellow citizens, deprived of any active control over the very means of their economic existence, find themselves dependent upon the Government for their very subsistence, and know not how without the Government they may preserve themselves.

In the past, when such conditions arose, there was always an outlet, there was always a new land in the West to which the unfortunate and the dispossessed could go to begin life anew. From before the dawn of history the migrations of the Aryan peoples in search of liberty and happiness have led them across deserts and mountains, across rivers and seas, across continents and oceans, from the eastern shores of the Mediterranean to the Pacific coast. Every step of this long journey has been trodden by the ancestors of the Irish people.

Here in the United States that long western trail has reached its end. There is no spot upon the face of the planet toward which we may now turn our faces, for all the earth is populated. Migration is at an end. Looking backward down the path along which the white race has come, we see only despotism and tyranny in the ascendant. Here, under the Stars and Stripes, we find, indeed, the last "refuge of the liberties of mankind." Here, indeed, under the Stars and Stripes, if human liberty is finally to triumph anywhere beneath the shining sun, it must be perpetuated.

THE CHALLENGE TO THE GAEL

To the achievement of this great goal the sons of St. Patrick must dedicate themselves. In this generation and in this land our age-old principles of political liberty and economic freedom must meet the final challenge of arbitrary power. It seems altogether appropriate, therefore, Mr. Toastmaster, that on this occasion when we are considering the contribution which American Irishmen may make to the United States of America, we should remember, first of all, what our people have been before us. No man is greater than his race. The race is greater than any man. We who live in the twentieth century represent not ourselves but all of the men and women down through the centuries who have shaped our nature.

The American citizen of Irish ancestry will do himself, his people, and their age-old principles most justice when he puts himself most in harmony with the historic past and lets his race find expression in him. When he does that he may be excelled in ability, he may be excelled in strength, he may be excelled in all the qualities of mind and body that achieve power and accumulate wealth, but he will never be excelled in liberality, in virtue, or in loyalty, he will never be excelled in the qualities of soul that build character, the qualities that alone make and preserve freedom.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 2603) to provide for the adjustment and settlement of certain claims arising out of the activities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

EDWIN R. HOLMES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Edwin R. Holmes, of Mississippi, to be United States circuit judge, fifth circuit?

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, the Committee on the Judiciary has unanimously reported in favor of the confirmation of the nomination of Judge Edwin R. Holmes to be United States circuit judge, fifth circuit. The nomination is now before the Senate; and, if there is no objection to its confirmation, I am ready that confirmation be had.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, for almost 14 months I have had the honor and distinction of representing the sovereign State of Mississippi as one of its ambassadors in this great deliberative body.

Before coming to the Senate in January 1935 I had heard and read much about the splendid rules of courtesy and ethics that obtain in this great body as between the Members making up the personnel of the Senate; and since I have been here I have striven religiously in every detail to observe those rules and regulations in order that I might be the recipient of the good will, the respect, and the confidence of the Members of this body.

So anxious have I been to observe every rule that has existed for almost a century that I have silently kept my seat out of deference to those whose seniority I respected. I was anxious to enjoy the good will and fellowship that come to those who are decorous, and those who are respectful, and those who are obedient to laws and regulations not written, but which, because of their age and observance, are almost the mandates of this distinguished assemblage. I regret exceedingly that on this occasion it becomes necessary to speak, and possibly to take a position, in opposition to one of those settled rules of deference in differing with my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Knowing that this matter would come before this distinguished body, on the 18th of March I prepared a letter which I mailed to all Senators. For fear some Member of the Senate failed to read the letter, I wish to impose upon the Senate long enough briefly to read it:

UNITED STATES SENATE,

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Before announcing the real purpose of this letter, I want to make a few personal observations for your consideration, even at the risk of being charged with transgression of some one of the long-established rules of senatorial ethics.

I have been informed that the older and more experienced Members of the Senate, sometimes irrespective of party lines, are quick to administer punishment to the transgressor of any one of these time-honored rules of conduct. These guardians and defenders of the common law of senatorial propriety, by virtue of their seniority, necessarily are gathered and grouped in frequent discussions for the appraisal and valuation of any newly admitted Members of the Senate. I feel that I have not escaped their scrutiny, their careful estimate of all the essential elements in the make-up of my character, and that such appraisal and valuation has been based upon the testimony of those from among their number thought to be best qualified to know.

From this circumstance it so happens that any new Member in this body is handicapped by the natural tendency to enter judgment upon any cause or measure he may champion, commensurate entirely upon the predetermined appraisal of the personal attributes of the newcomer himself and without due or proper regard to the merits of the cause or measure espoused.

A new Senator's advancement in the esteem and his placement in the confidence of the membership of this body are not infrequently fixed in the first year of his tenure of office by the opinions formed and adhered to by this closed and guarded circle of privileged seniority. Into this charmed circle the faintest whisper of suspicion about a new Member can go round and round and finally come out a roaring typhoon of defamation. Into this magic circle a single drop of poison about the life and character of a new Member may be dropped and it will spread and expand into an effervescent vapor, permeating every nook and cranny of the Senate Chambers until the minds of its constituted occupants become impregnated with this lethal gas.

Since I came to the Senate, a little over a year ago, as a time-tried and panic-tested Jeffersonian, Jacksonian, and Rooseveltian Democrat, hailing from a State that is 99 percent Democratic, and having previously heard and read of the regularly observed rules of senatorial ethics that should be adhered to by a freshman Senator if he desired enjoyment of those fine amenities abundantly abounding in this great law-making body, I have striven to observe religiously every such rule and have also preferred to keep the long-practiced custom of remaining deathly silent for the period of a whole year. I naturally indulge the hope that through my efforts to observe with rigid exactness the well-established precedents of this body with respect to the days of my apprenticeship I have earned justly the unreserved approval and commendations of each and every Member of this Senate so much so that in my opposition to the confirmation of Judge Holmes as a member of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, and what I shall have to say in support of that opposition will be received and weighed by the membership of this body solely upon the merits of my contention, the proper appraisal of all the testimony in the hearing, the reasonableness and convincing effect of the arguments I shall present, and the earnestness and truthfulness of the plea that I shall make.

If, perchance, there has been quietly noised around, within the inner circles to which I have just referred, whispering subtleties or softly pedaled rumors intended to prejudice the minds of distinguished gentlemen concerning the man Bilbo and thereby influence determinations upon the confirmation of Judge Holmes purely on the basis of the personal equation as applied to myself and my distinguished colleague, Senator HARRISON, who has been a Member of this body for 18 years, I most respectfully urge that you brush aside serious consideration of these extraneous matters and refuse to allow them to divert your minds from the real issue involved. A question of this character, involving the honor and integrity of the judiciary of our country, cannot be rightfully decided by a determination based upon an issue of personalities.

A studied effort has been made to leave the impression that there is nothing in my opposition to the nominee in this case except personal spite and personal hatred toward Judge Holmes, and that the real point at issue is that to defeat the confirmation of Judge Holmes would in some adverse way affect the political fortunes of some of the nominee's sponsors. Such considerations should not come within the scope of these discussions but since it has been freely and frequently referred to I wish to say that, insofar as I myself am concerned, I know that the great majority of the people of Mississippi are with me in this fight.

The serious charges against Judge Holmes that I have sought to substantiate and have been denied the opportunity to do, are lightly brushed aside with the statement that Judge Holmes must be a great judge because of a few recommendations filed by a few of the 1,400 lawyers in Mississippi. This nominee's perfidy, favoritism, partiality, ignorance, or prostitution of the duties of his office are such that you can't expect the lawyers who practice in his courts to come here and testify against him when they know him, when they know his temperament, and when they know that they will have to contend with him for life. I have had too much consideration for the members of the bar to ask them to jeopardize their law practice to come here and testify about things that they have told me in privacy. The fact that the bar association had an annual meeting since this confirmation has been before the Senate and Judge Holmes' friends dared not introduce a resolution of endorsement ought to be notice enough to any Senator that there is "something rotten in Denmark."

Now, coming to the real purpose of this message, I wish to say that I am addressing to you my last plea before I rise on the Senate floor next Thursday, March 19, at noon to oppose the confirmation of Judge Edwin R. Holmes, who has been nominated to succeed the late Judge Nathan P. Bryan as judge of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

I have heretofore sent you a copy of the printed hearings on his confirmation before the subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee and also a copy of my plea following said hearings.

I now desire to give you briefly a few facts with respect to the incompleteness of the committee hearing that I feel confident will awaken in you a special and renewed interest in this matter and will stimulate the urge upon your part to join with me in a common effort to have the question of Judge Holmes' confirmation re-committed to the Judiciary Committee for further hearings and determinations by the taking of additional testimony.

The Subcommittee of the Judiciary, namely, Senators BURKE, PITTMAN, and AUSTIN, investigating the qualifications of Judge Holmes, met on the following days, to wit, January 24 and 25, inclusive, February 22, and March 5 and 6, making 5 days with sessions of from 1 to 3 hours for each day, an average of 2 hours.

In my honest and unalloyed efforts as a United States Senator, conscious of what my duty was to the people of my State and the district to be served by Judge Holmes, if granted the promotion he seeks, to prove, beyond any question of doubt, the unfitness, incompetency, and lack of fairness and impartiality of this nominee as a member of the circuit court of appeals, I have been permitted to have brought before the investigating committee only four witnesses—

I want my colleagues to note this:

I have been permitted to have brought before the investigating committee only four witnesses, while Judge Holmes and his able voluntary counsel, Hon. Gerald FitzGerald, have brought into this hearing 23 witnesses and affiants, with the result that fully 75 percent of the testimony submitted in this hearing was by the witnesses and affiants in behalf of Judge Holmes, and this, too, notwithstanding the fact that I have repeatedly, both by letter and by word of mouth, earnestly urged and pleaded in vain to be given the opportunity to produce witnesses that would offer testimony in substantiation of certain charges I had made against Judge Holmes affecting his worthiness, competency, and qualifications, and which charges the committee thought serious enough to permit Judge Holmes and his witnesses to attempt to answer at meetings specially called for that purpose and concerning which charges they made palpably feeble and entirely unsatisfactory explanations.

If the things I charge against Judge Holmes were so serious that Judge Holmes and his court clerk were brought to Washington, a thousand miles, to try to explain them, then most certainly they were serious enough to have the Senate find out whether or not the charges I made were true. I take the position that it is not so much the province of three Senators to pass upon the materiality of these questions affecting the fitness and qualifications and worthiness of this man for promotion, but in all fairness to any Member of the Senate, whether it is Bilbo or not, he ought to be given opportunity to present the facts to the Senate and let Senators pass upon them.

The letter continues:

I have been compelled to make out my case against Judge Holmes largely from the testimony of his witnesses and affiants. I have been fortunate, however, in being able to take the testimony of his friends, as well as the judge himself, and confirm with decisive effect many of the charges I have brought against him, charges I have not been privileged to prove by witnesses of my own choosing.

I am prepared to show many acts of judicial misconduct in the nature of sentences imposed without authority of law, aside from the illegal sentence that he imposed upon me for an alleged contempt of his court, because of refusing to obey a subpoena that was issued contrary to law and therefore invalid and without potency. I am able to prove by the records of his court that he has sent hundreds of my constituents to the Federal penitentiary in open and manifest violation of the Federal statutes.

Mr. President, it is a rather serious charge that a judge on the Federal bench would do such a thing.

His record of judicial incompetency and abuse of the powers vested in him is unparalleled in the courts of this country, and in my judgment finds no equal except in the records made by Lord Chancellor Jeffreys in England and Lord Braxfield, his counterpart, "bloodthirsty wearers of the ermine", whose fieldish delight was in the imposition of extreme sentences and whose cruelty and political profligacy knew no bounds.

If these facts are permitted to be shown, as I am prepared to do, they will present a record of such judicial stupidity, of such crass ignorance of the law, or of such a willful and premeditated abuse of his powers as will astound and amaze the members of this great deliberative body, the Senate of the United States.

I cannot believe that any Senator wants to be a party to camouflaging such a record of judicial incompetency and unworthiness. A thorough and searching investigation of his official acts has convinced me beyond every reasonable doubt that my contention is correct with respect to the unfitness of this judge who, through a political accident and false representation to the President and the Attorney General of my concurrence in his nomination, is now unfortunately placed in line to be promoted to a higher status in the judiciary of this country.

I am enclosing herewith a letter in printed form that I addressed to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee on March 9, 1936, and I hope you will do me the kindness to read it.

I am asking in this, my final plea to you before appearing upon the floor of the Senate to oppose the confirmation of Judge Holmes, only to have the opportunity to prove the charges I have made, an opportunity thus far denied me, and which, I contend with all the earnestness of my soul, should, by every rule of right and reason, be fully and freely granted.

In making this earnest appeal to you for a recommitment of this matter I do not mean to imply, or to have you infer, that I have in any particular failed to produce already conclusive proof of the incompetency and unfitness of this judge to be advanced in the judiciary. I am seeking this opportunity only to make all the more certain the correctness of my contention, to make all the more manifest the justice, righteousness, and rightfulness of every charge I have submitted, to the end that each Member of the Senate, as well as the whole world, can stand up and say, "Here is a man who is unworthy and undeserving of promotion in the Federal judiciary."

Respectfully submitted.

THEO. G. BILBO,
United States Senator.

Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the letter which accompanied the communication I have just finished reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MARCH 9, 1936.

Senator HENRY ASHURST,

Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

DEAR SENATOR: While this letter is directed to the chairman of the committee, yet it is personal to each and every member of the committee, and for that reason I am mailing a copy to each member of the committee.

The honorable subcommittee, to whom has been delegated the duty of thoroughly investigating this important matter, has met on 5 separate days and examined nine witnesses, including the nominee, in defense of Judge Holmes, and has permitted me to bring only four witnesses in my attempt to show the partiality, favoritism (political and personal), inefficiency, indifference, indolence, recklessness, and general unfitness of the nominee, Judge Holmes.

As I have stated to this committee before in my former plea after filing many vital and serious charges against Judge Holmes and his record, the proof of which would unquestionably disqualify him for promotion, instead of being permitted to produce witnesses in possession of first-hand information and documentary records, Judge Holmes, the nominee, was permitted to come before the committee for the purpose of denying and vainly trying to justify his many acts of judicial misconduct.

The clerk of his court, Hon. B. L. Todd, Jr., whom I requested to be brought before the committee by the issuance of a subpoena duces tecum to bring certain records that would tend to establish the truth about Judge Holmes' judicial abuses and misconduct, has been brought before the committee from Jackson, Miss., by the issuance of a subpoena duces tecum to bring records before the committee which I had secured and filed before the committee more than 10 days ago, the same identical records—records certified to by this same clerk, Hon. B. L. Todd, Jr. Just why the subcommittee would want to bring this clerk of Judge Holmes' court a thousand miles to bring records already in possession of the committee is to my mind inexplicable. The only purpose that Mr. Todd served was to furnish cumulative evidence in behalf of Judge Holmes—to support Judge Holmes in his vain attempt to justify the innumerable illegal sentences that he had imposed upon citizens of Mississippi charged with violations in his court.

Since the last meeting of your committee, the subcommittee has had one other witness besides Mr. Todd before them in the person of Col. R. G. Wooten, and I direct the committee's attention especially to his testimony, as he was campaign manager for Judge Wilson and was present when Judge Holmes took a part in the senatorial race between Wilson and Stephens.

In this connection, I want to direct your attention also to the following affidavit which I received Sunday morning. This matter was referred to in Colonel Wooten's testimony:

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI,

County of Jones, Second District:

Personally appeared before me the undersigned authority in and for said district, county, and State, W. H. Hodge, who on being duly sworn on oath says that he was in Jackson, Miss., in the year 1923, a few days after the second primary, and was in the lobby of the post office at Jackson, Miss., in the afternoon along about 5 o'clock, when Judge Holmes and one or two other men were in the said lobby, just inside the door, and I heard the following conversation: One of the other men remarked, "We have beaten Bilbo again." Judge Holmes remarked, "I think I have put him out of Mississippi politics when I put him in jail." The second primary I refer to is the primary in 1923 in which Mr. H. L. Whitfield defeated Senator Bilbo for Governor of Mississippi in 1923.

W. H. HODGE.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this the 6th day of March 1936.

[SEAL]

CHAS. T. WALTERS, Chancery Clerk.
By CLARA FREEMAN, D. C.

Not one witness has been subpoenaed to give me an opportunity to establish the true facts concerning the many charges that I have made against Judge Holmes. I am one of the 96 Senators that make up the Senate personnel. I am an ambassador selected by the people of the sovereign State of Mississippi, an integral part of this Union. I am convinced beyond every shadow of a doubt that the charges that I have made against the nominee in this instance are true and can be thoroughly substantiated unless I am denied this opportunity.

If these charges are true, of course, everyone admits that they would render Judge Holmes unworthy of promotion, and simple justice and good government demand that the truth of these facts be revealed to every Member of the United States Senate. If they are untrue, neither time nor expense should be spared in exonerating the nominee. The Senate owes it to itself to see that this is done, not only in justice to themselves but in justice to the good name of the Federal judiciary.

On Friday afternoon, March 6, 1936, after the subcommittee had recessed without giving me any assurance that I would be permitted to have witnesses brought to substantiate the facts charged against Judge Holmes, since I had previously charged that Judge Holmes had sent hundreds of my constituents to the penitentiary upon indictments and facts that justified only a conviction and sentence as misdemeanors, I sent the following telegram to Hon. J. D. Stewart, clerk of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, Atlanta, Ga.:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 6, 1936.

CLERK OF THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,
Atlanta, Ga.:

Please wire me immediately the names of prisoners and the numbers of the cases of every petition filed in the court of which you are clerk for writs of habeas corpus, where prisoners were sent to the penitentiary from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi, with the exception of Meridian, since 1926, and also indicate which cases the court ordered the prisoners sent back to the southern district for a resentence and those in which the court at Atlanta discharged the prisoners. I want this record covering the period from 1918 to date. Please give me this information by 9 o'clock Monday morning. Thanks.

THEO. G. BILBO,
United States Senator.

Friday night, I received the following telegram in reply:

ATLANTA, GA., March 6, 1936.

"Hon. THEO. G. BILBO,

United States Senator:

"Re tel. even date. Records of this court disclose following-named and numbered cases returned to southern district of Mississippi for resentence: J. Will Culpepper, 337; Everett S. Depew, 448; H. T. Holland, 574; Joe Ainsworth, 637. Following discharged: Edgar Neyland, 405; Louis A. Redmond, 478; William Earl Pace, 535; Arthur Austin, 536; Collin Ladner, 539; Melvin J. Simmons, 541; Johnnie Wells, 599; Steve Taylor, 607; Leroy Talbert, 1,042. Pace case affirmed on appeal.

"J. D. STEWARD,
*Clerk, United States District Court,
Northern District of Georgia.*"

This information from the clerk of the district court at Atlanta, where Judge Holmes has sent hundreds of my constituents illegally, tends to thoroughly substantiate the truth of my charges against him for his reckless, indifferent, and illegal administration of justice in his court.

With another case, to which I have already directed your attention, this record shows that out of 14 sentences imposed, Judge Underwood, when given an opportunity through a writ of habeas corpus, properly and promptly returned four to Judge Holmes' court for the imposition of a legal sentence, and dismissed outright the other 10.

These cases do not take into consideration the 75 or 100 cases, or maybe 200, of poor prisoners without attorneys who pleaded guilty and threw themselves upon the mercy of the court—guilty of only misdemeanors—and were sent to the penitentiary and served their illegal sentences at hard labor never knowing of the great wrong committed against them or that they could escape the outrages of this judge by filing a writ of habeas corpus in the Atlanta district.

I cannot believe that any Senator would want to withhold the exposé of this miserable and outrageous misrule and tyranny practiced by a member of the judiciary upon uninformed poor and helpless citizens of this country.

One of the most serious, vital, and material matters that the Senate should know about the judicial misconduct of the nominee is the reckless, indifferent or, shall I say, fraudulent dissipation of the assets of the two banks at Gulfport involving the savings and fortunes of over 6,000 depositors. Mr. Lyons, of the Comptroller's office, was brought before the committee evidently for the purpose of trying to defend, justify, and exonerate Judge Holmes' conduct in judicially approving the many fraudulent transactions in the liquidation of the Gulfport banks. But Mr. Lyons, whether he intended it or not, condemns Judge Holmes and fastens upon him the positive and inescapable obligation that he owed to the depositors of the Gulfport banks.

The law makes it the duty of the judge to approve settlements of the receiver in such bank liquidations. Here are the exact words of Mr. Lyons:

"The ordinary routine in that connection is that the receiver, in case of a sale of assets, works up the best sale he can locate, presents all the facts to the Comptroller's office with his recommendation for or against the proposition, and on the strength of that information we approve or disapprove the sale, according to the merits as we see them and the information before us. That goes up to the court. In the case of real estate the court may direct a public hearing on the petition. If it is a matter of any consequence, such as a bank building, which always stands out like a sore thumb in a community where everybody is interested in it, that is generally done. If it is the sale of a vacant lot worth $50 or $100, the court would ordinarily accept the recommendation of the receiver that that was the best price he could obtain."

In the Gulfport liquidation case, Judge Holmes either failed or refused to do the very thing that Mr. Lyons said he should do. It is one of the "sore-thumb" cases in which I have charged Judge Holmes with reckless, willful, and, I might say, fraudulent acts at Gulfport. If I am permitted, I will be able to show that the Bank of Gulfport owned a corner lot, upon which was erected a beautiful brick and stone two-story bank and office building, thoroughly equipped and furnished. I am informed that, while the assessment of real estate in Mississippi represents from 25 to 50 percent of its value, this piece of property was assessed at $35,000. The property was well known to Judge Holmes personally. He has seen the property. He knows of its prominent location in the heart of the business section of Gulfport. He knows how handsomely it was equipped. Yet he approved the sale of all this property to a socially and politically prominent official at Gulfport for the small and ridiculous sum of $13,500. Why, the fixtures and furniture in this building were worth more than this. This settlement and sale were only in line with many other settlements approved by Judge Holmes—settlements where he knew that he was releasing from just and legal obligations to the depositors men and women of great wealth who were in position to pay every dollar that they owed these helpless and defenseless depositors.

In the light of Mr. Lyons' testimony, representing the Comptroller's office, why should any member of this committee want to keep from the Members of this Senate, who must pass upon this nominee's fitness, this sordid story of fraudulent liquidation to the great harm of those 6,000 outraged depositors of these banks.

It is true, in my honest judgment, that I have developed enough facts, using Judge Holmes' own witness, to cause each and every Senator to vote against the confirmation of Judge Holmes, yet I contend that the Senate is entitled to know the truth about all the judicial misconduct of this nominee.

I have shown conclusively that the subpoena for me to attend the Oxford Birkhead-Russell case was illegal; that the attachment was illegal and unlawful; that I did not plead guilty; that the sentence imposed by the court was prompted by political prejudice and was itself in violation of the law; and that the judge's political prejudice was further evidenced by the excessive bail.

This case alone should, in my mind, cause every Senator to vote against the promotion of this nominee, for I am sure that no Senator would vote to promote a judge who had illegally subpoenaed him, illegally attached him, and illegally sentenced him to jail. And if you would not so vote if you yourself were the victim of such illegal, unlawful, tyrannical, and irreparable treatment, then how could you justify your own conscience by voting to promote a judge who had thus treated one of your colleagues?

Why all this haste? On Thursday I was told that I must attend the hearing of the subcommittee to hear Mr. Todd at a time when I was serving on a committee and passing upon an important piece of legislation, because Mr. Todd is clerk of the court at Biloxi. His court is in session, and his testimony must be taken, so he could rush on back to his post. This in the face of the fact that Mr. Todd spent the next day in the city of Washington.

Why has the unusual request been made of me as a Member of the Senate that I not make any new charges against Judge Holmes? Am I to understand by this that if information should come into my possession in a hearing of this kind that the nominee was a dope fiend, habitual gambler, or drunkard, or guilty of any other misconduct that I would not be permitted to bring it to the attention of the committee or the Senate at any time? All agree that this Congress is not going to adjourn before the 1st of May. This is not a case that requires speedy action for the public good. The public interest is not suffering because there is and has been a vacancy on the court of appeals for the fifth circuit since August 8, 1935. I assure the committee that I am not trying to prevent the final settlement of this case before the adjournment of Congress. I have explained repeatedly that when I came to Washington in January it never crossed my mind that there would be any attempt to force the confirmation of this judge over my personal objection. I have only brought to the committee such facts about the nominee's record as in my judgment were vital and material and tend to show his absolute unfitness for this promotion.

I urge that every consideration, except the honor and integrity of the judiciary and cause of good government, fair, just, and righteous administration of our laws by our judiciary be laid aside and that all the facts pertinent to this investigation be given to every Member of the Senate before he or she shall be called upon to decide this important question.

Seventy-five percent of the record of this case has been devoted to the defense and exoneration of Judge Holmes. Now give me an opportunity to prove and establish, with competent testimony, the charges that I have alleged in good faith, and then we will be ready to vote, and not before.

Respectfully submitted.

THEO. G. BILBO,
United States Senator.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, in the performance of what I conceive to be my duty on this occasion, I feel that I am speaking in defense of the judiciary of this Republic, and I assure my colleagues that if I shall be afforded an opportunity to substantiate the charges I have made, and let the Members of this body, the judges in this matter, pass upon the questions raised, my contentions will be thoroughly established.

Just a few words now in reference to this particular appointment to fill the vacancy in the fifth circuit. It is my understanding, and it is my contention, that while six States and the Canal Zone are included in the fifth circuit, under all the rules of the game the appointment of a judge to fill the vacancy caused by the passing away of the late Judge Nathan P. Bryan belonged to the State of Mississippi. It is a Mississippi appointment, because since the establishment of the circuits, 25 or 30 years ago, all the other States within the fifth circuit have had the honor and pleasure of furnishing judges for the circuit court of appeals. Mississippi has never had such an opportunity, and it was generally conceded, when Judge Bryan passed away, that since Mississippi had throughout the years been denied the opportunity, the Senators from all the other States involved would stand aside and accord to Mississippi the right to place a man upon that bench.

So I consider this primarily a Mississippi appointment, in which I am interested.

While there is a sharp disagreement at this time concerning the appointment and the confirmation of the nomination submitted by the President to the Senate, I assure Senators that my distinguished colleague the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and I would have no trouble in agreeing upon someone among the many splendid lawyers and jurists of Mississippi to fill this vacancy.

I know it has been a rule of the Senate, honored for more than a hundred years, to refuse to confirm, out of courtesy and deference which have always been accorded to a Member of this body, with very few exceptions in its history, when a Senator from a State affected has personal objection to one whose nomination has been presented to the Senate for confirmation, if he is willing to stand on the floor of the Senate and say to the world that the nominee is personally obnoxious to him. That rule has been so stoutly adhered to that it has not been thought necessary to require a Senator to stand on the floor and give the reasons why the nominee is personally obnoxious to him. All he has had to do was to intimate or say to his colleagues, "This man is personally obnoxious to me", and out of deference the Senate would reject the nomination.

Oh, but someone may say, and it may be contended that this rule, which applies to objections to confirmation because a nominee is personally obnoxious, obtains only where the functions of the office of the nominee are to be carried on within the State, where they are, so to speak, "intrastate." There may be extreme cases where such a contention may be successfully made, but my investigation shows that the Senate has not often observed the rule that it must be confined to "intrastate" appointments.

While looking up the authorities the other day I found a case involving the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] back in 1912. The President sent to the Senate the nomination of a man from the State of Oregon, not from the Senator's home State, but from a sister State—a man appointed to the circuit court of appeals—a case similar to the present one, and the Senator from California objected to him because the man was personally obnoxious to him. He was personally obnoxious to the Senator from California, because the man who was then the nominee for judge had repudiated a preelection promise to vote for the Senator from California as the candidate for President of the United States in a national convention, and because the candidate for judge had failed to vote for the Senator from California in the National Republican Convention the Senator from California said:

This man is personally obnoxious to me, because he has repudiated instructions from the State of Oregon.

And the Senate was gracious enough and deferential enough to a Member of this body, the Senator from California, to refuse to confirm that nomination.

Have I any grounds upon which to predicate my statement that Judge Holmes is personally obnoxious to me? Judge Holmes, as many Senators know, is the judge who in 1922, on the 16th day of April, incarcerated me in the Oxford Federal jail, imposing upon me a fine of $100 and costs and a jail sentence of 30 days, which sentence was later modified to 10 days. The judge imposed that sentence without authority of law; he did it in open violation of the law, and he was so anxious to destroy the man BILBO, who had been Governor and was then ex-Governor of the State, and who was then a candidate for Governor, that in his mad desire to destroy his political enemy he even forgot to read the statutes of the United States and imposed both a jail sentence and a money fine in open and direct violation of the law of this country. I think I am safe in saying that this incompetent judge, this negligent, reckless judge, this political judge, never knew what the law was in imposing a penalty for contempt of his court until he sat yonder in the committee room and I called his attention to his violation of the statute. He had prepared a written statement for presentation to the committee and said in that written statement that he modified the sentence and corrected it, not because he found he had violated the law in imposing the sentence, but he did it because of the spirit in which I accepted the punishment imposed.

Mr. President, I have always tried to be a philosopher and take things as they come. I decide on a course, as to whether it is right, and I follow it blindly. I tried under the exigencies of the situation to make the best of it that I could. I was a candidate for Governor, and as a result of this incarceration I was defeated in that campaign.

So, Mr. President, my opposition to Judge Holmes is not due to a case of spite; it is not due to a case of hatred. But I am appealing to Senators to look at this case as a matter of justice, as a matter of righteousness, as a matter of fair play, as a matter of courtesy, as a matter of deference, showing to me the same deference that Senators would want to be shown them in similar circumstances. It is a fight to place upon the Federal judiciary in the appellate court of this country a man who is big enough, a man who is wise enough, a man who is careful enough so he would not send an ex-Governor and a candidate for Governor to the Federal jail without looking at the statute to see what kind of a sentence he could impose if he were justified in imposing any sentence.

The judge said he did not take time to read the statute. He admitted he had violated the law. Poor weakling, he did not know it until he arrived in Washington. If Senators will let me take him back to the committee for a couple of weeks I will teach him some more law.

If I had committed any wrong, if I had been guilty of violating the law, if I were conscious of having violated the law, I would take my hat off to Judge Holmes and be the last to complain. But I stand here today conscious of the fact that I did not violate any law, and I propose to prove to Senators, if they will be patient with me, that I did not violate any law, and that it was the judge's vindictiveness or his stupidity which led him to put me in jail; and it was not because I had violated a law. If he had been a proper kind of judge or if he had a judicial mind he would have known that I had not violated any law.

I say—and I do not mean to be too personal—that there is not a Senator in this Chamber, there is not a Senator whose name is upon the Senate roster, who, if he himself had been the victim, would be willing to say to the world and say to his people back home, "I would be willing to vote to promote in the judiciary a judge who had acted in a case like this for political reasons, a judge who, in violation of the law or by reason of lack of understanding of the law, had imposed an unlawful punishment." If Senators would not be willing to promote a man who had thus caused them an irreparable injury and placed a stigma and stain upon their names which time cannot remove, then would they not accord a favorable hearing to my plea? I am asking them only to apply the Golden Rule—"Do unto others as you would have others do unto you."

I see several ex-Governors in this body—to the number of about 14. Senators who have been Governors of their States enjoyed the distinction and honor which came to them from the fact that they had been selected from all of the people of their States to be the heads of Commonwealths of this Republic. They were proud of that honor. Their families were proud of that honor, of the great distinction which had been conferred upon them to be the Governors of their States. Suppose, my dear Governor, after you had enjoyed this distinction among your fellows and after your family had enjoyed that social position as the result of the honor that had been heaped upon you, and you had sought that position again, some judge had taken advantage of his power—not his right—some judge, in violation of the law, had cast you in jail and branded you as a jailbird for the rest of your life, would you be willing to vote to promote such a man in the judiciary of this great country of ours?

Oh, yes, I know; great men have gone to jail. Both profane and sacred history contain the names of great men who have gone to jail, but when John Bunyan, and the Apostle Paul, and Jefferson Davis, and Martin Luther, and other great men of history were sent to jail they were sent to jail because they were the exponents of a great cause affecting the welfare of millions. They were sent to jail, but their fame and glory was not dimmed, because they were sufferers for a great cause.

But in this case, where puny, petty political power is exercised in putting a man in jail for an alleged minor violation, it is an entirely different proposition. It was a different issue. Since this irreparable injury was done to me, to my name, and to my family, the antagonistic newspapers of the country, the magazines of the Nation who were opposed to me and opposed to the faction with which I am associated, never lost an opportunity to refer to the man BILBO as a jailbird. I remember during my campaign since that unpleasant experience, placards a yard long and a yard wide were scattered all over the State carrying the picture of a jailhouse with a large open window, with bars streaked across it, with the man BILBO's face behind the bars. That is the kind of propaganda which was used as a result of this judge's violation of the law and this judge's vindictiveness and desire to destroy a man who stood at the head of the political faction to which he was opposed.

Oh, yes; I have been exonerated by my home people. I was defeated in 1923 for Governor immediately after this incarceration, but 4 years afterward I was elected Governor of my State. I moved my family into the Governor's mansion. I had a young son. He entered the city schools of Jackson, the capital of my State. I shall never forget, time after time, as this boy, proud and ambitious, proud that he was the son of the Governor, walking home in the afternoon and entering the door of the mansion with slow and heavy steps, crying as though his heart would break because on the school grounds, on the slightest provocation, some boy would hurl at him the statement, "Your daddy is nothing but a jailbird."

Yes; I was elected to the United States Senate, and it has been whispered around, at least one Senator had the audacity to say that I sought the sentence in jail for political purposes. I resent such a suggestion. Any man who would seek to have this kind of a stigma placed on his name and his family's name—a stigma that cannot be erased—for the sake of any office is not worthy the name of man. I did not need a sentence in jail to win my spurs in the political campaigns of my native State, because before this judge had a chance to wreak his hatred on me I had been State senator, Lieutenant Governor, and Governor. What political success I have attained has not been because of this incident. I have won that success in spite of it, and while locally I have enjoyed the exoneration of my own people, yet, as I enter a broader and wider field of service for my country, I seek at the hands of the Senate a broader and wider exoneration. If this man who was the guilty party and who placed this stigma upon my name for life is elevated to the circuit bench while I am a Member of this body the Senate knows what effect it will have.

Judge Bryan died on the 8th day of August 1935. I was in Mississippi participating in the campaign for Governor at the time of his death. I returned to Washington the same week Judge Bryan passed away. I felt called upon to go back to my native State and engage in the campaign then being conducted for Governor, to take the stump in behalf of my friend, the present Governor of Mississippi, Governor White. When I reached Washington after the death of Judge Bryan I read in the newspapers that my distinguished colleague had already presented the name of Judge Holmes to Attorney General Cummings and to the President of the United States for appointment as Judge Bryan's successor. My colleague did that without conferring with me, when, as I have said, he knew it was conceded by all that this appointment belonged to Mississippi and that I, as his colleague, with the equal power, was entitled to recognition. In explanation of the fact that he took this step, important to the people of Mississippi, important to me, without even so much as speaking to me about it, without conferring with me about it, he said, "BILBO was in Mississippi; naturally if he had been in Washington I would have said something to him about it." With all due deference to my distinguished colleague, if he had wanted to consult me, and wanted to confer with me about this appointment that belonged to Mississippi, he could have reached me in 30 minutes over the telephone or by a telegram, because he knew where I was. The first time I had any intimation that the telegraphic and telephonic systems of the country were paralyzed was on the 8th and 9th of August 1935. There is only one of two conclusions to be reached; either my distinguished colleague knew of my opposition to Judge Holmes and wanted to get ahead of me before I had a chance to oppose his nomination, or he had no concern about my wishes in the matter and did not desire to confer with me about it. Of course, that is a matter within his own conscience. I do not know that the Senate is interested in that feature of it, but I feel that the Members of this body ought to know the facts in the case.

When I returned to Washington and was making preparations to return to Mississippi on the 16th day of August—please keep these dates in mind—on Friday afternoon I called my distinguished colleague out yonder on the porch on the north side of this Chamber. I then and there asked him, "What about the appointment of Judge Bryan's successor?" I knew that he had already recommended Judge Holmes. I said, "I want to be heard; I want to interpose my objections to the man who branded me as a jailbird and who put me in jail without authority of law." The senior Senator from Mississippi, my colleague, said, "Senator BILBO, you can go on to Mississippi, make your speeches in the campaign in the Governor's race. I have talked to Attorney General Cummings and he assures me, and I can assure you, that the question of Judge Bryan's successor will not be raised until after this session of Congress is closed. There will be nothing done about it." With that assurance, with that faith, I went on back to Mississippi, arriving there on Sunday morning. I commenced speaking on Monday night, having left Washington on Friday; I spoke six and seven times a day in that hotly contested Governor's race; and on the 23d day of August, while speaking in the city of Oxford—a rather strange coincidence—at 2 o'clock in the afternoon I received this telegram:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 23, 1935.

Senator THEODORE G. BILBO,
Oxford, Miss.:

Behalf committee Mississippi State bar request your endorsement Edwin R. Holmes appointment judgeship circuit court appeals succeeding Judge Bryan. Sorry could not see you here personally. Senator HARRISON assures me no action will be taken as to district judgeship until consultation with you after Holmes appointment is made.

W. CALVIN WELLS,
President, Mississippi State Bar.

As will be noted, the telegram evidently sought to leave the impression that the only thing I was concerned about was the man to succeed Judge Holmes in the event he was promoted to circuit judge, when they knew, or should have known, that what I was most concerned about was to prevent the promotion of this man who had heaped such an irreparable injury upon my name and upon my family. Upon the receipt of that telegram, while riding from Oxford to Tupelo at 60 miles an hour, I dictated this telegram, which I sent to President Franklin D. Roosevelt:

Please do not make any decision nor take any action in the matter of appointing Judge Edwin R. Holmes to succeed the late Judge Bryan on the United States Circuit Court of Appeals until I can be heard. This man put me in jail for political reasons. I greatly resent the fact that a committee of the Mississippi Bar Association has come to Washington to force this appointment when they know I am here at home fighting Huey Long in the interest of PAT HARRISON, President Roosevelt, and the Democratic Party. Senator HARRISON assured me this matter would be held over until my return.

Upon sending that telegram the next morning, I received this telegram from the President of the United States—the telegram was mentioned in the hearings before the committee, and I sought permission of the President to put it in this record, and he gladly gave it to me—

HON. THEODORE G. BILBO,
Tupelo, Miss.:

The nomination you refer to went to the Senate yesterday afternoon several hours before your telegram was received. This was done on assurance—

Now listen to this—

This was done on assurance that it had unanimous support, and I certainly understood this included you. I am deeply sorry for the misunderstanding.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

When I reached Corinth on August 23, at night I received this telegram from my colleague:

AUGUST 23, 1935.

HON. THEODORE G. BILBO,
Corinth, Miss.:

(Report delivery.)

Large delegation of prominent Mississippi lawyers representing State bar presented Judge Holmes to the Attorney General today for vacancy circuit court of appeals. You will recall the other day I told you that action would not be taken until after adjournment Congress.

My colleague remembered what he promised me.

Attorney General has just conferred with me and stated that he was sending Holmes' name this afternoon to President recommending his appointment on court of appeals. He states that this would not necessitate the filling of district judgeship immediately.

That was the same old idea that BILBO was concerned only with a district judge.

Holmes could withhold his resignation and taking oath until such time in the future as might be convenient. When nomination comes before Senate tomorrow the committee will desire to know your views. It would not do for nomination to come to Senate and fall of confirmation—

I should like to know why—so hope you can wire me immediately as well as Attorney General whether you approve or disapprove the confirmation. Highly important, immediate answer, as we expect to adjourn tomorrow.

PAT HARRISON.

On receipt of that telegram, the next morning I sent my colleague this telegram:

Senator PAT HARRISON,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Your telegram in reference to appointment and confirmation of Ed Holmes as United States circuit judge received tonight, too late to answer; the office closed. You assured me on Friday, the day I left Washington, coming home to make your fight against Huey Long—

Long had promised my colleague that he would come over to Mississippi and attend to him—

whether you so consider or not that this judgeship involving Ed Holmes would not be taken up until after Congress adjourned. I depended upon your assurance. I am depending on you to have the President to withhold or withdraw Ed Holmes' name from Senate and most certainly not permit his confirmation when you know I can't reach Washington before Congress adjourns. I heard today about 3 o'clock that the distinguished committee of the bar association had rushed on to Washington knowing that I had left to force the appointment and confirmation of this political weakling, so I would have no chance to enter a protest. I immediately wired General Cummings and sent you and President Roosevelt a copy of the telegram. I demand that I be given just and decent consideration. If the distinguished committee of the bar association was composed of good Roosevelt Democrats they would be here helping to defeat Long instead of slipping off to Washington trying to put a fast one over me. Ed Holmes and no one for him has ever mentioned his promotion to me. I did get a telegram from Hon. Calvin Wells this afternoon about 2 o'clock. This was sent after the trick had been pulled. I didn't even answer it. I am speaking five times a day for you, Roosevelt, and the party, and surely can't I be given fair treatment while I am trying to kill our greatest foe? Please read this telegram to President Roosevelt, General Cummings, and file a copy with the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I most positively object to the confirmation of Ed Holmes, and I don't mean maybe.

THEO. G. BILBO,
United States Senator.

I will say in all fairness to my distinguished colleague that he carried the telegram and presented it to the committee, and the committee did hold up consideration of the matter until the present session of Congress.

My colleague said in his telegram that "a large delegation of prominent Mississippians representing the State bar was in Washington." It would be really amusing to know just what is a large delegation in the estimation of my friend the Senator. I think I shall take the time to tell the Senate who made up the large delegation.

In the first place, there was my colleague's ex-law partner, Mr. Dedeaux; a Mr. Mize, a man who was seeking to fill the shoes of Judge Holmes in case of his promotion; Mr. Lee Guice, of Biloxi, the man who renounced the Democratic nomination of Roosevelt at Chicago and declared for the Governor of Maryland; Mr. Welbourne, of Meridian, Miss., another candidate for succession to Judge Holmes; a Mr. Miller, one of his friends; Calvin Wells, who has been dreaming all his life of being a Federal judge, the man who sent me the telegram; Mr. Garner Green, who represents the power utility companies in the State.

That is the large delegation to which my colleague referred. One would judge from the tenor of the telegram that half of the 1,400 lawyers in Mississippi were here; but that is the crowd, just those few.

I desire here to give public expression to my gratitude to the Judiciary Committee for postponing this matter from last session until the present session and giving me an opportunity to make a permanent record of my opposition to the promotion of this judge.

My friend and colleague the senior Senator from Mississippi, while testifying before the subcommittee, said that he had no recollection of the fact that I told him on the 16th of August that I wanted to oppose Judge Holmes. When I tell you that I did so tell him, and when he says that I did not, that becomes a question of veracity between two Senators. I do not know whether it is material to this issue or not, but I will say in passing that when Senators have known me as long as they have known the senior Senator from Mississippi, I shall be willing for them to say which one they will believe.

I should like to ask the question, if I was not seeking an opportunity to oppose the confirmation of Judge Holmes, why was I seeking out my colleague to get an agreement that this matter should not be brought up while I was in Mississippi making speeches? I was to be gone but a few days.

On the 16th day of August I left Washington. On the 16th day of August my colleague assured me that this matter would not be brought up before Congress adjourned. Yet on the 20th day of August, 4 days afterward, my distinguished colleague wrote this letter to the Attorney General, and he said he wrote a similar letter to the President:

DEAR HOMER:—

That is the Attorney General—

You will recall my conversation with you touching the appointment of Judge Edwin R. Holmes, United States district judge for the southern district of Mississippi, to succeed the late Judge Nathan P. Bryan, judge of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

I shall not read it all. It merely contains some fulsome expressions of praise.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would read it all.

Mr. BILBO. I shall accommodate the Senator in order to read the last paragraph. I read:

As I explained to you, Judge Holmes is an outstanding jurist, and, by reason of his training and experience, is eminently qualified to serve as judge of the circuit court of appeals. He was appointed 17 years ago as judge of the District Court of the United States for the entire State of Mississippi. The State was later divided into two districts, and since that time he has served as United States district judge for the southern district of Mississippi.

Letters of endorsement and petitions have come to me from the entire State testifying as to his unusual ability, his fairness as a judge, his high integrity, and his judicial temperament. I could file with you letters of endorsement from the entire Mississippi bar, but have felt that this was not necessary, due to the fact that you have his complete record there in your Department.

It strikes me that the Senator would have filed all those testimonials with the Attorney General when he was seeking this promotion.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, they were already on file there.

Mr. BILBO. In the Attorney General's office?

Mr. HARRISON. Judge Holmes had been endorsed previously, and innumerable endorsements were on file in the Attorney General's office already.

Mr. BILBO. To succeed Judge Bryan?

Mr. HARRISON. No; to succeed one of the former judges who had been on the circuit court of appeals and who died.

Mr. BILBO. When my colleague had a chance to have him appointed during a Republican administration, as I am informed, because the President insisted upon naming the district judge, the trade did not go through.

I am attaching hereto petition of the members of the bar of Meridian, Miss., addressed to you, which I am pleased to transmit. I know that this appointment would meet with the unanimous approval of the bar of the State, who feel that he is entitled to this recognition.

I have spoken to the President and have written him touching Judge Holmes' appointment, advising him of his splendid qualifications, and pointing out the further fact that Mississippi has never been represented on this bench since its creation.

Which is true.

I am extremely anxious to see that Judge Holmes receives this appointment, and I hope that he will be given every consideration.

Here is the part of the letter to which I desired to call the attention of the Senate:

The entire Mississippi delegation joins me in this recommendation of Judge Holmes.

Sincerely yours,

PAT HARRISON.

HON. HOMER S. CUMMINGS,
Attorney General.

Mind you, on the 16th day of August the distinguished senior Senator from Mississippi had assured me that the matter would not be taken up until after Congress adjourned, and I take it that he was making that assurance upon the basis of what the Attorney General had told him. He said so. Yet here I find the Senator on the 20th day of August, when he knew I was in Mississippi speaking five or six or seven times a day in the Governor's race, writing a letter to the Attorney General, to whom he had already presented the name of Judge Holmes and upon whom he had already urged his appointment, urging Judge Holmes' appointment, and assuring the Attorney General and assuring the President that—

The entire Mississippi delegation joins me in this recommendation of Judge Holmes.

That is what the President of the United States meant when he sent me the telegram that it had been represented to him that the appointment of Judge Holmes was unanimous, and he said, "I certainly thought that included you, and I deeply regret the misunderstanding."

Why? Because the President had before him the letter from my distinguished colleague in which he was pledging my endorsement of this man who had put me in jail. I have never been able to understand why the necessity of writing such a strong letter 4 days after I left Washington, when it was understood between the Attorney General and my distinguished colleague that the matter would not be brought up until after Congress adjourned. Why the haste? Why the hurry? This large delegation was in Washington about this time. I do not charge my distinguished colleague with being a party to the matter; but, knowing the political animosity to me politically of every member of the entire delegation that was here, taking advantage of my absence so that I would have no chance to protest, they were anxious to get it over and get through with it and get Judge Holmes confirmed before I had an opportunity to protest, because they knew of my opposition. Everybody in Mississippi, who knew anything about the history of the State, knew of my opposition.

Now, my distinguished colleague says that the Attorney General called him up and said he was going to send the name of Judge Holmes in to the White House. I wonder why the Attorney General changed his mind. The Attorney General had already assured my distinguished colleague that the matter would not come up until after Congress adjourned. Why did he change his mind? If my distinguished colleague had gone to the President of the United States and the Attorney General and said, "Here; I have assured my colleague that the appointment of a judge to fill Judge Bryan's place will not be taken up until after Congress adjourns, and he went away with my assurance that that would not happen", is there a Senator here who believes for one moment that the President or the Attorney General would have proceeded to make the appointment, anyway?

Presidents, Cabinet officers, and Government officers do not treat United States Senators in any such way, especially a Democratic President and a Democratic Attorney General dealing with a Democratic Senator—and I am 100 percent a Democrat.

Do you know what was before the Attorney General when he made this appointment to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Bryan? When the subcommittee started the hearing the Attorney General sent over the file. There it is. It is all marked. There was not anything in the file that came from the Attorney General's office except three little petitions, a resolution, and a letter from the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]; that is all.

After this appointment was made, the least my distinguished colleague could have done as a matter of respect and deference to his colleague was to have gone to the President and the Attorney General and to have said, "I wrote you a letter in which I said that my colleague joined in the endorsement of Judge Holmes. I find that I am very badly mistaken." The least he could have done was to have gone and asked them to correct the injustice done; but nothing was done.

Now I wish to discuss briefly for the benefit of the RECORD—I do not know that the Senate is especially interested—the relationship which obtained as between my distinguished colleague and myself before and after the name of Judge Holmes was sent to the Senate.

It is a well-known fact that in my campaign for the United States Senate in 1934 my distinguished colleague was openly opposed to my election. That was his right. The fact of the matter is that I insisted that he oppose me, because I thought it was good politics for him to be against me publicly in Mississippi. He announced to the world that he was opposed to BILBO and was supporting Senator Stephens. But after the election, after I came to the Senate in 1935, our personal relationship was always cordial. I never take my politics seriously. Life is too short to go around hating. Our relationship has been very pleasant, and I am indebted to my distinguished colleague for many courtesies that he has shown me since I have been here; and I have tried to be just as good as he was. I have been kind to him. I have tried to help him in many ways.

Because of this personal and social relationship, I never dreamed that he would have such utter disregard for my feelings that he would try to cram down my throat and persist in the nomination and confirmation of the man who had committed this great injury, this irreparable injury, against me and my family and my name—a stigma that cannot be removed; an odium that is bound to follow throughout the years. I thought that with the 1,400 lawyers in Mississippi, including many distinguished jurists, we could get together on possibly 25 or 50 men who would make better judges than Judge Holmes, as I am going to show the Senate in a minute. So that has been our relationship.

Now I wish the Senate to get a picture of the political situation in Mississippi.

You cannot understand the political motivation of Judge Holmes that led him to violate the law and put me in jail without a plea of guilty, unless you understand the true political picture in Mississippi.

Since 1910 the State of Mississippi has been cursed, I might say, or has been afflicted, with two very strong political factions. We do not have two parties in Mississippi; we have two factions. We are all Democrats. We have not enough Republicans in Mississippi to consume the Federal patronage when a Republican President is elected; and I may say that 75 percent of the Republicans we have in Mississippi are Republicans for revenue only. We are purely Democratic. If you will notice, in the recent survey Mississippi led the Nation in her Democracy. But we have these factions, and the lines are drawn between the factions just as tight and just as strong, and the opposition is just as bitter, as in Ohio, in Indiana, or any of the close States, as between Republicans and Democrats.

Beginning with 1910 I have been more or less involved in the political life of the State. In 1911 I made the race for Lieutenant Governor. In 1915 I was elected Governor of the State. In each instance I was elected in the first primary over a field of three and four and five. Judge Holmes belongs to the political faction which is the opposite of mine in Mississippi. He is the son-in-law of the late Senator John Sharp Williams, whom many of you knew, admired, and loved. Senator John Sharp Williams, Judge

Holmes' father-in-law, was the outstanding leader of the opposite political faction to the faction in Mississippi to which I belong; and in all the campaigns of the past, while Senator Williams was old and feeble, the last trump card that my opposition always played was to go over to the quiet shades of historic Benton, in Yazoo County, and drag out the old Senator and carry him off to Jackson or Vicksburg or some other center, and let him make a speech against BILBO and Bilboism in Mississippi. For anyone to contend that a son-in-law, who lived in his community, who was a member of his household, whose daily diet was anti-Bilbo food, would not be motivated or influenced or have the political prejudices characteristic of campaigns and factions in Mississippi, is not even good nonsense. He was the son-in-law of the leader of the opposition to BILBO in Mississippi.

Oh, but this quiet, easy, pleasant, congenial, affable Judge Holmes came before the committee and said, "Oh, pardon me; I never engage in politics. Oh, I have no political prejudices." He said, "I have 70 appointees, and I never tell these appointees how to vote."

No; he does not tell them how to vote. He finds out how they are going to vote before he appoints them, and if we look over his entire official family of 70 appointees, perchance we will not find half a dozen who ever voted for BILBO in their lives; and if any pro-Bilbo men were appointed, they got the jobs because Holmes had not been advised of their political affiliations in the State. No; he does not have to tell them; they vote all right.

He says that he is not influenced by politics, and that in his action in incarcerating me in jail he was not motivated by any political hatred or prejudice or purpose.

I subpoenaed Judge Webber Wilson and Colonel "Dick" Wooton, Wilson's campaign manager when he made the race for the United States Senate, to come before the committee and give testimony of the judge's further political activity in the politics of Mississippi as a Federal judge, and to my very great surprise and astonishment Judge Webber Wilson, after he had sat in my office a few days before and said to me, "Senator, I am as much interested in the defeat of Holmes as you are, because this man butted into my campaign for the United States Senate and was instrumental in bringing about my defeat, and I want to see you get him", when he was brought to testify about the participation of Judge Holmes in a famous political debate in Neshoba County, Miss., he completely somersaulted, reversed himself, and defended and justified Judge Holmes.

Possibly I should have known better, because of Wilson's record, but I could not imagine that a man would so quickly "turn turtle" in his statements as to walk into a United States Senator's office and make a statement of that kind, and then make a statement the very opposite of it.

Judge Wilson has a political history of his own. He was a Member of the House of Representatives, and some Senators, no doubt, knew him. He aspired to come to the Senate, and he dared to run against Senator Stephens. Senator Stephens defeated him, with the assistance of Judge Holmes. Then, he went back home and tried to get back his old seat in Congress and he was so thoroughly repudiated, as he had been repudiated in the senatorial race, that he ran a poor third, did not even get into the second primary. Then, in his desperation, he made his way to Washington, as many "lame ducks" do, as many public men who lose their jobs do. We come to Washington. Yes; I myself came.

Through the assistance and friendship of my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from Mississippi, Wilson was sent to the Virgin Islands, and he made such a miserable mess as a Federal judge there that it was not long before he was given a passport back to the United States. But, through the kindness of friends in Washington, he was put on the pardon board, and he has a meal ticket now.

To show that it was a premeditated job that he was trying to put up on me as my witness, when I began to edge into him and ask him something about Judge Holmes, whether he knew anything about his inside judicial record, with the supercilious and sardonic smile and Judas expression which characterize him, he said, "You must remember, Senator, I am your witness." He was a prevaricator, and he suddenly became the supporter of someone else.

The people of a State, the people of a community, will at last get a man's number. One cannot fool the public always. The public seems to have found out more about Wilson than I was willing to admit when he told me in my office a short time ago that he was interested in the defeat of Judge Holmes.

The committee in their report put stress upon the testimony of Judge Holmes and of Judge Wilson, and make no reference to the testimony of Colonel Wooton. Colonel Wooton was the campaign manager of Wilson, and he came on the stand and under oath testified that, as the campaign manager of Wilson, he attended this joint debate; that he saw on that occasion Judge Stephens and Judge Holmes in a hushed and whispered conversation before the joint debate was started; that Stephens pointed to a spot in the audience, and when Stephens called on Holmes to come to his rescue in the debate, he was seated at the place which Stephens had pointed out. Wooton told what took place, and he will also tell you that immediately after that debate Judge Wilson was standing behind the auditorium denouncing Judge Holmes in the bitterest terms because of his interference in that political campaign.

It was the consensus everywhere that Judge Holmes was "planted" in the audience. I do not know. That was only the charge made, possibly in the heat of the campaign, and I do not know whether or not it was true. I would be fair to the judge. At any rate, he had traveled a hundred miles and was in conference with Stephens, Wilson's opponent, just before the debate started, and he took a seat pointed out by Stephens, and he was there ready to testify. It was that testimony and that occasion which marked the beginning of Wilson's downfall.

I wish to be perfectly decorous; I want to be right in presenting the subject. Since the close of the hearings, while I was trying to have the subcommittee to go on with the hearing and to reopen the case, I received an affidavit from a very honorable, distinguished farmer down in Mississippi who was standing in the lobby of the courtroom a few days after I was defeated, after I had been put in jail in 1923, and overheard the conversation of Judge Holmes with other lawyers, in which he said, "I think I have put Bilbo out of business in politics forever." They were gloating over the fact that I had been defeated for Governor. So much for the political animosity of this judge.

I wish now to discuss Judge Holmes' part in the famous Russell-Birkhead case.

A notorious lawsuit was filed in Mississippi which furnished Judges Holmes the opportunity for which he had longed, to destroy the foe of the political faction headed by his father-in-law. A poor, unfortunate woman by the name of Birkhead sued the then Governor of Mississippi, Governor Russell, for $100,000 for alleged seduction, and it was this lawsuit that gave the judge the opportunity to destroy, as he thought, the man Bilbo.

At that time I was a friend of Governor Russell, and in his desperation in dealing with this enraged woman he called me to Jackson, the capital, 150 miles away—I lived at Poplarville—and asked me to intercede for him, to represent him, to try to get the case settled with the woman, and I did. I represented him as an attorney and succeeded in effecting a compromise with the woman—a compromise which prevented or kept the woman from suing him. I then went on back to my law office at Poplarville with Judge Shipman and pursued the even tenor of my way. But Governor Russell repudiated the settlement agreed upon, and then the woman sued him.

When the suit was filed in the United States Federal court at Oxford, Judge Holmes presiding, a subpoena was issued for me. I lived about 300 miles away from the seat of the court, and I desire to give the Senate in chronological order the events which happened leading up to my incarceration.

First. On November 30, 1922, an order issued from the court directing the clerk of the court to subpoena me as a witness in the Birkhead against Russell case to appear on December 5, 1922.

Second. On December 2, 1922, a subpoena issued by the clerk of the court on the order of the court was served on me at Poplarville, Miss. I received service of the subpoena.

Third. On December 5, 1922, a writ of attachment was issued to bring me into said court for the purpose of testifying.

Fourth. On December 11, 1922, the attachment was returned, and reported thereon, "Could not be found."

I will say here in explanation, the report got out that I was trying to evade attachment. I was going about my business. I had some business in the southern part of the State in a logging town. I stayed all night in the logging town; one night. I stayed in Gulfport and in Biloxi. I was on the highway attending to my legal business, and the marshal evidently did not want to find me. I was not in hiding. I did not go to Louisiana, as they tried to make it appear.

Fifth. Citation of contempt issued near the close of the December term of court for my appearance April 16, 1923.

Sixth. Writ of attachment issued under the citation of contempt January 30, 1923, calling for my appearance to answer on April 16, 1923.

Seventh. Writ of attachment executed at Hattiesburg, Miss., and I was released on a $5,000 bond.

Eighth. On April 16, 1923, a plea of guilty was entered on the records, and I was fined $100 and sentenced to 30 days in jail.

Ninth. On April 19, this sentence was modified to 10 days.

Those are chronologically the events which happened in this transaction, and not until there was a preliminary meeting of the subcommittee did I know that the charge was going to be made that I plead guilty.

Many Senators have heard it said, and have heard it whispered, "There is not anything in this case except Bilbo plead guilty, and the court could not do anything else but fine him." Senators have been fed on that kind of stuff. I am telling the Senate that I did not plead guilty, and that there was no plea of guilty entered. I am going to show in a minute that the chairman of the subcommittee does not know any more about what a plea of guilty is than does Judge Holmes himself. I propose to show the Senate in a consecutive, orderly way that I did not enter a plea of guilty; that the sentence imposed on me was unlawful and was motivated by political purposes; that the bond of $5,000 was certainly an excessive bond; and that the subpoena issued for my appearance, and also the attachment, were issued without authority of law.

Of course, if Senators could be led to believe that when I was charged with contempt of court I walked into court and entered a plea of guilty, then they would conclude that Judge Holmes was justified in fining me or incarcerating me. But certainly he would not be entitled to impose both the sentence and the fine on me, as he did because he did not know what the law was.

So I desire the Senate to take the facts in the case, the evidence in the case, and bear with me and let me show that I did not plead guilty, and that the committee had no right to reach the conclusion that I did plead guilty.

I will say, in all fairness to the chairman of the subcommittee, that he did not say that I plead guilty, but he said that I made statements which were tantamount to a plea of guilty. I trust the lawyers of the Senate will note that there is quite a difference between entering a plea of guilty and making a statement which somebody else might conclude was a confession of guilt or a plea of guilty. There is quite a difference between the two.

In the court on April 16, 1923, in the city of Oxford, a great crowd was present. Judge Holmes said it was a notorious case and there was a great deal of excitement about it. Here was an ex-Governor and a candidate for Governor in a heated campaign a little while before the election going to trial on a charge of contempt. There was plenty of excitement at that time and he said the courthouse was running over with folks.

Standing near Judge Holmes when everything was done and said on this occasion was Judge Lee Crum, another judge, a man who had been honored in the judiciary of Mississippi by being elected circuit judge of the State courts, a man who had served on the supreme court by various and sundry appointments, a man who had been appointed to codify the laws of the State; and Senators can readily reach the conclusion that if a man had been honored by being elected judge and had been on the supreme court and had been selected to codify the laws of the State he must have some idea about law and about pleadings. Listen to what Judge Crum said:

I was in court before it was opened. Senator Bilbo appeared before the bar of the court and stood up near Judge Holmes before I knew there were any contempt proceedings or anything that had anything to do with the Birkhead case. I did not know personally that he had been cited to appear and answer contempt proceedings. When Judge Holmes turned to the case and asked him what his plea was, asked ex-Governor Bilbo at that time did he plead guilty, or "Do you desire to enter a plea of guilty"—probably before he asked him that he asked him if he had counsel, and ex-Governor Bilbo stated that he had not. He asked him if he desired to enter a plea of guilty. Governor Bilbo said "No"; but he desired to make a statement of the facts to the court.

Now, so help me God, that is what happened. When the judge propounded the question "Are you ready?" I said, "Yes." "Have you a lawyer?" I said, "I have none." "Do you plead guilty?" "No. I want to make a statement."

I went to the bar and stood within 4 feet of the judge and made the statement which I call Senators' attention to in the record. On page 5 of the hearings it will be noticed that Judge Holmes entered a judgment against me, and Judge Crum was requested to read the first paragraph. Judge Crum read this:

United States v. Theodore G. Bilbo, no. 5844

Comes now the defendant in his own proper person and enters a plea of guilty in this case of contempt of court. It is therefore considered and adjudged by the court that the defendant, THEODORE G. BILBO, pay a fine of $100 and be confined in the Lafayette County (Miss.) jail for the period of 30 days from and after this day. Let mittimus issue accordingly, and let capias pro finem and execution issue for said fine.

In order to get the picture in Senators' minds let me recite again exactly what happened. Many Senators have been in court. When the case was called and I answered "present", the judge said, "Are you ready for trial?" I said, "Yes." "Have you an attorney?" I said, "No; I have none." "What is your plea, guilty or not guilty?" I said, "No; I am not guilty. I want to make a statement to the court."

I made a statement to the court. I explained to the court, and as I finished my apology and my explanation of my position and the fact that I had acted upon advice of competent attorneys—as soon as I had finished the last word of my statement the judge said, "I find you guilty. I fine you $100 and 30 days in jail, and to pay the costs. Mr. Marshal, take charge of the prisoner."

It was done as quickly as I am telling it to Senators now. The distinguished chairman of the subcommittee reached a conclusion, because I had said that I had received the subpoena. However, I said that upon advice of attorneys I was under no obligation to attend the court, and if I did attend, I would attend as a voluntary witness, when the judge took advantage of my explanation and my apology to say, "You are guilty." I had denied any guilt; I was not guilty of contempt, as I will show in a few moments by the law and by my own conduct.

Following the reading of this judgment by Judge Crum, he was asked if he thought it was entered correctly, according to the statement made by Senator Bilbo.

Here is what Judge Crum said about it.

Senator Bilbo did not plead guilty.

Mind you, here is a judge, a man whom you are not going to question, here is a man who was standing within 10 feet of Judge Holmes and of me during that time and heard all that was said:

Senator Bilbo did not plead guilty. I heard every word and saw everything that happened in the trial that day, while I had nothing to do or no connection whatever with the case and didn't know it was about to be called up. I was sitting within 10 feet of Judge Holmes and Senator Bilbo when what I saw and heard took place.

I read further from the same page. Crum was asked the question:

Mr. SMITH. Did Judge Holmes say to ex-Governor Bilbo, "I refuse to accept your plea of nolo contendere, and require you to plead either guilty or not guilty?"

Mr. CRUM. No; he did not. He did not. Mr. Bilbo stated probably more than once, "I am not guilty of contempt, unless it might possibly be a technical contempt."

On page 6 of the printed hearing Judge Crum was asked this question:

Mr. SMITH. It is your opinion, then, as a lawyer, that this statement of the court that ex-Governor Bilbo had entered a plea of guilty is in error?

Judge Crum replied unhesitatingly:

I know he did not plead guilty. A man does not have to be a lawyer to know that.

We have here the affidavits introduced of Mr. Gerald Fitzgerald, representing Judge Holmes in this case, and I want to call attention to a statement of Mr. Fitzgerald in the brief filed by him with the committee:

We have produced for this committee the testimony by affidavit of Hon. James Stone, Philip Stone, Attorney Foster, Attorney McNeill, Attorney Boyette, Attorney Cox, Deputy Marshal Cook, Deputy Clerk Vance, the statement of Judge Holmes, and the judgment of the court, that the plea of Senator Bilbo to the court was that of "guilty."

If you will take these affidavits and go through them, analyze them, scrutinize them, read them, and weigh them carefully, notwithstanding the fact that Honorable Fitzgerald told the committee that all of these affiants had sworn that Bilbo entered a plea of guilty, you will find only three affidavits where there is any suggestion that Bilbo entered a plea of guilty, and two of those were from officers of the court who had entered the order according to and under the direct instruction of Judge Holmes and would stultify themselves and incriminate themselves if they did not say that I plead guilty because the judge had ordered them to enter it; it was their entry under the instruction of the court. Though they tried to prove that Bilbo entered a plea of guilty, of all the affiants, only one lone witness, a "disinterested" party, says that I did. I wonder who he is. Let us see. His name is W. G. Boyett, of Jackson, Miss. W. G. Boyett was practicing law in Oxford at the time but he now lives in the city of Jackson, and is possibly the most despicable and the most despised and irresponsible citizen in the State capital of Mississippi today. I produced before the committee a statement from the superintendent of the insane asylum at Jackson, Miss., which is as follows:

Attorney W. G. Boyett committed by chancellor as drug addict first, August 5, 1929, released same day, returned nine fifteen twenty-nine, released ten seven twenty-nine, returned seven fourteen thirty, released ten eight thirty, returned twelve twenty nine thirty, released one four thirty-one, returned five or two thirty-one, released five ten thirty-one, returned six two thirty-one, released six thirty-one, returned eleven six thirty-one, released eleven fifteen thirty-one, returned one twenty thirty-two, released one twenty-five thirty-two, returned four nine thirty-two, released four fifteen thirty-two. Diagnosis alcoholic psychosis, chronic alcoholism.

Dr. J. M. ACKER, Jr.

Is that all? That is just one side of Judge Holmes' star witness to prove that Bilbo plead guilty. I now read another statement:

W. G. Boyett, attorney, in jail numerous times, the following in year 1933: January 5, charge, public drunkenness, fine, $6; February 6, charge and fine same; April 28, same charge, 15 days; May 17, same charge, $10; October 30, charge and fine same; December 4, charge and fine same; December 16, charge same, case dismissed; September 13, 1934, same charge, fined $10, case appealed, county court convicted, there appealed circuit court, case affirmed November 1935 term.

Procedendo now in hands of officers enforce fine and costs of appeals unexecuted. Boyett now in Hot Springs. Boyett committed to insane hospital as drug addict and habitual drunkard, chancery court, Hinds County, case no. 17,700, docket no. 16, August 20, 1929, order minute book 27, page 73.

JNO. G. BURKETT.

That is the type of witness, except his own court officials, that the distinguished judge brings here to prove that BILBO plead guilty at Oxford on the 16th day of April 1923.

Now, he says that the court room was crowded. They had the strong arm of the Government at their disposal; they had its strong treasure box at their disposal. All they had to do was to tell the subcommittee, "We want these witnesses brought here, and they would have been brought. There can be no question about that. Yes; they say the court room was crowded; and yet when called upon to prove that BILBO plead guilty the affidavit of W. G. Boyett was the only one they attempt to prove it by except by Judge Holmes and his little coterie of court officials, who had to swear according to the orders of the court. Why did they not bring some reputable people here to prove that BILBO plead guilty? They did not do so because they knew that I did not plead guilty. Well, if I did not plead guilty, then why does the record of the court show that I plead guilty? I have just told the Senate that the minute I got through making my explanation, the last word had hardly left my lips, when the judge said, "I find you guilty and fine you $100 and 30 days; take charge of the prisoner, Mr. Marshal." It was done that quick. I do not know what record was made by the court at Oxford.

Oh, but it may be asked, "Why did you not appeal?" I was a candidate for Governor, and by the time I would have gotten the appeal started I would have served out my time in jail; and I made the best of it while I was in jail.

Judge Holmes said before the committee:

The matter had attracted a great deal of public attention, and at the time the case was called the courtroom was crowded. There is no trouble about proving what Senator BILBO said and what I said and what took place there. There was only standing room in the courtroom.

Yet, with a great crowd, with standing room at a premium, they bring only one witness here, "disinterested", to show that BILBO entered a plea of guilty, which was the vital point in this case, and that witness has spent most of his time in the asylum and the rest of it in the county jail at Jackson.

I do not think any reasonable Senator or any Senator whose mind is open to conviction will doubt the statement when I say that I did not enter a plea of guilty and that whatever record was made was made upon the initiation of the judge, construing the law just as the reporter of the committee tried to construe it upon the statement that I had made an apology and an explanation.

Let us look at the actual plea that I did make. Let us analyze it; see what is in it. I do not want to be tedious, but I appreciate the importance of these underlying facts upon which this case hangs; and if the Senate will have patience with me, I think I will be able to establish to any Senator whose mind is open that this was a case where the judge willfully violated the law of this Nation in order to put a political enemy in jail and destroy him. I am predicating this fight upon the establishment of that one fact as well as other facts. The fact that he is personally obnoxious to me is predicated upon that point.

On page 3 of the printed hearings, let me again call attention to the testimony of Judge Crum:

MR. CRUM. Well, Senator BILBO said that the reason he did not appear in answer to the subpoena that had been served upon him was because at that time he understood, as had been the practice for years and years under the law, that a witness who lived over 100 miles from the court, and who was subpoenaed in a civil case, could not be required to attend unless he was paid 1 day's per diem or attendance and mileage or expenses, and he said to the court: "I did not know that that rule had been changed by the statute of Congress"—if it had been changed. For that reason he said he didn't think he was required to attend.

He further said that all he knew about the case was what knowledge he had gained as an attorney and as a privileged communication, and that he knew nothing he could testify would be competent in the case, for he knew nothing whatever about the merits of the case except from talking to one or the other of the parties.

In other words, Judge Crum testified that what knowledge I had with respect to the Birkhead-Russell case had been gained as an attorney and was, therefore, privileged, and that under the law I could not be compelled to attend court because of living 300 miles from the court.

On page 4 of Judge Crum's testimony the following questions and answers are recorded:

MR. SMITH. In other words, he meant he would have come as a voluntary witness?

MR. CRUM. Yes; that is what I understood.

MR. SMITH. But at the same time, he felt that under the law he could not be forced to come?

MR. CRUM. Yes. His defense was predicated on the idea that under those circumstances there could not be any contempt of the court.

Certainly not.

MR. SMITH. The reason he thought he was not forced to come was on account of the fact that he could not be made to attend where he lived more than 100 miles from the court?

MR. CRUM. And had not been paid 1 day's attendance and mileage or expenses.

In the affidavit of Colonel Stone, which was submitted in the hearings, I note on page 39 of the printed hearings these words:

Senator BILBO stated that he deliberately did not obey the process of the court, because he was under the impression that such process did not run out of the district.

That is true. That was the plea that General Stone referred to by counsel and which he stated in his affidavit I had made to the court.

Judge Holmes, on page 75 of the printed hearings, made this statement:

He (BILBO) said, "I received a subpoena, but it was in a case I did not want to have anything to do with. I took the subpoena to my former law partner, Judge Shipman, a man in whom I had confidence. I knew Judge Shipman and had confidence in him. He said, 'Judge Shipman told me the subpoena was void, and not wanting to have anything to do with the case, I did not come. With that explanation I submit the matter to the court.'"

Judge Holmes said there I did not plead guilty, but that I submitted the matter to the court. Some of the Senators present are lawyers. Some of them have law partners. I had a law partner, Judge Shipman, who was noted for his profundity and his legal learning. When I received this subpoena we went into our law library, and we had a good one. We ran down the authorities and read the statutes and both came to a conclusion. It was his advice that unless I wanted to go to this "pot and kettle" lawsuit at Oxford as a volunteer witness, I would not have to go.

Acting upon that advice, after having made a thorough search of the authorities and the statutes regulating such cases, certainly there was nothing else to say to the court except that I had received the subpoena and, not wanting to have anything to do with the affair, not wanting to appear as a voluntary witness, knowing that whatever I knew of the case was privileged, I certainly would not have been of any benefit to anybody in the case, because lawyers do not reveal the secrets of their clients on matters that come to them through their fiduciary relationship.

That was the statement made. That is what I did. That is all I did. I assured the court in making the statement that I had no desire, no purpose, no intention of being in contempt of the court. I tried to have as much respect for the courts of my country as anyone, being at that time an ex-Governor of the State and also a candidate for Governor, and I did not want to violate any law. I have tried to obey the law.

With all these explanations on that day, this sweet-smelling, congenial, affable judge, whom the committee has seen, was thrown into a bitter rage. He turned as white as the papers on my desk, his lips trembled like aspen leaves, and he said, "I find you guilty, and sentence you to 30 days in jail and $100 fine and costs. Marshal, take charge of the prisoner."

That is sufficient about the real plea that I presented. Those are the facts. That is the truth about it.

It will be noted on page 12 of the hearings that I made the following statement:

I think it pertinent here at this point to state that in order to show the anxiety of Judge Holmes to disgrace and destroy me politically, and forever have me denominated as a jailbird, he so far forgot his duties and his oath of office that he imposed upon me recklessly a sentence that he was wholly unauthorized under the law to impose and with such swiftness and so summarily that he evidently had not even looked up the statute which vested in him authority to make sentences in cases of contempt.

In this connection, your attention is invited to the fact that title 28 of the United States Code, section 385, enacted on March 3, 1911, which was then in full force and effect, specifically provides that a judge of a Federal court in case of a contempt for failure to comply with a subpoena or process of the court may punish by "fine or imprisonment", but not both. The judge cannot plead ignorance of the law, because he had been on the bench 5 years at that time. Here he was imposing a sentence in direct violation of the statute.

I know judges sometimes make mistakes. Even when they get on the Supreme Bench it has been charged that they make mistakes. Evidently some of them make mistakes when they decide cases 4 to 5 or 3 to 6. But here was a man who had been on the district bench of the Federal court in my State for 5 years and who did not even know the law regulating the sentence to be imposed in a contempt proceeding. He said it was a notorious case. The court room was crowded, standing room was at a premium, and the whole State was interested because an ex-Governor, a candidate for Governor, was at the bar.

Does it not impress you, Senators, that if a man was judicially fitted for a position of this kind he would at least have taken time to find out just what kind of a sentence he could inflict? Oh, no! He was so eager, so anxious to destroy the man who had led the faction against his father-in-law—and I had been in many of his battles—that he did not even stop to find out what the law was, but said, "I give you 30 days in jail and fine you $100 and costs. Mr. Marshal, yank him off to jail." That is what happened. That judge did not know what the law was until he reached Washington and appeared before the Senate committee and his attention was called to it.

Let me read just what Judge Holmes had to say about this unlawful sentence which he imposed on me. I refer to page 76 of the printed hearings, where the judge said, "This is a copy of the judgment." Then follows this entry:

Minute book 19, page 82, Monday, April 16, 1933. Comes now the defendant in his own proper person and enters a plea of guilty in this case to contempt of court.

Of course, when he found me guilty he said to the clerk, "Go ahead and write it up and put it on the docket." Then the judgment in his statement before the committee adds these words:

Now, Senator BILBO's plea of guilty was unexpected. I sentenced him immediately.

He said he did it immediately, it will be noticed—

I did not look at the statute. Most Federal statutes provide a fine and imprisonment. If I had looked at this statute I would have seen that it provided for a fine or imprisonment, but I did not. I frequently sentence without looking at the statute, when I know the sentence I am going to give is small and well within the power of the court. So I entered that sentence of a fine of $100 and 30 days in jail. Senator BILBO made no objection to the sentence, nor was any appeal requested, nor any statement made, by him or any other person, that the sentence was unjust, unfair, or improper. Later, by reason of the clemency which I showed the Governor, the error was automatically corrected.

He did not correct it because he had gotten smart and because he had learned what the law was, but he said that it was corrected automatically. I will tell the Senate why he corrected it. He corrected it because there was such reaction politically throughout the State until his political advisers came to him, as Judge Crum's testimony will show, including Judge Stone, the Nestor of the Mississippi bar, and said, "If you do not modify the sentence against the candidate, ex-Governor BILBO, the reaction in the State will be such that he will defeat our man for Governor." It must be remembered that Judge Crum's group was fighting me politically. He was supporting Judge Whitfield.

When this unreasonable and unheard-of and illegal sentence was imposed on me he got this word from Judge Stone, who was a close friend of Holmes, and who was also supporting Whitfield against me. He was told, "Go and see this judge and make him change this sentence, because if something is not done the reaction of the people of Mississippi will be such until he will be elected Governor in spite of all we can do."

Judge Stone testified under oath that he went and persuaded the judge to change that sentence. He said the judge came back later and said, "I did change it according to your request and as you suggested." He based it on political reasons then, that with the 30 days in jail branding me as a jailbird for all time to come, it would have the effect of destroying their faction, and when he was told by his political advisers that he had overdone the thing, then for political reasons he modified the sentence and by that political modification succeeded in correcting and making the sentence legal so far as a legal sentence could be imposed in a contempt case, but not in this case.

That is what really happened.

I did not expect Judge Holmes—and I am sure Senators did not—to come to Washington and say that he was actuated by any political motives in putting me in jail—certainly not. The only way you can determine whether or not he was actuated by political motives is to determine his environment and his attitude and his activities. If he is not controlled politically, why is it that his entire political family belongs to one political faction? Why is it that he went out and traveled a hundred miles to participate in the political debates that shaped the destiny of two human lives and affected the whole State in determining who should be the United States Senator from Mississippi at that time? Why is it that he does not appoint anybody except those who belong to his political faction if he is not a politician?

I repeat that Judge Holmes has spent his life in a political atmosphere, motivated, controlled, influenced by politics.

Now, I desire to discuss with you the law. I wish to try to show you, if you will be patient, why this subpoena which was issued was illegal; and I believe I can do it.

I believe I can establish, first, that the law at that time governing the issuance of the subpoena which was served on me on December 22, section 876 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, did not apply to a witness—as was the case with me—who lived more than 100 miles from the place of holding court.

Second, I shall further undertake to show that section 876, as amended 40 days prior to the date the subpoena was issued for my appearance in Oxford in the Birkhead case, was not applicable to litigation between private citizens, but only to cases in which the Government was a party; namely, the so-called war-fraud cases.

Third, I shall endeavor to prove to you that in the event section 876 as amended could be made by any possible interpretation to apply in my case, the issuance of the subpoena for my appearance in the case was not a valid and legal issuance, and failed to conform to the manifest requirements of the aforementioned statute.

Now, let us see what the law was at that time. I have it here. Let me read it from the book itself, so that there will not be any question about it.

The law of the land for 100 years in the subpoenaing of witnesses in Federal courts is section 876, page 4848, of the United States Revised Statutes:

SEC. 876. Subpenas for witnesses who are required to attend a court of the United States, in any district, may run into any other district: Provided, That in civil causes—the witnesses living out of the district in which the court is held do not live at a greater distance than 100 miles from the place of holding the same.

Not criminal—

Oxford was the seat of the court. Poplarville, BILBO's home, was 300 miles away. The subpoena was issued under this statute, section 876 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. That was the statute under which the subpoena was issued.

I desire to read you a letter written by Judge Campbell, the attorney who represented the plaintiff in this case:

Yazoo City, Miss., November 17, 1922—

Here is where they are getting ready to subpoena BILBO—
Clerk of the United States district court, Oxford, Miss.—

It is not addressed to the judge, but it is addressed to the clerk—

DEAR SIR: We desire to have some witnesses summoned in the case of Birkhead v. Russell for the plaintiff. Section 876 of United States Revised Statutes requires that you issue the subpoena and direct same to the United States marshal of the southern district, where witnesses reside in the southern district. Please issue subpoena directed to marshal of southern district for the following witnesses: Hampton Cox, Ernest Farish, William McGraw, Kirk Whitehead, and William Riley, all residents of Yazoo County. Please send the subpoena to us, and we will have the marshal serve same.

Yours very truly,

CAMPBELL & CAMPBELL.

There is the actual letter as taken from the records in the case.

When they start to subpoena the witnesses in the Birkhead case, a civil suit between this woman and the Governor of the State, the leading attorney, the man who lived in Judge Holmes' town, right next to the chambers of his court, writes the clerk a letter and gives him the names of the witnesses to be subpoenaed, and specifies that they shall be subpoenaed under section 876 of the Revised Statutes of the United States Government, which provided that if you lived more than 100 miles away from the seat of the court you did not have to go, and if you went more than that distance in a civil case you went as a voluntary witness.

All right. There is not found in all the records of this case—and I had the entire record brought here from Oxford, Miss., to establish that fact—there is not found anywhere a letter from any attorney subpoenaing BILBO to appear as a witness in this case; but there is this:

TO THE CLERK OF THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT OF THE WESTERN DIVISION OF THE NORTHERN DISTRICT AT OXFORD, MISS.

You are hereby directed to issue subpoenas for Mrs. C. F. Skillman and Eli Rainer, residents of Memphis, Tenn.; and Theodore G. Bilbo, who resides at Poplarville, Miss.; and Will Perry, Jr., a resident of Meridian, Miss.; and Dr. Henry Boswell, who resides at Magee, Miss.; and E. E. Frantz, of Jackson, Miss., witnesses for the plaintiff in the above-styled case.

Witness my hand this the 20th day of November 1922.

E. R. HOLMES.

Judge of the United States District Court for the State of Mississippi.

This order of Judge Holmes, issued in chambers at Yazoo City, directing the clerk at Oxford to subpoena these witnesses, was also made under section 876 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. It could not have been made under any other statute. If it was made under section 876, then BILBO did not have to attend the court at Oxford, because I lived 300 miles away; and with all the false representations and all the fake appearances here and misrepresentations by the judge and others in this case, trying to leave the impression that they were operating under another statute, it is a fraud upon the committee and a fraud upon the Senate, because we have here the records which show that they were operating under section 876.

On September 19, 1922—some of you, my colleagues, were then in the Senate—a law was approved which you had passed. If you remember, Congress had appropriated large sums of money to prosecute these dollar-a-year "patriots" who had been making money out of the Government during the World War. Harry M. Daugherty was then the Attorney General. It seems nothing had been done; and Daugherty, as an alibi possibly—I do not know—writes a letter to the Judiciary Committees of the Senate and the House—I have a copy of it here—in which he says that if Congress will only amend section 876 of the Revised Statutes and make it possible for the Government to bring witnesses across the country where they live more than 100 miles from the court, so that he can bring defendants also wherever the Government is a party to the litigation, he will be in a position successfully to prosecute these frauds. Upon the representation of the then Attorney General, Mr. Daugherty, Congress passed and the President approved on September 19, 1922, just 40 days before this Birkhead case was called in the city of Oxford, a bill amending section 876 of the Revised Statutes by putting on it this proviso:

Provided, That in civil cases no writ of subpoena shall issue for witnesses living out of the district in which the court is held at a greater distance than 100 miles from the place of holding the same without the permission of the court being first had upon proper application and cause shown.

Let me read you some more of this. Here is the red-letter sign to any man who has a judicial mind, or any man who is fit to be a judge:

This amendment shall be effective for a period of 3 years after the date of the passage of this act, after which, section 876, as it exists in the present law, shall be and remain in full force and effect.

I have here the discussions on this bill in Congress, in the House and in the Senate. It never was the intention of Congress to change the law that had obtained for a hundred years that a man could not be compelled to attend as a witness in a civil case before a Federal court if he lived over 100 miles from the seat of the court. He could not be made to go to court by your process, by your subpoena, under this amendment. It never was the intention to touch civil matters. It was only to give the Government, where the Government was a party, an opportunity to uncover these war frauds, and to run down these scoundrels who had been robbing the Government as a result of conditions immediately following the World War. That was the purpose of the statute; and to any man who had a judicial mind, when he read the statute and saw that the amended law was to last only for 3 years, that was the red-letter sign of warning of danger that the amended law was not intended for the ordinary affairs and the ordinary litigation of this country, but it had a specific purpose to serve. Otherwise it would not have been provided that it should be automatically repealed in 3 years.

Judge Holmes says that he knew about this statute 40 days after it was passed. He is such a close student that he knew about it, and he was attempting to bring me to court under this war-fraud statute. That is his contention, and I am telling the Senate upon my word of honor that I honestly believe, and I think the physical facts and that the record will show, that Judge Holmes knew nothing about this new statute until the case was called in Oxford and until they began to seek ways and means to bring BILBO to Oxford under an attachment. That is when he found it out.

Mr. President, this is the strange thing about it, this is the queer thing about the case: This poor, little, miserable misfit, this human wreck, this prevaricator, whom you can get to say anything for $5, the only witness whom Holmes brings here to prove that I plead guilty, this poor, little, unfortunate human being was the man at that time who told the lawyers in the case about this recent act of Congress 40 days before the court met in Oxford, when they were devising ways and means to bring BILBO to the Oxford court. They shot out of the consultation room like bats out of hell trying to find that new statute. Then it was they conceived the idea that they could attach me and bring me to court and cite me for contempt, and not until then. All the proceedings in the case show conclusively that they were proceeding under section 876 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. President, I have searched the records, I have searched the lawbooks, and I have failed to find anywhere a case on record like the one I am now discussing. There has been only one judge, so far as I can find from a search of the lawbooks of the country, who tried to use the amended statute of 1922 to bring witnesses to his court who resided more than a hundred miles away, and that case arose in the State of Ohio. It was the case of Benedict against Seiberling, reported in 17 Federal Reporter, 2d series, page 845. Let me read what the court said. The case was tried in Ohio, and the court stated:

The motion seeks the attendance upon this court as witnesses, in the hearing of this special issue, of seven persons, including the plaintiff, who resided more than 600 miles from the city of Toledo. While the course under the code (sec. 1239, Barnes, amendment of 1922) the court could put these several witnesses to this great personal inconvenience, yet it is manifest that neither in its own interest nor with any decent regard for their rights or those of the plaintiff and her counsel should it do so unless it appears with reasonable clarity that they may be brought to testify to facts material to the alleged issue; and that should appear upon the moving papers.

Granting that they were trying to proceed under this recently found statute, which had been born only 40 days before, and they did not find that out until court met in

Oxford—granting that they were trying to proceed under that, in the only case upon record where any light was thrown upon this new kind of litigation the court refused to issue an attachment, and the court said:

Before you can take advantage of it you must show upon the moving papers, you must have a written motion, you must set up the facts, you must allege the materiality of the witness and what you expect to prove by him before the court will be authorized to exercise this power under this special statute.

The court so held.

There is not a line or a scratch in the whole file which has been brought from the court in Oxford to show that one thing was written in the whole record indicating that BILBO was a material witness when they subpoenaed him, or even when they attached him. To those who have any conception or any regard for legal procedure in this country it seems more like a moot court performance than an action in a court of law.

The lawyers of the Senate know, they understand, that an attachment cannot issue, unless it is shown upon the papers in the record, upon the written petition, upon the written motion, that they were complying with section 876 as revised in 1922 by an act of Congress, if they were proceeding under the old statute, which has been the law for a hundred years, and that is what they were doing. If they were doing that, then any subpoena they issued for my appearance at the Oxford court was absolutely and unquestionably illegal.

While this matter was under discussion before the subcommittee I telegraphed one of the attorneys in the case down in Oxford to see just when they found out about this new law, and I have here a telegram from Judge Falker, of Oxford, Miss., as follows:

Compulsory process for witnesses not discussed by Birkhead-Russell counsel in my presence. I did not know of the amendment at that time and feel sure that none of the attorneys in the case were advised of the change.

I am telling the Senate that they did not know of it. The judge on the bench did not know about it. He had not found it out.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Did the Senator reside in the same district with the court which issued the subpoena?

Mr. BILBO. Did I reside in the same district?

Mr. MINTON. In the same district.

Mr. BILBO. At that time Mississippi was all one district. We had only one judge for the two districts of the State. We now have two districts, with a judge in each district.

Mr. MINTON. At that time the State of Mississippi comprised one district?

Mr. BILBO. One division with two districts, southern and northern. I was 300 miles outside of the district in which the court was held.

I will now ask Senators to note this testimony from page 83 of the hearings:

Senator BILBO. Without application or cause shown, you issued that order to the clerk?

Judge HOLMES. I think it was a written petition, but I do not find it in the files.

He thought so, but he said he did not find it in the files.

Senator BILBO. It is not in the files.

Judge HOLMES. It is proper for me to act on a written petition. That is my recollection. Mr. Campbell was an experienced lawyer.

He admits that it would have been proper, but there was not any petition. He was trying to leave the impression, trying to get it over to the committee, that there was one.

I am stating that his whole presentation of the facts in the case is a fraud on the committee, and by the time I get through with the acts of the judge, the Senate will understand thoroughly why it is possible for him to do a thing like this.

It does not require any argument to convince any sane mind that if the subpoena was illegal and unlawful, without any potency, without any force, then any attachment issued upon that subpoena would be just as illegal and just as lacking in potency and effect. Judge Holmes remembers very distinctly how important my testimony was when he was faced by an application made by the attorneys for the plaintiff for a writ of attachment for me. He recites in the hearing every detail of the things which transpired immediately prior to issuing the writ of attachment.

Hon. T. R. Foster, one of the attorneys for the plaintiff, made an affidavit a portion of which I wish to read. He was a lawyer in the case for the plaintiff. He is not my friend; he has always been my bitter enemy. He said in his affidavit:

When the case was called for trial at Oxford, he [BILBO] did not appear, and the attorneys for the plaintiff asked for an attachment. Judge Holmes hesitated about issuing the attachment and questioned the attorneys as to whether the court had the power to issue it.

Mr. President, do you think a man has judicial ability sufficient even to be a decent justice of the peace if he has to stop and hesitate and ask the lawyers to find out whether he has the right to issue an attachment upon a subpoena which had not been obeyed, when he knew that if the subpoena was lawful and right, under the statutes and laws of the country, if I had failed to respond to the subpoena, certainly the attachment would be legal; and if the subpoena was not legal, the attachment would be illegal? As his attorney says, Judge Holmes hesitated, and Judge Holmes wanted some advice.

He was in doubt. He was in the clouds. He could not tell whether he was right or whether he was wrong, and he sought information about whether he had a right to attach me. Up to this time Judge Holmes had not found out about this new act of Congress; but he knew that, under section 876 of the Revised Statutes, he had no power on earth to attach me to come to the court, because the subpoena was not valid, and had no legal effect.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Is it the contention of the Senator that, even though the Senator were in the district of the court, even though he resided 100 miles from the court, the subpoena would not reach him?

Mr. BILBO. I was not in the district of the court. I was in another district.

Mr. MINTON. I thought the Senator said Mississippi was one district.

Mr. BILBO. Mississippi is divided into two divisions, the northern division and the southern division, as I understand.

Mr. MINTON. Is it one district with two divisions?

Mr. BILBO. It is one district with two divisions. I lived in the southern division, and Judge Holmes was holding his court in the northern division, 300 miles away; and in order to subpoena me he had to come across into the other division.

Mr. MINTON. Then, the Senator did not reside in the division in which Judge Holmes was holding court?

Mr. BILBO. No; I did not.

I was reading the affidavit of Mr. Foster. I continue reading:

Time was allowed for the attorney to look up the authorities.

Oh, yes; he adjourned his court. He suspended operations and sent the lawyers off to find out what the law was; and it was while they were on this quest that they discovered that on September 19, 1922, Congress had passed a law for the purpose of uncovering the war frauds of the country.

They went around to General Stone's office, where there is a good library, looked up the law, and convinced the court that he had the right to issue an attachment for Senator BILBO. * * * Before granting the attachment the following facts were presented to the court and upon which he acted showing the necessity for Senator BILBO's presence: Letters from Senator BILBO to Miss Birkhead, that the allegations made by her against Governor Russell were true, within the knowledge of Senator BILBO; Miss Birkhead's statements that Senator BILBO had acted as a "go-between" for Governor Russell and herself.

In ordinary parlance we do not call lawyers "go-betweens." We say attorneys representing clients. I continue reading:

And had for Governor Russell paid her large amounts of "hush" money; Miss Birkhead's statement that Senator BILBO had promised to attend the trial and give testimony; the statement of Miss Birkhead's attorney that Senator Bilbo, through his personal attorney, Hon. Pat Henry, of Vicksburg, Miss., had assured the attorneys for the plaintiff that Senator Bilbo would attend court and give testimony.

Senators will see that that is hearsay.

Upon the above showing the court delayed the trial for several days and ordered the issuance of attachment for Senator Bilbo.

When the court finally again took up the trial, Senator Bilbo was still missing; but the plaintiff was compelled to go to trial under protest.

Judge Holmes knew that I was an attorney at law, and that I had been practicing law for a number of years. Judge Holmes says, if he gets his dates right, that we attended the University of Michigan at the same time, in the same class. I have no recollection of him. He made no impression on me. I do not remember it. Judge Holmes had to find out what the law was before he could proceed to issue his attachment for me; but he knew that the showing made was untrue, or, if he did not know it, then he is an unfaithful judge.

He knew that I was attorney for Governor Russell. He knew that whatever I knew about the case was privileged communication. He knew that I, as an honorable attorney, could not testify about the information in my possession. He knew all that; and yet he granted the attachment upon the ground that I was a material witness. He knew I was not a material witness; he knew I could not testify; but what he was after was the attachment to get a chance to get a contempt case against Bilbo. Anything to monkey with Bilbo.

Judge Foster, who represented the plaintiff, said they had to go on through the trial of the case under protest. If Judge Holmes believed in his heart as an attorney that I was a material witness, and that the success of the plaintiff's case depended upon my testimony, he was untrue and unfaithful to the plaintiff's cause when he forced the plaintiff to trial in the face of the fact that I was absent. But he knew that I was not a material witness.

McNeil, the man who represented the plaintiff, and who is now trying to come to the rescue of Judges Holmes, the man who made the motion to have me cited for contempt, knew it. Why did he go on to trial? Why did he not file a motion setting up the facts and asking for a continuance? If Bilbo's testimony would have saved the plaintiff's case, pray tell me why did they not appeal from the decision of the court? No; the fact of the matter is that the whole case was a political set-up. It was a kind of a fishing expedition of some political lawyers, trying to start something politically in the State. I have no defense for the plaintiff in the case—or the defendant, either. I think it was a case of "the pot and the kettle" controversy. The woman should not have recovered.

There is not a lawyer in this body who will contend for one minute that either the attachment, the order citing me for contempt, the trial for contempt, or the fine for contempt was legal, unless he goes back to the very beginning and says that the subpoena was legal; and I think the record of this case, the action of the attorneys, the action of the court, and the law, show conclusively that the subpoena never was legal. Therefore, if the subpoena was illegal, and the process employed was of no effect, everything they did, so far as Bilbo was concerned, was illegal, and any lawyer who knows anything about the law knows that to be true.

Mr. President, having covered the legal phases in a brief way, showing that the subpoena was illegal, showing that the attachment was necessarily illegal, showing that the citation for contempt was illegal, showing that the bond for appearance was illegal, showing that the sentence of the court was illegal, showing that there was no plea of guilty entered, and establishing even by the words of Judge Holmes himself that I went before the court not with a plea of guilty but with a mere statement of the facts, acting in good faith, assuring him that I was acting upon the advice of a competent attorney, a man for whom he has high respect, that there was no intention, and there could not have been any intention on my part to be in contempt of court, and establishing in Senators' minds that the action of the court showed that he knew that I was not a material witness, I believe I have proved by the way he handled the case that he is an unfaithful judge.

There can be no reason on earth for the action of the court in sending me to jail. There must be something else behind it; and that something else, my friends, was motivated by the political prejudice that was characteristic of the judge and his household. It was to destroy the man Bilbo, a member of the faction that opposed his father-in-law in the political life of Mississippi.

Now I desire to take up a different phase of the case. I wish to discuss the necessity of sustaining a motion to recommit this nomination to the committee for rehearing, for a reopening of the case, for a full, complete, square, fair, honest, and just investigation of the facts that I have charged against Judge Holmes in this case.

As I stated a while ago, when I came to Washington in January of last year, because of the pleasant and affable and congenial relationship which existed between the senior Senator from Mississippi and myself, I never dreamed that we should have such a hearing as we are having today. I never dreamed that my colleague would try to cram this man down my throat, over my protest, when he knew of the great injury this man had done against me and mine, illegally and without justification. Therefore, on the adjournment of Congress last year I made no investigation; I made no effort to find out anything about Judge Holmes and his inside record as a judge.

I have not been associated with the courts in recent years. I have been in office, or running for office. I have not been in the courts. I have been devoting myself, as many Senators have been doing, to building my political life. So I made no efforts to investigate Judge Holmes. But when it seemed that a fight was going to take place, and the newspapers began to carry the news, I began to get telegrams and letters from lawyers, from my friends, telling me of the judicial misconduct of Judge Holmes outside of my own case.

Then it was that I suggested the reopening of the hearings of the subcommittee; then it was that I submitted additional charges against the judge; and at the suggestion of the committee they were willing to wait until I could go down to Mississippi. When I heard about the various acts of which as a judge he was guilty, such as gross violations of his duties and prostitution of his office, I stated to the committee, "If you will give me a few days—I have got to make a trip home—I will try to find out what I can as to the facts. I will be fair with you. I will bring them back and put them on the table, face up, and we will have an investigation." When I returned I set forth a lot of facts which I believe will disqualify this man from enjoying promotion at the hands of the United States Senate. I insisted that I be permitted to bring witnesses to prove the charges; but to my very great surprise, instead of the committee permitting me to bring my witnesses here, I walked into the committee room and found Judge Holmes there on the stand trying to explain, trying to justify, trying to cover up the things that I charged him with; and not only that but the committee sends down to Jackson and brings his clerk here, by way of cumulative evidence, further to cover up the things that I charged, because the committee knows, and Senators will know when I get through discussing the record in the case, that if he is guilty of the things I have charged, then he is not entitled to this promotion; he is unfit for this service; he is not qualified to sit on a reviewing court in this country. All that I have been asking is that the committee subpoena the list of witnesses that I will give them and let me bring them here and prove my case, and then let the Senate, the judges, the final arbiters in this important matter, say whether I have established facts that will justify the Senate in refusing to consent to the promotion of this man.

I wish to impress upon the Members of the Senate that a very grave responsibility rests upon those in authority in this Government to protect the helpless and the defenseless of our country. I understand that since I have been here the Senate has had a committee, which is now active, investigating receiverships and bankruptcy cases and the way in which property of individuals is being handled by the courts of the country. I picked up a Washington newspaper from which I wish to read the headlines of an article preparatory to the introduction of some of the matters which I want to call to the attention of the Senate in regard to the action of Judge Holmes and his record:

Many receiverships held to be "legal rackets."
Investors cheated in reorganizations; creditors lose, too.
Property destroyed and savings looted "with due process of law" probes show.

Some people think it is all right to get the other fellow's money if you can get it "by due process of law", and that is the way great rackets are being carried on in this country—rackets in bankruptcy proceedings, rackets in the liquidation of banks, rackets here, there, and everywhere in re-reorganization of businesses.

I quote from the newspaper article:

Property rights may be sacred in the United States under most circumstances, but Congress has found an exception to the rule.

Bankruptcy, receivership, and reorganization proceedings are being used to destroy property and loot the savings of the thrifty, special Senate and House committees have reported after several years' investigation.

These practices do not violate the Constitution, for the looting is done "with due process of law." Federal judges appoint receivers and trustees for reorganization and have the last say about the things these appointees do and the fees they receive.

I want to call attention in a few moments to the conduct of this man, Judge Holmes, who has the last say; his is the last word; he is the last hope of the defenseless and helpless depositors in my State when receivers are appointed by the Comptroller of the Currency to liquidate national banks in the State. Again quoting from this newspaper:

When a concern goes into bankruptcy or starts reorganization proceedings under section 77B of the Bankruptcy Act, investors in bonds are lucky if they get a few cents on the dollar for the money they put in.

Stockholders, almost invariably, get nothing.

But the receivers, trustees, bondholders' committee, and the attorneys who represent them get fees running into the hundreds of thousands of dollars in individual cases.

A House investigating committee used the word "despicable" in describing prevailing practices.

A Senate committee used the word "unconscionable."

Since the investigations began a number of Federal judges have expressed equal indignation. Judge Slick, of Indiana, for instance, described one reorganization proceeding as having "all the earmarks of a mad scramble for advantage at grossly exaggerated expenses which the court is now asked to burden upon the debtor."

Some judges have done nothing toward cleaning up bankruptcy and reorganization rackets in their districts.

My contention is that we have a judge here who is engaged in the liquidation of the banks and who has been as reckless as any receiver ever dared to be.

I ask permission to insert the entire article from which I have read in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the permission is granted.

The article referred to, in its entirety, is as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News of Mar. 16, 1936]

MANY RECEIVERSHIPS HELD TO BE "LEGAL" RACKETS—INVESTIGATORS CHEATED IN REORGANIZATIONS; CREDITORS LOSE, TOO—PROPERTY DESTROYED AND SAVINGS LOOTED "WITH DUE PROCESS OF LAW", PROBES SHOW

By Ruth Finney

Property rights may be sacred in the United States under most circumstances, but Congress has found an exception to the rule.

Bankruptcy, receivership, and reorganization proceedings are being used to destroy property and to loot the savings of the thrifty, special Senate and House committees have reported after several years' investigation.

These practices do not violate the Constitution, for the looting is done "with due process of law." Federal judges appoint receivers and trustees for reorganization and have the last say about the things these appointees do and the fees they receive.

INVESTORS CHEATED

When a concern goes into bankruptcy or starts reorganization proceedings under section 77B of the Bankruptcy Act, investors in bonds are lucky if they get a few cents on the dollar for the money they put in.

Stockholders, almost invariably, get nothing.

But the receivers, trustees, bondholders' committees, and the attorneys who represent them get fees running into the hundreds of thousands of dollars in individual cases.

DESPICABLE

A House investigating committee used the word "despicable" in describing prevailing practices.

A Senate committee used the word "unconscionable."

Since the investigations began a number of Federal judges have expressed equal indignation. Judge Slick, of Indiana, for instance, described one reorganization proceeding as having "all the earmarks of a mad scramble for advantage at grossly exaggerated expenses which the court is now asked to burden upon the debtor."

Some judges have done nothing toward cleaning up bankruptcy and reorganization rackets in their districts.

ONE INSTANCE

Here are a few stories to illustrate what the committees found. In the Richfield oil receivership in southern California, no creditor had received any part of his claim when the receivership was 32 months old. The book value of assets during that time showed a shrinkage from $130,000,000 to $41,949,000. A subsequent appraisal disclosed assets of $23,821,000. First-mortgage bonds of $35,000,000 were outstanding against them. Six millions in interest was in default.

The receiver had piled up an operating loss of $10,594,210. But during that time the receiver, his attorneys, auditors, and appraisers had received fees, on account, of $1,500,000.

In another case, the Senate committee says, bankruptcy proceedings were instituted apparently "to relieve the corporation involved from obligations the validity of which could not be questioned."

"Lessors looked on helplessly and saw their obligations made void and of no effect. Holders of preferred stock were denied that security of investment which they had been led to believe they had safeguarded, and made to suffer losses they could ill afford to bear."

"... in some instances the loss of their entire life savings."

"These proceedings which brought about such results ... were instituted by men who were unscrupulous, aided by attorneys who, to our minds, had little, if any, regard for their obligations of citizenship, much less for the canons of legal ethics, and were prosecuted with the full knowledge and at least the tacit acquiescence of the judge whose duty it was to pass judgment upon the merits of the objects sought to be obtained."

"In this particular case through the device of holding companies ... and by the forced sale of the bankrupt estate in its entirety the former owners have again come into possession of all the assets ... though relieved of real estate leases which the interests formerly in control considered onerous or disadvantageous, and freed of the obligation of accounting to the holders of $6,000,000 of their preferred stock which has literally been wiped out."

In another case the Senate committee found that $4.97½ was paid in fees for every dollar paid to general creditors.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I have made a charge against Judge Holmes as the reviewing judge, as the approving judge, as the last hope in the liquidation of one bank especially. There are other banks, there are other cases that have been brought to my attention; but Senators must understand the handicap under which I am operating and trying to bring to them the real inside facts of this man's judicial record. The lawyers in Mississippi know him; they know his temperament; they know what he will do, and they do not dare open their mouths. They could not come here to testify. If they did, they would have to pack up their books and get out of his court. They know that, and I have not dared to quote them, but they have talked to me privately.

I wish now to bring to the attention of the Senate the case of the liquidation of one bank, the First National Bank of Gulfport, Miss. I have here from the Comptroller of the Treasury a statement of the condition of the bank. This bank at the date of its suspension had assets of $4,002,716; the total assets to be accounted for in the liquidation of the bank were $4,665,000; and here is the alarming statement that out of all those assets of the bank the unsecured liabilities at the date of suspension were $2,263,791.81. That was the bank that went to the bow-wows down in Gulfport, in the southern district of Mississippi, and when that bank failed the Comptroller of the Currency appointed a receiver by the name of A. F. Rawlings.

When I made these charges about the way in which he had approved the liquidation at the instance of the receiver, Judge Holmes was brought here to explain. Yes; but the committee goes to the office of the Comptroller of the Currency and brings one of the deputies before the committee to try to explain for the benefit of Judge Holmes. The committee did not wait until I established what I believed to be fraudulent transactions in the liquidation of this bank, fraudulent deals that the judge has approved, fraudulent transactions and deals about which he could have known and should have known and about which it was his duty and responsibility to know; but the committee, out of the bigness of its heart, and evidently for the purpose of trying to save the judge, themselves go up and get the deputy from the office of the Comptroller General and bring him down to explain that the judge had no responsibility in the matter; that although he had the last say, and he approved all these transactions and deals, what he did was merely a perfunctory act, a matter-of-course affair. However, the man the committee brought down from the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, Mr. Lyons, said there are certain settlements and transactions in these bank liquidations that stand out "like a sore thumb in the community", and about which the judge himself should know something and should take steps to investigate, and among these is the disposition of real estate that the depositors can see and the judge can see. It was the disposition of the bank buildings and fixtures at Gulfport that I charged was one of the cases that did not look right on the surface. It looked as if someone had feathered his nest; and I wanted to bring to Washington at least the chairman of the depositors' committee that represented 6,000 depositors in the city of Gulfport.

Does anyone see anything wrong in hearing the men who were desirous of representing the depositors' interests in the liquidation of the bank when they charge that something is "rotten in Denmark" in that liquidation? Does anyone see why any committee of the Senate should object to the chairman of the depositors' committee coming to Washington to tell the committee what had taken place, so the committee could find out whether the judge has been guilty of dereliction in his duties and functions as a judge?

Oh, no; instead of bringing the representatives of the depositors' committee for that purpose, they bring the judge. What would Senators think if they should walk into a court anywhere in this country and the grand jury should bring in an indictment charging John Doe with murder or arson or burglary or some other heinous crime, and the court sitting on the bench should dismiss all the State's witnesses, the prosecuting witnesses, and say, "I do not want to hear you; you cannot testify in my court; Mr. Defendant, you are charged with arson, murder, burglary, or something else; take the stand; here is the indictment; explain it to the jury?"

That is exactly what the subcommittee did in this case. I made several indictments, indictments that ought to be investigated, indictments which they thought enough of to cause them to bring the judge here instead of letting me bring the witnesses. They put him on the stand, and said, "Judge Holmes, this man BILBO charges you with fraudulent transactions in Gulfport in the liquidation of a bank there, and charges that you approved some transactions because of which the depositors claim they have been defrauded. Please explain it for the benefit of the Senate of the United States. BILBO has charged you with other things. Explain them to the committee for the benefit of the United States Senate."

A mere alleging is not proof. I appreciate that fact. I might charge Judge Holmes with murder, or burglary, or arson, or theft, or anything else under the sun in the category of crime, but the Senate would have no right to reject his nomination merely because I so charged him. That would not constitute proof. All I have asked the committee to do is to let me bring my witnesses and prove what I have charged. If what I have charged can be substantiated, there is not a man on the floor of the Senate who would vote to confirm Judge Holmes, not even my colleague, strong as he is for Judge Holmes. At least I do not believe he would.

Mr. President, I have a telegram from the chairman of the depositors' committee about one of the transactions involved which reads as follows:

GULFPORT, MISS., March 19, 1936.

Senator THEODORE BILBO:

Answering your telegram March 7, public records here show First National Bank Building at Thirteenth Street and Twenty-sixth Avenue sold by A. F. Rawlings, receiver First National Bank in Gulfport to Eustis McManus, as trustee, for $3,000 cash, assumption of past-due taxes amounting to $4,000 cash, assumption of past-due taxes amounting to $4,400, and assignment of deposit claims held by McManus in trust amounting to $41,938.44. Thirty-percent dividend had been previously paid on these deposits. Claims probable balance liquidating value such claims 20 percent. Sale was made October 20, 1933. On November 23, 1933, McManus conveyed same property to Hancock County Bank in consideration $1 and other valuable considerations; assessed value of said property in 1933 was $28,000, not including bank furnishings. Included in the sale was all of the banking-house furnishing furniture, including vault, time lock, and safety deposit boxes. Assessed value of land and buildings, conservative value of furniture, deposit boxes, and time lock on vault approximately $5,000.

DEPOSITORS' COMMITTEE, FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF GULFPORT, MISS.,
J. F. GALLOWAY, Chairman.

In Mississippi, when a piece of real estate is assessed, the assessment generally represents from 25 to 40 or 50 percent of its actual value. Here was a piece of property which was assessed at $35,000. When we figure up what this man McManus paid for it, it will be found that the judge, in one of these "sore thumb" cases about which Lyons told the committee, permitted, to the great harm of the depositors, a piece of property to go almost for a song in comparison with its actual value. I personally happen to know about the property.

I have here a copy of the order of the court effecting that sale, and, in conjunction with the telegram which I have just read from the chairman of the depositors' committee, I ask leave to submit that order for the RECORD.

There being no objection, the order was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In the District Court of the United States for the Southern Division of the Southern District of Mississippi in equity. In re First National Bank of Gulfport, in liquidation. No. 413, Equity. Order.

There coming on to be heard the petition of A. F. Rawlings, receiver of the First National Bank of Gulfport, in liquidation, for leave and authority to sell to Eustis McManus, the building commonly known as First National Bank of Gulfport Building, and certain equipment therein, specifically described in said petition, upon the terms and conditions outlined in said petition, and the court having considered said petition, and finding it to be the best interest of petitioner's trust to make said sale upon the terms outlined in the petition, and it further appearing that the same has been authorized by the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States, it is therefore Ordered, adjudged, and decreed that A. F. Rawlings, receiver of the First National Bank of Gulfport, be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to convey by receiver's deed, without warranty of any kind, to Eustis McManus, the following-described real property, with improvements thereon, situated in city of Gulfport, Harrison County, Miss., to wit:

Thirty-five feet off the east end of lots 9 to 12, inclusive, and the south 11 feet off lot 8, block 177, of the official map of original Gulfport, Harrison County, Miss., as per map or plat thereof on file in the office of the chancery clerk of Harrison County, Miss., and the following-described personal property or equipment, situated in said building, to wit:

Six grill cages—counters in same; one standing double desk.

In vault—door built by Diebold Safe & Lock Co., Canton, Ohio: 1 money safe (steel) built by Hibbard-Rodman-Ely Safe Co., New York; 1 steel cabinet, various size lockboxes, numbered 1 to 14, inclusive; 1 burglar-alarm system (McClintock Co.), model no. 30.

In vault, over door marked "Mutual Auto Sales Co.": 1 section storage cabinets (4) and roller shelves, with row of 19 document files above same; 1 section letter drawers (8—1 missing) and roller shelves, with row of 15 document files (1 missing) above same; 1 section of 15 document files; 1 section of 19 document files; 1 section of 12 roller shelves.

In vault, made by Herring-Hall-Marvin Safe Co., Hamilton, Ohio: 1 battery safe-deposit boxes, nos. 438 to 769, inclusive (332 boxes); 1 battery safe-deposit boxes, nos. 101 to 428, inclusive (328 boxes).

Grill door leading to vault.

2 customers' booths.

Upon payment to said receiver of the sum of $3,000 in cash, the assignment and delivery to said receiver of receiver's certificates nos. 1673, 1674, and 3505, in the total sum of $41,938.44, issued by receiver of First National Bank in Gulfport, upon which total dividends of 30 percent have been paid, and the assumption by said Eustis McManus of all delinquent and unpaid taxes, State, city, and county, upon said property, and special improvement taxes upon said property and the agreement by said Eustis McManus to pay all taxes on said property for the year 1933 and thereafter.

I, B. L. Todd, Jr., clerk of the United States district court for said district, do hereby certify that the foregoing page and one-half contain a full, true, and correct copy of the original thereof now among the records of said cause in said court, in my office at Biloxi, Miss., in said district.

By GEO. F. MONEY,
Deputy Clerk at Biloxi.

Mr. BILBO. The First National Bank of Gulfport numbered among its stockholders and creditors several people who are rated as millionaires. That is another one of the "sore-thumb" propositions of which Judge Holmes should have taken notice. I introduce for the RECORD a petition of the receiver for an order of the court, in which one of these very wealthy people was permitted to get away with not paying his just share of the obligations due the depositors.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In the District Court of the United States for the Southern Division of the Southern District of Mississippi. In the matter of First National Bank in Gulfport, in liquidation First National Bank of Gulfport, in liquidation. No. 439; equity

Petition of A. F. Rawlings, receiver of First National Bank in Gulfport and receiver of First National Bank of Gulfport

Your petitioner would respectfully show unto the court that on, to wit, December 3, 1931, he was appointed receiver of the First National Bank in Gulfport, in liquidation, a national banking corporation, by the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States; that on, to wit, August 9, 1932, petitioner was appointed receiver of the First National Bank of Gulfport, in liquidation, a national banking corporation, by the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States; that he immediately qualified, and has since the date of his respective appointments, and is now, proceeding with his duties in the liquidation of the affairs of said banking institutions in pursuance of his appointments.

Petitioner would further respectfully show unto the court that among the stockholders of the First National Bank in Gulfport and of the First National Bank of Gulfport, at the time said banks closed and were placed in liquidation by the Comptroller of the Currency, were the following: Mrs. H. S. Weston, owning stock in the First National Bank in Gulfport of the par value of $8,000; and the estate of H. S. Weston, deceased, owning stock in the First National Bank of Gulfport of the par value of $25,500.

That after the appointment of petitioner as receiver, respectively, of both of said banks, the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States duly made assessments against said stockholders of both of said banks for the par value of said stock, and in the amounts as hereinabove set forth; that is to say, $8,000 against Mrs. H. S. Weston and $25,500 against the estate of H. S. Weston, deceased. That said stock assessments were not paid, and petitioner, pursuant to instructions from the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States, instituted suits in the United States District Court for the Southern Division of the Southern District of Mississippi, at Biloxi, seeking to recover of and from said Mrs. H. S. Weston, and also Mrs. H. S. Weston as executrix of the estate of H. S. Weston, deceased, the full amount of the par value of said stock, as hereinabove shown, and said suits are now on file and pending in this honorable court.

That petitioner has made diligent inquiry into the affairs and the solvency of the said Mrs. H. S. Weston, and also of the estate of H. S. Weston, deceased. Petitioner finds that the estate of H. S. Weston, deceased, is involved in litigation involving large amounts, and that his pendens notices have been placed on practically all of the property of said estate in suits by which it is sought to subject the property of said estate to large money demands. That there is a serious question whether petitioner would be able to realize by execution the amount of the said judgments which might be rendered against the estate of H. S. Weston, deceased, on account of said stock assessment and liability aforesaid. That, therefore, the ability of petitioner to collect the full amount of said stock liability against the estate of H. S. Weston, deceased, is doubtful. That the value of said estate has greatly diminished in the last 2 or 3 years.

That petitioner has received from Mrs. H. S. Weston and from Mrs. H. S. Weston, executrix of the estate of H. S. Weston, deceased, an offer of $29,500 in cash in full compromise and settlement of the above-mentioned stock-assessment liability; that is to say, the assessment against Mrs. H. S. Weston for $8,000 and the assessment against the estate of H. S. Weston for $25,500, said payment to be in full on account of her individual liability and also the liability of said estate.

That petitioner, after careful investigation, has come to the conclusion and avers that he believes it to the best interest of his trust to accept said offer of $29,500 in cash in settlement and cancellation of said stock liability. That petitioner reported his conclusions and findings to the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Comptroller of the Currency has by letter addressed to petitioner authorized petitioner, with the consent of this honorable court, to accept the sum of $29,500 in full settlement of said stock liability, and has authorized petitioner upon payment thereof to dismiss the aforementioned suits pending in this court to enforce said stock-assessment liability, same to be dismissed with prejudice and at the cost of plaintiff.

Wherefore, petitioner prays for an order authorizing, directing, and empowering him to accept from Mrs. H. S. Weston and Mrs. H. S. Weston, as executrix of the estate of H. S. Weston, deceased, the sum of $29,500 in full compromise and settlement of the stock-assessment liability of the said Mrs. H. S. Weston and the estate of H. S. Weston, deceased, and that petitioner be authorized to execute and deliver a full and complete release therefor. That petitioner be further authorized to dismiss the said suits pending against the said Mrs. H. S. Weston and the estate of H. S. Weston, deceased, with prejudice, at the cost of the plaintiff. And petitioner will ever pray.

Order

There coming on to be heard the petition of A. F. Rawlings, receiver of the First National Bank in Gulfport, in liquidation, and A. F. Rawlings, receiver of the First National Bank of Gulfport, in liquidation, for leave and authority to compromise and settle with Mrs. H. S. Weston and the estate of H. S. Weston, deceased, on account of the stock-assessment liability of said Mrs. Weston and said estate in said national banks, and the court having considered said matters, it is therefore Ordered, adjudged and decreed that A. F. Rawlings, receiver of the First National Bank in Gulfport, in liquidation, and A. F. Rawlings, receiver of the First National Bank of Gulfport, in liquidation, be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to compromise and settle the stock-assessment liability of said Mrs. H. S. Weston, in the sum of $8,000, in the First National Bank in Gulfport, and the stock-assessment liability of the estate of H. S. Weston, deceased, in the First National Bank of Gulfport, in the sum of $25,500, at and for the sum of $29,500 in cash; that upon payment thereof said receiver be, and he is hereby authorized, to execute and deliver a full and complete release, releasing the said Mrs. H. S. Weston and said estate of H. S. Weston, deceased, from any and all liability on account of said stock assessments.

The said receiver is further authorized to dismiss with prejudice the suits pending in this court against the said Mrs. H. S. Weston and the estate of H. S. Weston, deceased, to recover the stock liabilities, said dismissal to be with prejudice and at the cost of plaintiff.

The court finds that it is to the best interest of petitioner's said trust to enter into and effect said compromise agreement as hereinabove set forth.

By GEO. P. MONEY,
Deputy Clerk.

Mr. BILBO. I now wish to call attention to a petition of the receiver of the First National Bank in Gulfport for settlement of the liability of J. W. Somerville in the sum of $16,363.10 for the sum of $969.93. The order of Judge Holmes is attached to the petition, and I ask that the petition and order may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition and order were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In the District Court of the United States for the Southern Division of the Southern District of Mississippi. In re First National Bank in Gulfport, in liquidation. No. 387, equity

Petition of A. F. Rawlings, receiver of First National Bank in Gulfport

To the Honorable E. R. HOLMES, Judge:

Your petitioner would respectfully show unto the court that he was, on December 3, 1931, appointed receiver of the First National Bank in Gulfport, a national banking corporation, by the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States, and that petitioner has, since said time and is now, proceeding with his duties in the liquidation of the affairs of said banking institution, pursuant to said appointment.

Petitioner would further show unto the court that there came into the possession of said receiver, pursuant to his appointment as aforesaid, a note of J. W. Somerville, in the sum of $16,363.10, the same being secured by a deed of trust executed by J. W. Somerville and Gertrude A. Somerville, his wife, in favor of the First National Bank of Gulfport, E. M. Murphy, Jr., trustee, and now owned by petitioner as receiver of First National Bank in Gulfport, which deed of trust is recorded in book 65, pages 557-560 of Record of Mortgages and Deeds of Trusts on Land in Harrison County, Miss., the same being a second deed of trust, there being two prior deeds of trust in favor of Lamar Life Insurance Co., L. Barrett Jones, trustee, the same being recorded in book 34, pages 34-36, and book 80, pages 319-323, respectively, Record of Mortgages and Deeds of Trust on Land in Harrison County, Miss., the same having been given to secure an indebtedness to the Lamar Life Insurance Co., the property covered by all of said deeds of trust being lot 13, block 2, and lot 13, block 5, Soria City addition to the city of Gulfport, Harrison County, Miss., it being the homestead of the makers of said deeds of trust.

That there was also pledged as collateral security to secure the indebtedness to the said Lamar Life Insurance Co. a policy of insurance upon the life of J. W. Somerville, the policy being no. 30536.

That the indebtedness to the Lamar Life Insurance Co. after the appointment of petitioner, as aforesaid, amounted to $3,141.76, which sum petitioner, under instructions of the Comptroller of the Currency and subject to the approval of this honorable court, paid to the Lamar Life Insurance Co., in order to protect petitioner's second deed of trust, with the understanding that the said J. W. Somerville and Gertrude A. Somerville would convey by warranty deed the said property to petitioner, and petitioner, in turn, was to cancel the said indebtedness of J. W. Somerville secured by said deed of trust, and petitioner here shows to the court that the said J. W. Somerville is utterly insolvent and would be unable to respond to a judgment in any sum whatsoever and is unable to make any payment on account of said indebtedness.

That the said J. W. Somerville since petitioner has paid to the Lamar Life Insurance Co. the amount of said Somerville's indebtedness to said Lamar Life Insurance Co., has obtained a loan on his said policy no. 30536 in the sum of $969.93, being the full loan value of said policy, and has turned over and delivered the said sum to petitioner, to apply on his said indebtedness aforesaid.

That as aforesaid, petitioner avers that this arrangement has been approved by the Comptroller of the Currency, and petitioner now prays for an order of this court ratifying and approving his action in the premises and authorizing and empowering petitioner to cancel the said indebtedness of J. W. Somerville and Gertrude A. Somerville to his said trust in the sum aforesaid, in consideration of the execution and delivery of said deed to the real property hereinabove described, and said payment in cash, the proceeds of said loan on said insurance policy as above stated.

II

Petitioner further respectfully shows unto the court that he has received an offer from Judge D. M. Russell, of Gulfport, Miss., to purchase the property hereinabove described, formerly owned by said Somervilles, from petitioner's trust upon the following basis: That is to say, at the time of the closing of the First National Bank in Gulfport, the said D. M. Russell had on deposit to the credit of his personal accounts the sum of $5,512.63, upon which a dividend has been declared in the sum of 18 percent, amounting to $992.27; that the dividend checks aforesaid have not been delivered, and are still in the possession of petitioner. That due proof has been made of said claims by said D. M. Russell within the time required by law, and he is entitled to the said dividend checks for $992.27 and such future dividends as may be declared by petitioner's trust on said deposit. That said offer contemplates that the said proof of claim be canceled and the right of the said D. M. Russell to said dividend checks of $992.27 be waived and said checks canceled, and that in addition the said purchaser will pay to petitioner's trust the sum of $2,181.84 in cash. That by this method petitioner's trust will receive in the neighborhood of something between $5,500 and $6,000 for said property, which, in the opinion of the petitioner, is a fair value for the same at this time on account of the fact there is no market for real estate and taxes upon the same are burdensome. That this is the best offer petitioner has been able to obtain, and he believes it to be the best interest of his trust that said sale be made to said D. M. Russell, and receiver's deed, without warranty, be executed and delivered to him upon payment of said $2,181.84 in cash, cancellation and surrender of said certificates of proofs of claim aforesaid and said dividend check hereinabove set forth, and the purchaser to assume and pay all taxes of every kind upon said property for the year 1933 and thereafter.

That by letter of the Comptroller of the Currency, dated April 20, 1933, the Comptroller of the Currency has authorized the said transaction as hereinabove set forth, and sale of said property upon the terms hereinabove outlined, subject to the approval of this honorable court.

III

Petitioner would further show unto the court that since his appointment, as aforesaid, he has acquired title by foreclosure of the following-described real property, situated in Harrison County, Miss., to wit:

One lot of land beginning at the northeast corner of the northeast quarter of southeast quarter of section 21, township 7 south, range 11 west, Harrison County, Miss.; running thence 400 feet west; running thence south 725 feet to the center of Turkey Creek; running thence in a northeasterly direction along the center of Turkey Creek to the section line; running thence north along the said section line to the point of beginning, being formerly the property of J. A. McDevitt. That the above-mentioned property is improved, having thereon a small house of little value, and is located approximately 5 miles north of Gulfport, Harrison County, Miss.; and there is little, if any, demand for such property.

That petitioner does not consider the property worth more than $200, but has obtained an offer of $250 cash therefor, said offer being made by Mrs. Georgie B. Havard. That approximately the sum of $30.51 will have to be paid by petitioner to redeem said property from tax sale for the taxes for the year 1932. Petitioner believes it to be best interest of his trust that said cash offer of $250 for a receiver's deed, without warranty, to said property above described be accepted, and that out of said sum the petitioner be authorized to expend approximately $30.51 to redeem said property from tax sale aforesaid.

That by letter of the Comptroller of the Currency dated April 3, 1933, petitioner is authorized, subject to the confirmation of this honorable court, to make said sale.

Wherefore, petitioner prays for an order authorizing him to execute a receiver's deed, without warranty, to Mrs. Georgie B. Havard for $250 cash, for said property, and to expend $30.51 for redemption of said property from tax sale for the taxes for the year 1932.

Petitioner further shows to this honorable court that on or about the 20th day of December 1932 petitioner in this cause presented to the court in vacation a petition with reference to the settlement of the liability of certain parties to petitioner's trust, among them being Mrs. Ruby A. Price. That in said petition it was recited that said Mrs. Ruby A. Price owned stock in the First National Bank in Gulfport in the amount of $900. That on or about the 20th day of December 1932, in vacation, the court entered a decree authorizing the settlement with the said Mrs. Ruby A. Price et al. Copies of said petition and order are attached hereto as exhibits A and B, respectively, and made a part of this petition. That through an error, the said petition and said decree recites that the said stock was owned by said Mrs. Ruby A. Price in the First National Bank in Gulfport, when in truth and in fact the said stock was owned by said Mrs. Ruby A. Price in the First National Bank of Gulfport; that said petition and the said decree should be corrected in all of its recitals where said stock is designated as being in First National Bank in Gulfport to be First National Bank of Gulfport, and petitioner prays an order directing the clerk of this court to make said corrections in said petition and decree by changing the word "in" to "of" wherever reference is made to the said stock of Mrs. Ruby A. Price in the said sum of $900.

Wherefore, petitioner prays for an order granting the relief hereinabove prayed for.

Petition of A. F. Rawlings, receiver, for authority to compromise and settle certain claim

To the Honorable E. R. HOLMES, Judge:

Your petitioner would respectfully show unto the court that he was, on December 3, 1931, appointed receiver of the First National Bank in Gulfport, a national banking corporation, by the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States, and that petitioner has, since said time, and is now, proceeding with his duties in the liquidation of the affairs of said banking institution, pursuant to said appointment.

Petitioner would further show that among the assets of the First National Bank in Gulfport, which came into the hands of petitioner, as such receiver, is a note for $20,000 dated November 23, 1930, due on or before 1 year after date, payable to First National Bank of Gulfport, or bearer, which note was made and executed by Ruby A. Price. That said note bears interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum from date until paid. That there was placed with said bank as collateral security for the payment of said above-mentioned note, a note of E. S. Taylor, in the sum of $20,500, dated November 21, 1928, due on or before 1 year after date, payable to the order of Ruby A. Price, which note bears interest at the rate of 6 percent per annum from date, and upon which interest has been paid to November 21, 1930. That the said last-mentioned note is endorsed by James L. Berry, I. B.

Rau, and J. A. Parker. That said last-mentioned note is secured by a deed of trust executed by E. S. Taylor to Ruby A. Price, beneficiary, J. L. Taylor, trustee, said deed of trust being recorded in book 69, pages 233-234, Record of Mortgages and Deeds of Trust on Land in Harrison County, Miss., on file in the office of the chancery clerk of said county and State, and said deed of trust covers the following described property in the county of Harrison, State of Mississippi, to wit:

The east half of the northeast quarter of section 10, township 7, south of range 10 west, and

The northwest quarter of the northwest quarter and in the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter, lying west of Taylor's Lake and Parker Creek in section 11, township 7, south of range 10 west.

That said land hereinabove described comprises a tract of 121½ acres and is located near the Back Bay of Biloxi.

That the said James L. Berry, I. B. Rau, and J. A. Parker and E. S. Taylor would be utterly unable to respond to a judgment in any substantial sum whatsoever in case same was obtained against them, they having no visible property subject to execution. That the said I. B. Rau has, since the execution of said note, gone into bankruptcy. That the liabilities of said J. L. Berry and J. A. Parker are extensive and that the said E. S. Taylor is employed upon a salary, a large part of which would be exempt from execution.

That the said Mrs. Ruby A. Price is a stenographer and is of very limited means, but has some property which she acquired from her deceased husband.

That it is contemplated by petitioner, with the consent of this honorable court, and pursuant to authority of the Comptroller of the Currency, contained in letter dated November 30, 1932, to accept deed to the said 121½-acre tract of land hereinabove described, after proper foreclosure thereof, by the trustee therein named. That the said Mrs. Ruby A. Price shall convey to petitioner certain improved property, described as lot 11 of block 162, original Gulfport, as per map or plat thereof on file in the office of the chancery clerk of Harrison County, Miss., which property has an estimated value of $8,000 and also transfer and deliver to petitioner seven promissory notes aggregating $4,900, the property of the said Mrs. Ruby A. Price, executed by Helga Dalsoren, and secured by a first mortgage on what is known as the Stokoe Apartments in the city of Gulfport, and which property has an estimated value of $10,000. That the said Mrs. Ruby A. Price is also to assign to petitioner receiver's certificates issued to her by his trust, aggregating $2,443.01, and to also assign to petitioner the credit balance of $128.05 which she had in said First National Bank in Gulfport at the time same closed, in consideration of the cancellation of the said two notes hereinabove set forth, and full settlement of the stock assessment liability of Mrs. Ruby A. Price in said First National Bank in Gulfport in the amount of $900.

That the said note first mentioned, executed by Mrs. Ruby A. Price, is now held by Union Indemnity Co., the same having been pledged to said Union Indemnity Co. by the First National Bank in Gulfport, to indemnify the said Union Indemnity Co. against loss on account of the execution by said Union Indemnity Co. of the bond of the said First National Bank in Gulfport, as county depository for Harrison County, Miss., and the city of Gulfport. That that said Union Indemnity Co. is agreeable to said settlement and compromise hereinabove set forth.

That as aforesaid petitioner has been authorized by the Comptroller of the Currency, by letter dated November 30, 1932, to effect said settlement. Petitioner believes it to the best interest of his trust to effect and carry out the compromise hereinabove set forth, and prays the court for an order authorizing him so to do.

DECREE

There coming on to be heard the petition of A. F. Rawlings, receiver of the First National Bank in Gulfport, for leave and authority to compromise and settle certain claims of petitioner, as receiver of said bank, against Mrs. Ruby A. Price, E. S. Taylor, J. L. Berry, and J. A. Parker, and I. B. Rau, as set forth in said petition, and the court having considered said petition and being of the opinion that it is to the best interest of petitioner's trust to effect said settlement, as set out in said petition and as hereinafter set out, and it appearing that authority so to do has been obtained by petitioner from the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States, it is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed:

That the petitioner, A. F. Rawlings, receiver of the First National Bank in Gulfport, be, and he is hereby, authorized in effecting said settlement to accept a deed to the following-described real property situated in Harrison County, Miss., to wit:

East half of northeast quarter of section 10, township 7 south, range 10 west; and northwest quarter of northwest quarter and 1½ acres in northeast quarter of northwest quarter lying west of Taylors Lake and Parker Creek in section 11, township 7 south, range 10 west.

That he is further authorized to accept from Mrs. Ruby A. Price a conveyance to petitioner of lot 11, block 162, original city of Gulfport, as per plat or map thereon filed in the office of the chancery clerk of Harrison County, Miss.; also a transfer and delivery from Mrs. Ruby A. Price to petitioner of seven promissory notes aggregating $4,900, executed by Helga Dalsoren and secured by a first mortgage on what is known as Stokoe Apartments, in city of Gulfport, Harrison County, Miss.; and also assignment by said Mrs. Ruby A. Price to petitioner of receiver's certificate issued by petitioner's trust, aggregating $2,443.01; and assignment by Mrs. Ruby A. Price to said petitioner of the credit balance of $128.05 which she had on deposit in the First National Bank in Gulfport at the time same closed.

Petitioner, in turn, and for said consideration, is to mark canceled and satisfied the note of November 23, 1930, for $20,000 executed by Mrs. Ruby A. Price, and referred to in the petition on file in this cause, and the note of E. S. Taylor for $20,500, dated November 21, 1928, referred to in petition on file in this cause; and in addition the said A. F. Rawlings, receiver, is authorized to cancel and satisfy the stock assessment made by him as receiver of the First National Bank in Gulfport against Mrs. Ruby A. Price in the sum of $900.

Ordered, adjudged, and decreed, in vacation, at Yazoo City, Miss., this 20th day of December 1932.

In re First National Bank of Gulfport, in liquidation. No. 387, equity. Order

There coming to be heard in vacation the petition of A. F. Rawlings, receiver of the First National Bank in Gulfport, for leave and authority to settle and compromise certain indebtedness of J. W. Somerville and Gertrude A. Somerville to petitioner's trust to sell certain property therein described to D. M. Russell, to sell certain property described in said petition to Mrs. Georgie B. Havard, and to correct an error in a decree heretofore rendered in vacation with reference to the stock liability of Mrs. Ruby A. Price in the First National Bank of Gulfport, and the court having considered said petition, and believing it to the best interest of petitioner's trust that the relief prayed for be granted, it is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed:

1. That the action of A. F. Rawlings, receiver of the First National Bank in Gulfport, in accepting deed from J. W. Somerville and Gertrude A. Somerville to lot 13, block 2, and lot 13, block 5, Soria City addition to the city of Gulfport, Harrison County, Miss., and also the sum of $969.93, in full settlement of the liability of said parties on account of an indebtedness to petitioner's trust in the sum of $16,363.10, secured by deed of trust recorded in deeds of trust on land in Harrison County, Miss., and also the sum of $969.93 in full settlement of the liability of said parties on account of an indebtedness to petitioner's trust in the sum of $16,363.10, secured by deed of trust recorded in book 65, pages 557-560 of the record of mortgages and deeds of trust on land in Harrison County, Miss., which mortgage covers the property hereinabove just described, in satisfaction of the said indebtedness above described, but no other indebtedness of J. W. Somerville and Gertrude A. Somerville to petitioner's trust, which action of said receiver has been ratified and approved by the Comptroller of Currency of the United States, be and the same is hereby, by this court, ratified and approved.

2. It further appearing that it is to best interest of petitioner's trust that petitioner execute and deliver to Judge D. M. Russell a receiver's deed, without warranty, to the said property hereinabove described as being conveyed by the said J. W. Somerville and Gertrude A. Somerville to petitioner, at and for the sum of $2,181.84 cash, and the further consideration of the cancellation and surrender by the said D. M. Russell of his claim against petitioner, as receiver of the First National Bank in Gulfport, in the sum of $5,512.63, and the further cancellation and delivery of dividend checks in the sum of $992.27, issued by petitioner as such receiver to the said D. M. Russell on account of his claim against said trust, the purchaser to assume all taxes on said property for the year 1933 and thereafter, it is therefore ordered that petitioner be, and he is hereby, authorized to consummate said transaction and deliver said receiver's deed covering said property, as aforesaid, upon compliance with the terms of said sale, as hereinabove set forth, it appearing to the court that said price to be paid in the manner above stated is fair and adequate and is the best price obtainable at this time for said property, it further appearing to the court that the said sale has been ratified and approved by the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States.

3. It further appearing to the court that it is to the best interest of petitioner's trust that he sell to Mrs. Georgie B. Havard that certain property described as follows, to wit: One lot of land beginning at the northeast corner of the northeast quarter of southeast quarter of section 21, township 7 south, range 11 west, Harrison County, Miss., running thence 400 feet, running thence south 725 feet to the center of Turkey Creek, running thence in a northeasterly direction along the center of Turkey Creek to the section line, running thence north along the said section line to the point of beginning, at and for the sum of $250 cash, and that he execute a receiver's deed without warranty to said Mrs. Georgie B. Havard upon payment of said sum; and it further appearing that said sale has been authorized and approved by the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States, it is therefore ordered that petitioner be, and he is hereby, authorized to execute a receiver's deed without warranty to Mrs. Georgie B. Havard upon payment of $250 cash, and that petitioner be authorized to expend the sum of $30.51 to redeem said property from tax sale for the year 1932, it appearing that it is to the best interest of petitioner's trust to make said sale as aforesaid.

4. It further appearing to the court that on the 20th day of December 1932 this court signed an order in vacation with reference to settlement of the stock liability of Mrs. Ruby A. Price in the sum of $900 pursuant to petition duly presented to the court on said date, and that both in said petition and in the decree entered in said cause an error appears in that the same should have recited that the stock was owned by Mrs. Ruby A. Price in the First National Bank of Gulfport rather than in the First National Bank in Gulfport, copies of said petition and said decree entered on the 20th day of December 1932 being filed with the petition to correct said error, and it appearing to the court that said error should be corrected, it is ordered that the clerk of this court be, and he is hereby, directed to change in said original petition and order the word "in" to "of" wherever the same refers in said petition and order to the stock owned by Mrs. Ruby A. Price in the First National Bank in Gulfport in the amount of $900, so that the same shall read that said stock in the sum of $900 was owned by said Mrs. Ruby A. Price in the First National Bank of Gulfport.

Ordered, adjudged, and decreed in vacation at Yazoo City, Miss., this 29th day of April 1933.

Mr. BILBO. I now come to a case where the president of one of the big banks of New Orleans owed the Gulfport bank. He and his wife together owed the Gulfport bank nearly $8,000. He receives $10,000 a year salary, and yet Judge Holmes approved a settlement releasing this president of a bank in the city of New Orleans, and his wife, a man enjoying a salary of $10,000 a year, letting him off for $2,500, to be paid jointly by the president of the bank himself and his wife in settlement of an obligation in excess of $7,000. These documents are all certified, so there will be no question raised about them. I ask that this petition and order may be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition and order were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In the District Court of the United States for the Southern Division of the Southern District of Mississippi. In re First National Bank in Gulfport, in liquidation. First National Bank of Gulfport, in liquidation. No. 439, equity

Petition of A. F. Rawlings, receiver of First National Bank in Gulfport, and First National Bank of Gulfport, in liquidation

To the Honorable E. R. HOLMES, Judge:

Petitioner would respectfully show unto the court that he was by the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States appointed receiver of the First National Bank in Gulfport on December 3, 1931, and receiver of the First National Bank of Gulfport on August 8, 1932. That he is now proceeding to liquidate the affairs of said banking institutions under the directions of the Comptroller of the Currency and the National Banking Act. That said banks are both located in the southern division of the southern district of Mississippi and within the jurisdiction of this honorable court.

Petitioner would further respectfully show unto the court there has come into his hands by virtue of his appointment as receiver of the First National Bank in Gulfport the following notes of J. A. Bandi, to wit:

One note for $997.43.
One note for $1,350.
One note for $725.

LXXX—254

Also a note of Mrs. Elizabeth Bandi, wife of J. A. Bandi, for $1,600, which note is endorsed by J. A. Bandi.

That J. A. Bandi is the owner of 40 shares of capital stock of the First National Bank of Gulfport, and Mrs. Elizabeth Bandi is the owner of 48 shares of the capital stock of First National Bank of Gulfport of the par value of $2,200.

That therefore stock assessments have been made by the Comptroller of the Currency against the said J. A. Bandi and Mrs. Elizabeth Bandi as stockholders of the First National Bank of Gulfport for the total of said par value of their stock.

That the said J. A. Bandi is also endorser upon a note held by petitioner, as receiver of the First National Bank in Gulfport, executed by Leo L. Stender, in the sum of $490. That therefore the total joint liability of the said J. A. Bandi and Mrs. Elizabeth Bandi to petitioner's two trusts is the sum of $7,362.48.

That the said J. A. Bandi and Mrs. Elizabeth Bandi are hopelessly insolvent. That they have furnished to petitioner sworn financial statement, which statement indicates their insolvency. That any effort to enforce the said liability would force the said J. A. Bandi and Mrs. Elizabeth Bandi into bankruptcy, in which event the said petitioner's trust would recover nothing whatsoever.

That the said J. A. Bandi and Mrs. Elizabeth Bandi have offered to pay petitioner, as receiver of the said two banks, the sum of $2,500, payable at the rate of $50 per month, in full settlement of their said joint liability, as above set forth, the said sum so received to be prorated between petitioner's two trusts upon the basis of the respective liability of J. A. Bandi and Mrs. Elizabeth Bandi thereto, as hereinabove set forth.

Petitioner believes it to the best interest of his trusts to effect said settlement. That petitioner has been authorized by the Comptroller of the Currency by letter dated January 13, 1933, to enter into and effect said compromise upon obtaining proper order of this honorable court.

Wherefore, petitioner prays that he be authorized and empowered to effect said settlement, and that upon full compliance with the terms thereof by the said J. A. Bandi and Mrs. Elizabeth Bandi that petitioner be authorized to cancel said total indebtedness of the said parties to his trusts in the sum of $5,162.48 and stock liability of the said J. A. Bandi and Mrs. Elizabeth Bandi in the total sum of $2,200.

A. Bandi and Mrs. Elizabeth Bandi, to petitioner's two trusts, in accordance with the terms and conditions set forth in said petition, and the court having considered said matter, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed:

That A. F. Rawlings, receiver of First National Bank in Gulfport, and A. F. Rawlings, receiver of First National Bank of Gulfport, be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to settle the total indebtedness of J. A. Bandi and Mrs. Elizabeth Bandi to his two trusts in the sum of $5,162.48, and the stock liability of J. A. Bandi and Mrs. Elizabeth Bandi in the First National Bank of Gulfport, in the sum of $2,200, at and for the sum of $2,500, payable at the rate of $50 per month, the court finding it to the best interest of petitioner's two trusts to make said compromise settlement. That upon payment in full of said sum of $2,500 by J. A. Bandi and Mrs. Elizabeth Bandi, that petitioner be and he is hereby authorized to cancel the said indebtedness of J. A. Bandi and Mrs. Elizabeth Bandi to petitioner's two trusts in the sum of $5,162.48 and the stock liability of $2,200, as aforesaid, and to execute a release therefor.

That of the said $2,500, so to be paid, petitioner prorate the same between his two said trusts in the proportion of the indebtedness of J. A. Bandi and Mrs. Elizabeth Bandi to the said trusts, as set forth in said petition.

Mr. BILBO. I now submit another petition of the receiver listing stockholders who owned stock in the bank of the par value of almost $334,000, who were released by order of the judge upon the payment of less than 50 percent of their stock liability. That is where the depositors in the Gulfport Bank lost more than 50 percent of what they were entitled to have. I ask that this petition and order may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition and order were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In the District Court of the United States for the Southern Division of the Southern District of Mississippi. In re First National Bank in Gulfport, in liquidation. No. 387, equity

Petition of A. F. Rawlings, receiver

To the Honorable E. R. HOLMES, Judge:

Your petitioner would respectfully show unto the court that he was, on December 3, 1931, appointed receiver of the First National Bank in Gulfport, a national banking corporation, by the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States, and that petitioner has, since said time, and is now, proceeding with his duties in the liquidation of the affairs of the said banking institution, pursuant to said appointment.

Petitioner would further respectfully show unto the court that among the stockholders of the First National Bank in Gulfport, at the time the same closed, and was placed in liquidation by the Comptroller of the Currency, were the following stockholders, who owned stock of the par value in said bank set opposite their respective names, to wit:

Annie D. Bond	$2,400.00
A. M. Cowan	2,000.00
R. G. Cox	1,200.00
A. F. Dantzler	20,000.00
G. B. Dantzler	24,000.00
L. N. Dantzler	4,800.00
Bessie H. Dantzler	2,400.00
H. M. Rollins	800.00
A. E. Fant	9,850.00
R. H. Hardtner	1,600.00
Hanun Gardner	3,625.00
Mrs. Maude Winchester Gardner	1,250.00
J. J. Harry	100,000.00
Mrs. F. E. Havard	2,000.00
W. B. Herring	23,450.00
Malcolm McEachern	550.00
Grace Jones Stewart	115,200.00
W. T. Stewart	1,000.00
W. G. Field	4,000.00
Paul Jenkins	1,600.00
B. G. Lake	4,000.00
Morris Lake	1,600.00
J. S. Walker	2,400.00
W. K. Walker	4,000.00

That after appointment of petitioner as receiver aforesaid, the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States duly made assessment against said stockholders for the par value of said stock in the amounts as hereinabove shown. That said stock assessments were not paid, and petitioner, pursuant to instructions of the Comptroller of the Currency, instituted suits in the United States District Court for the Southern Division of the Southern District of Mississippi, at Biloxi, seeking to recover of and from said stockholders the full amount of the par value of said stock, as hereinabove shown, and said suits are now on file and pending in said court.

That of said total amount of stock so held by the above-named stockholders in the sum of $333,725, petitioner has ascertained, after careful investigation and inquiry into the financial condition of said stockholders, that only approximately $155,400 of said total amount is considered collectible, leaving of doubtful collectibility the sum of $178,325.

That on account of the general conditions at this time, the incomes of the said stockholders have greatly diminished, and the value of property held by them has also greatly diminished. That petitioner has received from said group of stockholders above-mentioned, an offer of $210,000 in cash in full settlement of their stock liability according to the list above set forth. That petitioner, after careful consideration of said matter, came to the conclusion that it was to the best interest of his trust to accept said offer of $210,000, the same to be paid in cash in cancellation and settlement of said stock liability, and fully reported his conclusion to the Comptroller of the Currency by letter dated January 14, 1933. That the Comptroller of the Currency by letter dated January 19, 1933, has authorized petitioner, with the consent of this honorable court, to accept the said sum of $210,000, in full settlement of said stock liability, and that the suits pending by petitioner in this honorable court at Biloxi, Miss., to enforce said stock liability, be dismissed with prejudice.

Wherefore, petitioner prays for an order authorizing him to accept the said sum of $210,000 in full settlement and satisfaction of the stock liability of the aforementioned stockholders of the First National Bank in Gulfport, and that he be further authorized to execute a full release to the said stockholders covering said stock liability. That the suits pending, as aforesaid, be dismissed with prejudice at the costs of plaintiff in said suits, the petitioner herein.

And as in duty bound, etc.

Total 190,200.00

That after appointment of petitioner as receiver aforesaid, the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States duly made assessment against said stockholders for the par value of said stock in the amounts as hereinabove shown. That said stock assessments were not paid, and petitioner, pursuant to instructions of the Comptroller of the Currency, instituted suits in the United States District Court for the Southern Division of the Southern District of Mississippi, at Biloxi, seeking to recover of and from said stockholders the full amount of the par value of said stock.

as hereinabove shown, and said suits are now on file and pending in said court.

That of said total amount of stock so held by the above-named stockholders in the sum of $190,200, petitioner has ascertained, after careful investigation and inquiry into the financial condition of said stockholders, that his ability to collect same is extremely doubtful.

On account of general conditions at this time the incomes of the said stockholders have greatly diminished, and the value of property held by them has also greatly diminished.

That petitioner has received from said group of stockholders above mentioned an offer of $126,500 in cash in full settlement of their stock liability according to the list above set forth. That petitioner, after careful consideration of the said matter, came to the conclusion that it was to the best interest of his trust to accept said offer of $126,500, the same to be paid in cash in cancellation and settlement of said stock liability, and fully reported his conclusion to the Comptroller of the Currency by letter of February 18, 1933. That the Comptroller of the Currency by wire of date of May 29, 1933, has authorized petitioner, with the consent of this honorable court, to accept the said sum of $126,500 in full settlement of said stock liability, and that the suits pending by petitioner in this honorable court at Biloxi, Miss., to enforce said stock liability be dismissed with prejudice.

Petitioner would further respectfully show unto the court that among the stockholders of the First National Bank of Gulfport, at the time same was closed, were the estate of Mrs. Jos. T. Jones in the sum of $20,000, of which estate Mrs. Grace E. Jones Stewart is executrix, and also Mrs. Grace E. Jones Stewart was a stockholder in said bank individually in the sum of $21,000. Your petitioner has received from the estate of Mrs. Jos. T. Jones and Mrs. Grace E. Jones Stewart individually an offer of $35,000 in cash, to be paid by said estate and said Mrs. Stewart in full and final settlement of the stock liability of said estate and said Mrs. Grace E. Jones Stewart. That as a matter of expediency and in order to bring about an amicable, speedy, and profitable settlement and compromise of the liability of said estate and of said Mrs. Grace E. Jones Stewart, petitioner is of the opinion that said offer should be accepted. Petitioner believes that it is to the best interest of his trust that the sum of $35,000 so offered to be paid in cash in settlement of said liability aforesaid be accepted.

That the Comptroller of the Currency has, by letter, approved said settlement as a matter of expediency and in order to expedite the liquidation of the affairs of said bank, and has by said letter authorized petitioner to accept the sum of $35,000 in cash in settlement of said liability aforesaid.

That among the stockholders of the First National Bank of Gulfport was the estate of Jane A. Littlepage, of which estate Louise A. Littlepage was administratrix. That the said estate is insolvent. That it formerly owned shares of stock in said bank of the par value of $600. That said Louise A. Littlepage has been able to borrow the sum of $335.79, which she has offered to petitioner in full settlement of the stock liability of the estate of Jane A. Littlepage. That petitioner believes it to the best interest of his trust to accept the same, and has been authorized by the Comptroller of the Currency, by letter dated May 5, 1933, to accept said sum in full settlement of said stock liability.

Wherefore petitioner prays for an order authorizing him to accept the sum of $126,500 in full settlement and satisfaction of the stock liability of the above-mentioned stockholders of the First National Bank of Gulfport, other than the estate of Mrs. Joseph T. Jones in the sum of $20,000 and Mrs. Grace E. Jones Stewart in the sum of $21,000, and estate of Jane A. Littlepage in the sum of $600; and that he be authorized to accept the sum of $35,000 in full settlement and satisfaction of the stock liability of the estate of Mrs. Joseph T. Jones and of Mrs. Grace E. Jones in the said First National Bank of Gulfport, and the sum of $335.79 in full settlement of the stock liability of the estate of Jane A. Littlepage, as aforesaid; and that he be further authorized to execute and deliver full releases to said stockholders covering said liability. That the suits pending, as aforesaid, be dismissed with prejudice at the cost of the plaintiff in said suits, the petitioner herein.

And as in duty bound, etc.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Southern District of Mississippi, ss:

I, B. L. Todd, Jr., clerk of the United States District Court in and for the Southern District of Mississippi, do hereby certify that the annexed and foregoing is a true and full copy of the original petition, Equity Docket No. 413, with the order thereon dated May 31, 1933, now remaining among the records of the said court in my office in Biloxi, Miss.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto subscribed by name and affixed the seal of the aforesaid court at Biloxi, Miss., this 14th day of February, A. D. 1936.

B. L. TODD, Jr., Clerk.

By GEO. P. MONEY, Deputy Clerk.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I now come to a statement about the president of another bank, Mr. Tonsmeire, of Biloxi, he being a high-salaried official. Notwithstanding the fact he is very wealthy and the president of a bank in an adjoining city, in the general dissipation of the assets of the bank of Gulfport he was released as there disclosed. I ask that this order may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the order was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI,
County of Harrison:

Know all men by these presents, that whereas in cause no. 9234, styled First National Bank in Gulfport v. D. R. McInnis, W. A. McInnis, E. C. Tonsmeire, L. V. Pringle, D. J. Gay, and N. M. McInnis, the said First National Bank in Gulfport did, on October 17, 1931, obtain judgment in said circuit court against the defendants named, in the sum of $8,719.39 and costs, which judgment was on November 21, 1931, duly enrolled in judgment roll no. 6, page 286, on file in the office of the circuit clerk of Harrison County, Miss.; and

Whereas said judgment and costs remain unsatisfied and is now held and owned by A. F. Rawlings, receiver of the First National Bank in Gulfport; and

Whereas said E. C. Tonsmeire has paid to said undersigned receiver the sum of $1,250 for a release of said judgment insofar as he is concerned, but not as a release in any way of the liability of the other judgment debtors: Now, therefore

In consideration of said sum of $1,250 cash in hand paid, receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, the undersigned receiver, owner of said judgment, hereby covenants and agrees with the said E. C. Tonsmeire that he will cause no execution to issue against said E. C. Tonsmeire on account of said judgment, the said liability of the said E. C. Tonsmeire having been compromised and satisfied for the above-mentioned sum.

This covenant, however, is in no manner to inure to the benefit of the other defendants in said suit, against whom judgment was rendered.

This covenant is executed pursuant to authority of the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States and the District Court of the United States for the Southern Division of the Southern District of Mississippi.

Witness my signature this 25th day of May 1935.

A. F. RAWLINGS,

Receiver of First National Bank in Gulfport.

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI,
County of Harrison:

Personally appeared before the undersigned authority in and for said county and State A. F. Rawlings, receiver of the First National Bank in Gulfport, who acknowledged that he signed and delivered the foregoing instrument on the day of the date thereof.

Given under my hand and seal of office this 25th day of May 1935.

MISSISSIPPI ABSTRACT TITLE & GUARANTY CO.,

By H. R. BARBER, Secretary.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I have others here. I could go on and fill the RECORD with them, but I think this is enough to convince any inquiring mind, any open mind, that there ought to be an investigation made of the affairs of this bank. I do not want the Senate to go into a general investigation of the liquidation of banks throughout the country, but here is a case that was an issue in a political campaign, where 6,000 depositors were wrecked financially as a result of the failure of this great bank, a bank with assets of over $4,000,000; a bank whose depositors became so thoroughly outraged because of the way in which the receiver and the judge approving his action had handled the affairs that they had a depositors' committee appointed; and the committee were absolutely left out of consideration. They were given no chance to make a showing; they were given no consideration in the way this property was handled that stood out in the community, and everybody could see it, and knew it was going. It belonged to the bank. It belonged to these 6,000 depositors, many of them widows, laboring people, young men who had worked for years to get money to go to college. They were wiped out. Their deposits were taken away from them. Yet, in the face of all this, the committee, as I am informed, were denied any opportunity to enter a proper protest.

I merely asked that this depositors' committee, that had in interest the welfare of these 6,000 depositors, be permitted to come here and tell what they knew about it. I am only giving you the information which has been given to me. I am not testifying. I am not a witness. I am making an allegation; and I am asking that you Senators, if you care anything about fair play and want this thing aired and want to know the facts, have this matter investigated.

MR. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a point of no quorum?

MR. BILBO. Yes.

MR. CONNALLY. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	King	Pittman
Ashurst	Costigan	La Follette	Pope
Austin	Davis	Lewis	Radcliffe
Bachman	Dickinson	Logan	Reynolds
Bailey	Donahey	Loneragan	Robinson
Barbour	Duffy	Long	Russell
Barkley	Fletcher	McGill	Schwellenbach
Benson	Frazier	McKellar	Sheppard
Bilbo	George	McNary	Shipstead
Black	Gibson	Maloney	Smith
Brown	Glass	Metcalf	Stelwer
Bulkley	Gore	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Guffey	Moore	Thomas, Utah
